SUBLAPSA'RIAN. } adj. [sub and lapsus, Lat.] Done

SUBLA'PSARY. } after the fall of man.

The decree of reprobation, according to the sublapsarian doctrine, being nothing else but a mere preterition, or non-election of some persons whom God left as he found, involved in the guilt of the first Adam's transgression, without any actual personal sin of their own, when he withdrew some others as guilty as they. Hammond.

SUBLAPSA'RIAN.* n. s. One who maintains the sublapsarian doctrine.

The sublapsarians say, that Adam having sinned freely, and his sin being imputed to all his posterity, God did consider mankind, thus lost, with an eye of pity; and having designed to rescue a great number out of this lost state, he decreed to send his Son to die for them, to accept of his death on their account, and to give them such assistances as should be effectual both to convert them to him, and to make them persevere to the end; but for the rest, he framed no positive act about them, only he left them in that lapsed state, without intending that they should have the benefit of Christ's death, or of efficacious and persevering assistances.

SUBLA'TION.† n. s. [sublatio, Lat.] The act of taking away.

He could not be forsaken by a sublation of union.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 188.

SUBLEVA'TION. n. s. [sublevo, Lat.] The act of raising on high.

SUBLI'MABLE. adj. [from sublime.] Possible to be sublimed.

SUBLI'MABLENESS. n. s. [from sublimable.] Quality of admitting sublimation.

He obtained another concrete as to taste and smell, and easy sublimableness, as common salt armoniack. Boyle.

TO SUBLIMATE. v. a. [from sublime.]

1. To raise by the force of chemical fire.

2. To exalt; to heighten; to elevate.

And as his actions rose, so raise they still their vein
In words, whose weight best suit a sublimated strain. Drayton.

Not only the gross and illiterate souls, but the most aerial and sublimated, are rather the more proper fuel for an immaterial fire. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

The precepts of Christianity are so excellent and refined, and so apt to cleanse and sublimate the more gross and corrupt, as shews flesh and blood never revealed it.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

SUBLIMATE. n. s. [from sublime.]

1. Any thing raised by fire in the retort.

Enquire the manner of subliming, and what metals endure subliming, and what body the sublimate makes. Bacon.

2. Quicksilver raised in the retort.

SUBLIMATE. adj. Raised by fire in the vessel.

The particles of mercury uniting with the acid particles of spirit of salt compose mercury sublimate, and with the particles of sulphur, cinnaber. Newton, Opt.

SUBLIMATION. n. s. [sublimation, Fr. from sublimare.]

1. A chemical operation which raises bodies in the vessel by the force of fire.

Sublimation differs very little from distillation, excepting that in distillation only the fluid parts of bodies are raised, but in this the solid and dry; and that the matter to be distilled may be either solid or fluid, but sublimation is only concerned about solid substances. There is also another difference, namely, that rarefaction, which is of very great use in distillation, has hardly any room in sublimation; for the substances which are to be sublimed being solid, are incapable of rarefaction; and so it is only impulse that can raise them. Quincy.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the settlement of liquors, by heat, by precipitation or sublimation; that is, a calling of the several parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Since oil of sulphur per campanam is of the same nature with oil of vitriol, may it not be inferred that sulphur is a mixture of volatile and fixed parts so strongly cohering by attraction, as to ascend together by sublimation? Newton, Opt.

2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving.

She turns
Bodies to spirits, by sublimation strange. Davies.
Shall he pretend to religious attainments, who is defective and short in moral, which are but the rudiments and first draught of religion, as religion is the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of morality? South.

SUBLIME. adj. [sublimis, Latin.]

1. High in place; exalted aloft.

They summ'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton, P. L.
Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd,
And dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward. Dryden.

2. High in excellence; exalted by nature.

My earthly strained to the high
In that celestial colloquy sublime. Milton, P. L.
Can it be, that souls sublime
Return to visit our terrestrial clime;
And that the generous mind, releas'd by death,
Can covet lazy limbs? Dryden.

3. High in style or sentiment; lofty; grand.

Easy in stile thy work, in sense sublime. Prior.

4. Elevated by joy.

All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heaven fall'n, in station stood of just array,
Sublime with expectation. Milton, P. L.
Their hearts were jocund and sublime,
Drunk with idolatry, drunk with wine. Milton, S. A.

5. Lofty of mien; elevated in manner.

He was sublime, and almost tumorous in his looks and gestures. Wotton.
His fair large front and eye sublime declar'd

SUBLIME. n. s. The grand or lofty style. The sublime is a Gallicism, but now naturalized.

Longinus strengthens all his laws,
And is himself the great sublime he draws. Pope.
The sublime rises from the nobleness of thoughts, the magnificence of the words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase; the perfect sublime arises from all three together. Addison.

To SUBLIME. v. a. [sublimer, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. To raise by a chemical fire.

Study our manuscripts, those myriads
Of letters, which have past 'twixt thee and me, Thence write our annals, and in them lessons be
To all, whom love's subliming fire invades. Donne.

2. To raise on high.

Although thy trunk be neither large nor strong,
Nor can thy head, not help'd, itself sublime,
Yet, like a serpent, a tall tree can climb. Denham.

3. To exalt; to heighten; to improve.

Flowers, and then fruit,
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublim'd
To vital spirits aspire. Milton, P. L.

The fancies of most are moved by the inward springs of the corporeal machine, which even in the most sublimed intellectuals is dangerously influential. Glanville.

Art being strengthened by the knowledge of things, may pass into nature by slow degrees, and so be sublimed into a pure genius, which is capable of distinguishing betwixt the beauties of nature and that which is low in her. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that sun but on a part to shine;
Which not alone the southern wit sublimes,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes. Pope.

To SUBLIME. v. n. To rise in the chemical vessel by the force of fire.

The particles of sal ammoniac in sublimation carry up the particles of antimony, which will not sublime alone. Newton, Opt.

This salt is fixed in a gentle fire, and sublimes in a great one. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

SUBLIMELY. adv. [from sublime.] Loftily; grandly.

In English lays, and all sublimely great,
Thy Homer charms with all his ancient heat. Parnell.
Fustian's so sublimely bad;
It is not poetry, but prose run mad. Pope.

SUBLIMENESS. † n. s. [sublimitas, Lat.] The same as sublimity.

Mr. Nairn was then the admired preacher of that country, remarkable for accuracy of style, as well as strength of reasoning and sublimeness of thought. Burnet, Hist. of his own Time.

SUBLIMIFICATION.* n. s. [sublimis and facio, Latin.] The act of making sublime.

In general, the poet has great advantages over the painter, in the process of sublimification, if the term may be allowed. Gilpin.

SUBLIMITY. n. s. [from sublime; sublimité, Fr. sublimitas, Lat.]

1. Height of place; local elevation.

2. Height of nature; excellence.

As religion looketh upon him who in majesty and power is infinite, as we ought we account not of it, unless we esteem it even according to that very height of excellency which our hearts conceive, when divine sublimity itself is rightly considered. Hooker.

In respect of God's incomprehensible sublimity and purity, this is also true, that God is neither a mind nor a spirit like other spirits, nor a light such as can be discerned. Raleigh.

3. Loftiness of style or sentiment.

Milton's distinguishing excellence lies in the sublimity of his thoughts, in the greatness of which he triumphs over all the poets, modern and ancient, Homer only excepted. Addison.

SUBLINGUAL. adj. [sublingual, French; sub and lingua, Lat.] Placed under the tongue.

Those subliming humours should be intercepted, before they mount to the head, by sublingual pills. Harvey.

SUBLUNAR. } adj. [sublunare, Fr. sub and luna,
SUBLUNARY. } Lat.] Situated beneath the moon; earthly; terrestrial; of this world.

Dull sublunary lovers! love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.
Night measur'd, with her shadowy cone,
Half way up hill this vast sublunar vault. Milton, P. L.
Through seas of knowledge we our course advance,
Discov'ring still new worlds of ignorance;

And these discov'ries make us all confess
That sublunary science is but guess.

Denham.

The celestial bodies above the moon being not subject to chance, remained in perpetual order, while all things sublunary are subject to change.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Ovid had warn'd her to beware
Of strolling gods, whose usual trade is,
Under pretence of taking air,
To pick up sublunary ladies.

Swift.

The fair philosopher to Rowley flies,
Where in a box the whole creation lies;
She sees the planets in their turns advance;
And scorns, Poitier, this sublunary dance.

Young.

SUBLUNARY.* n. s. Any worldly thing.

Whatsoever temporal felicity we apprehend, we cull out the pleasures, and overprize them: — And that these sublunaries have their greatest freshness placed only in hope, it is a conviction undeniable, [as] that, upon enjoyment, all our joys do vanish.

Feltham, Res. ii. 66.

SUBMARINE. adj. [sub and mare.] Lying or acting under the sea.

This contrivance may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds and tides for motion, and the sight of the heavens for direction.

Wilkins.

Not only the herbaceous and woody submarine plants, but also the lithophyta, affect this manner of growing, as I observed in corals.

Ray on the Creation.

To SUBMERGE.† v. a. [submerger, Fr. submergo, Lat.] To drown; to put under water.

So half my Egypt were submerg'd and made
A cistern for scald snakes.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Lost and submerg'd in the inundation.

Beaum. and Fl. Martial Maid.

To SUBMERGE.* v. n. To be under water; to lie under water: spoken of swallows.

Some say, swallows submerge in ponds.

Gent. Mag. lxxviii. 670.

To SUBMERSE.* v. a. [submersus, Lat.] To put under water.

Scott.

SUBMERSION.† n. s. [submersion, Fr. from submersus, Latin.]

1. The act of drowning; state of being drowned.

The great Atlantick island is mentioned in Plato's Timæus, almost contiguous to the western parts of Spain and Africa, yet wholly swallowed up by that ocean; which, if true, might afford a passage from Africa to America by land before that submersion.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. State of lying under water.

The submersion of swallows appears by no means ascertained.

Transl. of Buffon's Hist. of Birds.

To SUBMINISTER. } v. a. [subministro, Lat.]

To SUBMINISTRATE. } To supply; to afford.

A word not much in use.

Some things have been discovered, not only by the industry of mankind, but even the inferior animals have subministed unto man the invention of many things, natural, artificial, and medicinal.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Nothing subministrates apter matter to be converted into pestilent seminaries, than steams of nasty folks.

Harvey.

To SUBMINISTER. v. n. To subserve; to be useful to.

Passions, as fire and water, are good servants, but bad masters, and subminster to the best and worst purposes.

L'Estrange.

SUBMINISTRANT,* adj. [subministrans, Lat.] Subservient; serving in subordination.

For that which is most principal, and final, to be left undone for the attending of that which is subservient, and subministrant, seemeth to be against proportion of reason.

Bacon, Consid. on the Ch. of England.

SUBMINISTRATION.* n. s. [from subministrate.] Act of supplying.

Which [league] the electors have broken — by *subministrat*ion of commodities to his army.

Wotton, Rem. p. 529.

SUBMISS.† adj. [from submissus, Lat.]

1. Humble; submissive; obsequious.

King James, mollified by the bishop's submiss and eloquent letters, wrote back, that though he were in part moved by his letters, yet he should not be fully satisfied except he spake with him.

Nearer his presence, Adam, though not aw'd,
Yet with submiss approach, and reverence meek,
As to a superior nature, bowed low.

Milton, P. L.

Rejoicing, but with awe,

In adoration at his feet I fell

Submiss: he rear'd me.

2. Low; not loud; gentle.

As age enfeebleth a man, the grindings are weaker, and the voices of them more submiss.

Smith on Old Age, p. 118.

SUBMISSION. n. s. [soumission, Fr. from submissus, Latin.]

1. Delivery of himself to the power of another.

Submission, Dauphin! 'tis a mere French word,
We English warriors wot not what it means.

Shakespeare.

2. Acknowledgement of inferiority or dependance; humble or suppliant behaviour.

In all submission and humility,
York doth present himself unto your highness.

Shakespeare.

Great prince, by that submission you'll gain more

Than e'er your haughty courage won before.

Halifax.

3. Acknowledgement of a fault; confession of error.

Be not as extreme in submission as in offence.

Shakespeare.

4. Obsequiousness; resignation; obedience.

No duty in religion is more justly required by God Almighty, than a perfect submission to his will in all things.

Temple.

SUBMISSIVE. adj. [submissus, Lat.] Humble; testifying submission or inferiority.

On what submissive message art thou sent?

Shakespeare.

Her at his feet submissive in distress

He thus with peaceful words uprais'd.

Milton, P. L.

Sudden from the golden throne,

With a submissive step I hasted down;

The glowing garland from my hair I took,

Love in my heart, obedience in my look.

Prior.

SUBMISSIVELY. adv. [from submissive.] Humbly; with confession of inferiority.

The goddess,
Soft in her tone, submissively replies.

Dryden, Æn.

But speech ev'n there submissively withdraws

From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause;

Then pompous silence reigns, and stills the noisy laws.

Pope.

SUBMISSIVENESS. n. s. [from submissive.] Humility; confession of fault, or inferiority.

If thou sin in wine and wantonness,

Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;

Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness,

But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story:

He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,

With his poor clod of earth, the spacious sky.

Herbert.

SUBMISSLY. adv. [from submiss.] Humbly; with submission.

Humility consists, not in wearing mean cloaths, and going softly and submissly, but in mean opinion of thyself.

Bp. Taylor.

SUBMISSNESS.* n. s. [from submiss.] Humility; lowliness of mind; resignation; obedience.

I honour your names and persons, and with all submissness prostrate myself to your censure and service.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 137.

Whensoever she named God, though it were in common discourse, she would, for the most part, add the title of Maker; saying, God my Maker; and compose both her eyes and countenance to a submissness and reverence.

Rawley, Transl. of Bacon on Qu. Elizabeth, (1657.)

To SUBMIT. v. a. [soumettre, Fr. submitto, Lat.]

1. To let down; to sink.

Sometimes the hill submits itself a while
In small descents, which do its height beguile,
And sometimes mounts, but so as billows play,
Whose rise not hinders, but makes short our way. Dryden.

Neptune stood,
With all his hosts of waters at command,
Beneath them to submit the officious flood,
And with his trident shov'd them off the sand. Dryden.

2. To subject; to resign without resistance to authority.

Return to thy mistress, and submit thyself under her hands.
Gen. xvi. 9.

Christian people submit themselves to conformable observance of the lawful and religious constitutions of their spiritual rulers. White.

Will ye submit your neck, and choose to bend
The supple knee? Milton, P. L.

3. To leave to discretion; to refer to judgement.

Whether the condition of the clergy be able to bear a heavy burden, is submitted to the house. Swift.

To SUBMIT. v. n. To be subject; to acquiesce in the authority of another; to yield.

To thy husband's will Thine shall submit: he over thee shall rule. Milton, P. L.
Our religion requires from us, not only to forego pleasure, but to submit to pain, disgrace, and even death. Rogers.

SUBMITTER. n. s. [from submit.] One who submits.

Sick but confident submitters of themselves to this empirick's cast of the dye. Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 118.

SUBMULTIPLE. n. s. A submultiple number or quantity is that which is contained in another number, a certain number of times exactly: thus 3 is submultiple of 21, as being contained in it seven times exactly. Harris.

SUBNASCENT. adj. [subnascens, Lat.] Growing beneath something else. Mason.

There is nothing more prejudicial to subnascent young trees, than, when newly trimmed and pruned, to have their wound poisoned with continual dripping. Evelyn, B. 1. ch. 20. § 9.

SUBOBSCURELY. adv. [sub and obscure.] Somewhat darkly.

The booke of Nature, where, though subobscurely and in shadows, thou [God] hast expressed thine own image.

Donne, Devot. p. 218.

SUBOCTAVE. } adj. [sub and octavus, Lat. and oc-
SUBOCTUPLE. } tuple.] Containing one part of eight.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness of the weight, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion, so two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple, four a suboctuple. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

Had they erected the cube of a foot for their principal concave, and geometrically taken its suboctave, the congius, from the cube of half a foot, they would have divided the congius into eight parts, each of which would have been regularly the cube of a quarter foot, their well-known palm: this is the course taken for our gallon, which has the pint for its suboctave. Arbuthnot on Coins.

SUBORDINACY. } n. s. [from subordinate. Subordi- SUBORDINANCY. } nacy is the proper and analogical word.]

1. The state of being subject.

Pursuing the imagination through all its extravagancies, is no improper method of correcting, and bringing it to act in subordinacy to reason. Spectator.

2. Series of subordination.

The subordinacy of the government changing hands so often, makes an unsteadiness in the pursuit of the publick interests.

Temple.

SUBORDINATE. adj. [sub and ordinatus, Lat.]

1. Inferiour in order, in nature, in dignity or power.

It was subordinate, not enslaved to the understanding; not as a servant to a master, but as a queen to her king, who acknowledges a subjection, yet retains a majesty. South.

Whether dark presages of the night proceed from any latent power of the soul, during her abstraction, or from any operation of subordinate spirits, has been a dispute. Addison.

2. Descending in a regular series.

The two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, rather courtiers than martial men, yet assisted with subordinate commanders of great experience. Bacon.

These carry such plain characters of disagreement or affinity, that the several kinds and subordinate species of each are easily distinguished. Woodward.

SUBORDINATE. n. s.

1. An inferiour person.

The governour intreating to take down
That glorious stile, lest he the Hebrew crown
Should vindicate in death; and so deny
That princes by subordinates should die.

Sandys, Christ's Passion, (1640.) p. 46.

2. One of a descent in a regular series.

To SUBORDINATE. † v. a. [sub and ordino, Lat.] To range under another; to make subordinate. Not in use, but proper and elegant, Dr. Johnson observes, but cites only the example from Wotton. Few words can boast better authority.

Works [are] not only not excluded, but commanded, as being in their place and in their kind necessary, and therefore subordinated unto Christ by Christ himself.

Hooker, Disc. on Justification, § 30.

As I have subordinated picture and sculpture to architecture as their mistress, so there are certain inferior arts likewise subordinate to them. Wotton on Architecture.

I hate and highly scorn that kestrel brood
Of bastard scholars, that subordinate
The precious choice induements of the mind
To wealth or worldly good. More, Philos. Poems, p. 308.

The stars fight in their courses under his banner, and subordinate their powers to the dictates of his will.

SUBORDINATELY. adv. [from subordinate.] In a series regularly descending.

It being the highest step of ill, to which all others subordinately tend, one would think it could be capable of no improvement. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

SUBORDINATION. n. s. [subordination, Fr. from subordinate.]

1. The state of being inferiour to another.

Nor can a council national decide,
But with subordination to her guide. Dryden.

2. A series regularly descending.

The natural creatures having a local subordination, the rational having a political, and sometimes a sacred. Holyday.

3. Place of rank.

If we would suppose a ministry, where every single person was of distinguished piety, and all great officers of state and law diligent in chusing persons, who in their several subordinations would be obliged to follow the examples of their superiors, the empire of irreligion would be soon destroyed. Swift.

To SUBORN. v. a. [suborner, Fr. suborno, Lat.]

1. To procure privately; to procure by secret collusion.

His judges were the self-same men by whom his accusers were suborned. Hooker.

Fond wretch! thou know'st not what thou speak'st,
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour
In hateful practice. Shakspeare.

Reason may meet
Some specious object, by the foe suborn'd;
And fall into deception.

Milton.

His artful bosom heaves dissembl'd sighs;
And tears suborn'd fall dropping from his eyes. Prior.
2. To procure by indirect means.

Behold
Those who by lingering sickness lose their breath,
And those who by despair suborn their death. Dryden.

SUBORNA'TION. n. s. [subornation, Fr. from suborn.] The crime of procuring any to do a bad action.

Thomas earl of Desmond was, through false subornation of the queen of Edward IV. brought to his death at Tredagh most unjustly. Spenser on Ireland.

You set the crown
Upon the head of this forgetful man,
And for his sake wear the detested blot
Of murd'rous subornation. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The fear of punishment in this life will preserve men from few vices, since some of the blackest often prove the surest steps to favour; such as ingratitude, hypocrisy, treachery, and subornation. Swift.

SUBORNER. † n. s. [suborneur, Fr. from suborn.] One that procures a bad action to be done.

You are to enquire of wilful and corrupt perjury; — as well of the actors, as of the procurers and suborners of it. Bacon, Charge at the Seas. of the Verge.

SUBPŒNA. † n. s. [sub and pœna, Lat.] A writ commanding attendance in a court under a penalty.

Your meetings, call'd the ball; to which appear,
As to the court of pleasure, all your gallants
And ladies, thither bound by a subpœna
Of Venus' and small Cupid's high displeasure. Shirley, Com. of Lad. of Pleasure.

To SUBPŒNA.* v. a. [from the noun.] To serve with a subpœna.

I was lately subpœnæd by a card to a general assembly. Ld. Chesterfield.

Every body knows what a subpœna is, if he has not been subpœnæd. Pegge, Anecd. Engl. Lang.

SUBPRIOR.* n. s. [sub and prior.] The vicegerent of a prior.

The bishop ordered that the prior for the time being should pay £100 a year for seven years ensuing; and the subprior and convent 100 marks, in like manner, for this service. Lowth, Life of Wykeham, § 6.

SUBQUA'DRUPLE. adj. [sub and quadruple.] Containing one part of four.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness the weight hath in itself, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, so two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

SUBQUINTUPLE. adj. [sub and quintuple.] Containing one part of five.

If unto the lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subquintuple proportion. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

SUBRECTOR. n. s. [sub and rector.] The rector's vicegerent.

He was chosen subrector of the college. Walton.

SUBREPTION. † n. s. [subreption, Fr. subreptus, Lat.] The act of obtaining a favour by surprise or unfair representation. Dict.

Lest there should be any subreption in this sacred business, it is ordered, that these ordinations should be no other than solemn both in respect of time and place. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 344.

SUBREPTITIOUS. † adj. [surreptice, Fr. surreptitius, Latin.] Falsely crept in; fraudulently foisted; fraudulently obtained. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

SUBREPTITIOUSLY.* adv. [from subreptitious.] By falsehood; by stealth. Sherwood.

SUBREPTIVE.* adj. [subreptif, French.] Subreptitious. Not in use. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

To SUBROGATE. † v. a. [subrogo, Lat.] To put in the place of another. This is a word well authorized, of which, however, Dr. Johnson has given no example.

A sumptuary law against excess of apparel was repealed; and a new one, a little more decent, subrogated. Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 12.

The Christian day is to be subrogated into the place of the Jews' day. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. 4. § 8.

The lives of beasts were not in value answerable, nor could fitly be subrogated instead of men's souls which had offended, and thence were liable to death. Barrow, vol. ii. S. 22.

To SUBSCRIBE. v. a. [souscrire, Fr. subscribo, Latin.]

1. To give consent to, by underwriting the name.

They united by subscribing a covenant, which they pretended to be no other than had been subscribed in the reign of King James, and that his Majesty himself had subscribed it; by which imposition people of all degrees engaged themselves in it. Clarendon.

The reader sees the names of those persons by whom this letter is subscribed. Addison.

2. To attest by writing the name.

Their particular testimony ought to be better credited, than some other subscribed with an hundred hands. Whitgift.

3. To submit. Not used.

The king gone to-night! subscrib'd his pow'r!
Confin'd to exhibition! all is gone. Shakspeare.

To SUBSCRIBE. v. n.

1. To give consent.

Osius, with whose hand the Nicene creed was set down, and framed for the whole Christian world to subscribe unto, so far yielded in the end, as even with the same hand to ratify the Arians' confession. Hooker.

Advise thee what is to be done,
And we will all subscribe to thy advice. Shakspeare.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou should'st have said, Go porter, turn the key,
All cruels else subscrib'd. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

So spake much humbled Eve; but fate
Subscrib'd not: nature first gave signs, impress'd On bird, beast, air. Milton, P. I.

2. To promise a stipulated sum for the promotion of any undertaking.

SUBSCRIBER. † n. s. [from scriptio, Lat.]

There is but one subscriber for the clergy of this diocese. Bennet, Ess. on the XXXIX Art. of Rel. p. 364.

2. One who contributes to any undertaking.

Let a pamphlet come out upon a demand in a proper juncture, every one of the party who can spare a shilling shall be a subscriber. Swift.

SUBSCRIPT.* n. s. [scriptum, Lat.] Any thing underwritten.

Be they postscripts or subscripts, your translators neither made them, nor recommended them, for Scripture. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 37.

SUBSCRIPTION. n. s. [from scriptio, Lat.]

1. Any thing underwritten.

The man asked, Are ye Christians? We answered we were; fearing the less because of the cross we had seen in the subscription. Bacon.

2. Consent or attestation given by underwriting the name.

3. The act or state of contributing to any undertaking.

The work he ply'd;
Stocks and subscriptions pour on ev'ry side. Pope.
South-sea subscriptions take who please,
Leave me but liberty. Pope.

4. Submission; obedience. Not in use.

I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;
I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children,
You owe me no subscription. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

SUBSE'CTION. n. s. [sub and sectio, Lat.] A subdivision of a larger section into a lesser; a section of a section.

Dict.

SUBSE'PTUPLE. adj. [sub and septuplus, Lat.] Containing one of seven parts.

If unto this lower pully there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subquintuple proportion; if a third, a subseptuple. Wilkins.

SUBSEQUENCE.† } n. s. [from subsequor, Lat.] The SUBSEQUENCY. } state of following; not precedence.

By this faculty we can take notice of the order of precedence and subsequence in which they are past. Grew.

If Aristotle confesses that the winds, waters, and other inanimate things follow the heavenly circuit, why should we question the heliotrope's subsequency to the course of the sun. Greenhill, Art of Embalm. p. 336.

SUBSEQUENT. adj. [subsequent, Fr. subsequens, Lat.] This word is improperly pronounced long in the second syllable by Shakspeare.] Following in train; not preceding.

In such indexes, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come, at large. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

The subsequent words come on before the precedent vanish. Bacon.

Why does each consenting sign
With prudent harmony combine
In turns to move, and subsequent appear
To gird the globe and regulate the year? Prior.

This article is introduced as subsequent to the treaty of Munster, made about 1648, when England was in the utmost confusion. Swift.

SUBSEQUENTLY. adv. [from subsequent.] Not so as to go before; so as to follow in train.

To men in governing most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends; but they are forced to comply subsequently, and to strike in with things as they fall out, by posthumious after-applications of them to their purposes. South.

TO SUBSERVE. v. a. [subservio, Lat.] To serve in subordination; to serve instrumentally.

Not made to rule,

But to subserve where wisdom bears command. Milton, S. A.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glanville.

The memory hath no special part of the brain devoted to its own service, but uses all those parts which subserve our sensations, as well as our thinking powers. Walsh.

SUBSERVIENCE. } n. s. [from subserve.] Instrumental SUBSERVIENCY. } fitness, use, or operation.

Wicked spirits may by their cunning, carry farther in a seeming confederacy or subserviency to the designs of a good angel. Dryden.

There is an immediate and agile subservience of the spirits to the empire of the soul. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

We cannot look upon the body, wherein appears so much fitness, use, and subserviency to infinite functions, any other-wise than as the effect of contrivance. Bentley.

There is a regular subordination and subserviency among all the parts to beneficial ends. Cheyne, Philos. Princip.

SUBSERVIENT. adj. [subserviens, Lat.] Subordinate; instrumentally useful.

Hammond had an incredible dexterity, scarce ever reading any thing which he did not make subservient in one kind or other. Fell.

Philosophers and common heathens believed one God, to whom all things are referred; but under this God they worshipped many inferior and subservient gods. Stillingfleet.

These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another, and the most of them serviceable to man. Ray.

While awake, we feel none of those motions continually made in the disposal of the corporeal principles subservient herein. Grew.

Sense is subservient unto fancy, fancy unto intellect. Grew.

We are not to consider the world as the body of God; he is an uniform being, void of organs, members or parts, and they are his creatures subordinate to him, and subservient to his will. Newton, Opt.

Most criticks, fond of some subservient art,
Still make the whole depend upon a part;
They talk of principles, but notions prize,
And all to one lov'd folly sacrifice. Pope.

SUBSEXTUPLE. adj. [sub and sextuplus, Lat.] Containing one part of six.

One of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness the weight hath, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, two of them a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

TO SUBSIDE. v. n. [subsido, Lat.] To sink; to tend downwards. It is commonly used of one part of a compound, sinking in the whole. Pope has used it rather improperly.

He shook the sacred honours of his head:
With terror trembled heaven's subsiding hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill. Dryden.

Now Jove suspend his golden scales in air,
Weighs the men's wit against the lady's hair;
The doubtful beam long nods from side to side:
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside. Pope.

SUBSIDENCE. } n. s. [from subside.] The act of sink-SUBSIDENCY. } ing; tendency downward.

This gradual subsidence of the abyss would take up a considerable time. Burnet, Theory.

This miscellany of bodies being determined to subsidence merely by their different specific gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time. Woodward.

By the alternate motion of those air-bladders, whose surfaces are by turns freed from mutual contact, and by a sudden subsidence meet again by the ingress and egress of the air, the liquor is still farther attenuated. Arbuthnot.

SUBSIDIARILY.* adv. [from subsidiary.] In an assisting way. Sherwood.

SUBSIDIARY.† adj. [subsidiare, Fr. subsidiarius, Lat. from subsidi.] Assistant; brought in aid.

Heavenly doctrine—ought to be chief ruler and principal head every where, not subsidiary and subsidiary.

Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613,) p. 175.

Bitter substances burn the blood, and are a sort of subsidiary gall. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

SUBSIDIARY.* n. s. An assistant.

Which deceitful consideration drew on Pelagius himself, that was first only for nature, at last to take in, one after another, five subsidiaries more. Hammond, Works, iv. 573.

TO SUBSIDIZE.* v. a. [from subsidy.] To furnish with a subsidy: a modern word.

SUBSIDY. n. s. [subside, Fr. subsidium, Lat.] Aid, commonly such as is given in money.

They advised the king to send speedy aids, and with much alacrity granted a great rate of subsidy. Bacon.

'Tis all the subsidy the present age can raise. Dryden.

It is a celebrated notion of a patriot, that a house of commons should never grant such subsides as give no pain to the people, lest the nation should acquiesce under a burden they did not feel. Addison.

TO SUBSIGN.† v. a. [subsigno, Lat. sousigner, Fr.] To sign under.

Neither have they seen any deed before the conquest, but subsigned with crosses and single names without surnames. Camden.

Writing the letter, he read it after to Sancho :—It goes very well, quoth Sancho ; subsign it, therefore, I pray you.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quiz. iii. 11.

SUBSIGNATION. * n. s. [subsignatio, Lat.] Attestation given by underwriting the name.

The epistle with subsignation of the scribe and notary.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. (1616,) p. 300.

This is as good as a subsignation of your hand-writing, that you wish her well, and are enamoured of her !

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quiz. iv. 4.

To SUBSIST. v. n. [subsisto, Fr. subsisto, Lat.]

1. To be ; to have existence.

2. To continue ; to retain the present state or condition.

Firm we subsist, but possible to swerve. Milton, P. L.

The very foundation was removed, and it was a moral impossibility that the republic could subsist any longer. Swift.

3. To have means of living ; to be maintained.

He shone so powerfully upon me, that like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate ; and gave me wherewithal to subsist in the long winter which succeeded. Dryden.

Let us remember those that want necessities, as we ourselves should have desired to be remembered, had it been our sad lot to subsist on other men's charity. Atterbury.

4. To inhere ; to have existence by means of something else.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the discernment is not so easy. South.

To SUBSIST. * v. a. To feed ; to maintain.

We descry millions of species subsisted on a green leaf, which your glasses represent only in crowds and swarms.

Addison, Tatler, No. 119.

SUBSISTENCE, or Subsistency. n. s. [subsistence, Fr. from subsist.]

1. Real being.

The flesh and the conjunction of the flesh with God began both at one instant, his making and taking to himself our flesh was but one act ; so that in Christ there is no personal subsistence but one, and that from everlasting. Hooker.

We know as little how the union is dissolved, that is the chain of these differing subsistencies that compound us, as how it first commenced. Glanville.

Not only the things had subsistence, but the very images were of some creatures existing. Stillingfleet.

2. Competence ; means of supporting life.

His viceroy could only propose to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plunder of his province. Addison.

3. Inherence in something else.

SUBSISTENT. adj. [subsistens, Lat.]

1. Having real being.

Such as deny spirits subsistent without bodies, will with difficulty affirm the separate existence of their own. Brown.

2. Inherent.

These qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something else. Bentley.

SUBSTANCE. n. s. [substance, Fr. substantia, Lat.]

1. Being ; something existing ; something of which we can say that it is.

Since then the soul works by herself alone, Springs not from sense nor humours well agreeing, Her nature is peculiar, and her own ; She is a substance, and a perfect being.

The strength of gods,

And this empyreal substance cannot fail.

Milton, P. L.

2. That which supports accidents.

What creatures there inhabit, of what mold, And substance ?

Milton, P. L.

Every being is considered as subsisting in and by itself, and then it is called a substance ; or it subsists in and by another, and then it is called a mode or manner of being. Watts.

3. The essential part.

It will serve our turn to comprehend the substance, without confining ourselves to scrupulous exactness in form. Digby.

This edition is the same in substance with the Latin. Burnet.

They are the best epitomes, and let you see with one cast of the eye the substance of a hundred pages. Addison.

4. Something real, not imaginary ; something solid, not empty.

Shadows to-night

Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard, Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers Arm'd in proof, and led by shallow Richmond.

Shakspeare.

He the future evil shall no less

In apprehension than in substance feel.

Heroick virtue did his actions guide,

And he the substance, not th' appearance chose :

To rescue one such friend he took more pride,

Than to destroy whole thousands of such foes.

Dryden.

God is no longer to be worshipped and believed in as a God foreshewing and assuring by types, but as a God who has performed the substance of what he promised. Nelson.

5. Body ; corporeal nature.

Between the parts of opaque and coloured bodies are many spaces, either empty or replenished with mediums of other densities ; as water between the tinging corpuscles wherewith any liquor is impregnated, air between the aqueous globules that constitute clouds or mists, and for the most part spaces void of both air and water ; but yet perhaps not wholly void of all substance between the parts of hard bodies. Newton.

The qualities of plants are more various than those of animal substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

There may be a great and constant cough, with an extraordinary discharge of flegmatick matter, while, notwithstanding, the substance of the lungs remains sound. Blackmore.

6. Wealth ; means of life.

He hath eaten me out of house and home, and hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his, but I will have some of it out again. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

We are destroying many thousand lives, and exhausting our substance, but not for our own interest. Swift.

SUBSTANTIAL. adj. [substantielle, Fr. from substance.]

1. Real ; actually existing.

If this atheist would have his chance to be a real and substantial agent, he is more stupid than the vulgar. Bentley.

2. True ; solid ; real ; not merely seeming.

O blessed ! blessed night ! I am afraid,

Being in night, all this is but a dream ;

Too flattering sweet to be substantial.

Shakspeare.

To give thee being, I lent

Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,

Substantial life.

Milton, P. L.

If happiness be a substantial good,

Not fram'd of accidents, nor subject to them,

I err'd to seek it in a blind revenge.

Denham.

Time, as a river, hath brought down to us what is more light and superficial, while things more solid and substantial have been immersed. Glanville.

The difference betwixt the empty vanity of ostentation, and the substantial ornaments of virtue. L'Estrange.

Observations are the only sure grounds whereon to build a lasting and substantial philosophy. Woodward.

A solid and substantial greatness of soul looks down with neglect on the censures and applauses of the multitude.

Addison.

This useful, charitable, humble employment of yourselves, is what I recommend to you with greatest earnestness, as being a substantial part of a wise and pious life. Law.

3. Corporeal ; material.

Now shine these planets with substantial rays ?

Does innate lustre gild their measur'd days ?

Prior.

The sun appears flat like a plate of silver, the moon as big as the sun, and the rainbow a large substantial arch in the sky, all which are gross falshoods.

Watts.

4. Strong ; stout ; bulky.

Substantial doors,

Cross-barr'd and bolted fast, fear no assault.

Milton, P. L.

5. Responsible ; moderately wealthy ; possessed of substance.

Trials of crimes and titles of right shall be made by verdict of a jury, chosen out of the honest and most substantial freeholders. Spenser on Ireland.

The merchants and substantial citizens cannot make up more than a hundred thousand families. Addison on the War.

SUBSTA'NTIALS. n. s. [without singular.] Essential parts.

Although a custom introduced against the substantials of an appeal be not valid, as that it should not be appealed to a superior, but to an inferior judge, yet a custom may be introduced against the accidentals of an appeal. Ayliffe, Parergon.

SUBSTANTIA'LITY. n. s. [from substantial.]

1. The state of real existence.

2. Corporeity; materiality.

Body cannot act on any thing but by motion; motion cannot be received but by quantity and matter: the soul is a stranger to such gross substantiality, and owns nothing of these. Glanville, Scepais.

SUBSTA'NTIALLY. adv. [from substantial.]

1. In manner of a substance; with reality of existence. In him his father shone — substantially express'd. Milton, P. L.

2. Strongly; solidly.

Having so substantially provided for the North, they promised themselves they should end the war that summer. Clarendon.

SUBSTA'NTIALNESS. n. s. [from substantial.]

1. The state of being substantial.

2. Firmness; strength; power of holding or lasting.

When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, fulness with fineness, how can the language which consisteth of these sound other than most full of sweetness? Camden, Remains.

In degree of substantialness next above the doricque, sustaining the third, and adorning the second story. Wotton on Architecture.

To SUBSTA'NTIATE. v. a. [from substance.] To make to exist.

The accidental of any act is said to be whatever advenes to the act itself already substantiated. Ayliffe, Parergon.

SUBSTANTIVE. † n. s. [substantif, Fr. substantivum, Lat.] A noun; the name of a thing, of whatever we conceive in any way to subsist, or of which we have any notion. Lowth.

Claudian perpetually closes his sense at the end of a verse, commonly called golden, or two substantives and two adjectives with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.

SUBSTANTIVE. adj. [substantivus, Lat.]

1. Solid; depending only on itself. Not in use.

He considered how sufficient and substantive this land was to maintain itself, without any aid of the foreigner. Bacon.

2. Betokening existence.

One is obliged to join many particulars in one proposition, because the repetition of the substantive verb would be tedious. Arbuthnot.

SUBSTANTIVELY. adv. [from substantive.] As a substantive.

To SUBSTITUTE. v. a. [substituer, Fr. substitutus, from sub and statuo, Lat.] To put in the place of another.

In the original designs of speaking, a man can substitute none for them that can equally conduce to his honour. Gov. of the Tongue.

If a swarthy tongue

Is underneath his humid palate hung,

Reject him then, and substitute another. Dryden.

Some few verses are inserted or substituted in the room of others. Congreve.

SUBSTITUTE. n. s. [substitut, Fr. from the verb.]

1. One placed by another to act with delegated power.

Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy? — To him and his substitutes. Shakspeare.

You've taken up,

Under the counterfeited zeal of God,

The subjects of his substitute, my father,

And here upswarm'd them. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Hast thou not made me here thy substitute,

And these inferior far beneath me set? Milton, P. L.

Providence delegates to the supreme magistrate the same power for the good of men, which that supreme magistrate transfers to those several substitutes who act under him. Addison.

2. It is used likewise for things; as, one medicine is a substitute for another.

SUBSTITUTION. n. s. [substitution, Fr. from substitute.]

The act of placing any person or thing in the room of another; the state of being placed in the room of another.

He did believe

He was the duke, from substitution,

And executing th' outward face of royalty,

With all prerogative. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Nor sal, sulphur, or mercury can be separated from any perfect metals; for every part, so separated, may easily be reduced into perfect metal without substitution of that which chymists imagine to be wanting. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

To SUBSTRA'CT. v. a. [subtraho, Lat. soustraire, French.]

1. To take away part from the whole. See To SUBTRACT.

Metals are wholly subterrany, whereas plants are part above earth, and part under.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The force

Of subterranean wind transports a hill

Torn from Pelorus, or the shatter'd side

Of thundering Ætna, whose combustible

And fuell'd entrails thence conceiving fire,

Sublim'd with mineral fury, aid the winds.

Alteration proceeded from the change made in the neighbouring subterranean parts by that great conflagration.

Boyle.

Tell by what paths, what subterranean ways,

Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys

The reflux rivers.

Blackmore.

Let my soft minutes glide obscurely on,
 Like subterraneous streams, unheard, unknown.

Norris.

This subterraneous passage was not at first designed so much for a highway as for a quarry.

Addison.

Rous'd within the subterranean world,
 The expanding earthquake unresisted shakes

The seate is good, and yet not stronge;—

The ayre subtle and fine, the people should be wittie

That dwell vnder this climate in so pure a region.

Tragicall Commedie of Damon and Pithias, sign. C. ii. b.

From his eyes the fleeting fair

Retir'd, like subtle smoke dissolv'd in air.

Dryden, Georg.

Deny Des Cartes his subtile matter,

You leave him neither fire nor water.

Prior.

Is not the heat conveyed through the vacuum by the vibrations of a much subtler medium than air, which, after the air was drawn out, remained in the vacuum?

Newton, Opt.

2. Nice; fine; delicate; not coarse.

But of the clock which in our breasts we bear,

The subtile motions we forget the while.

Davies.

Thou only know'st her nature, and her pow'rs;

Her subtile form thou only can'st define.

Davies.

I do distinguish plain

Each subtile line of her immortal face.

Davies.

3. Piercing; acute.

Pass we the slow disease and subtile pain,

Which our weak frame is destin'd to sustain;

The cruel stone, the cold catarrh.

Prior.

4. Cunning; artful; sly; subdolous. In this sense it is now commonly written subtle. Milton seems to have both. [See SUBTLE.]

Arrius, a priest in the church of Alexandria, a subtile witted and a marvellous fair spoken man, was discontented that one should be placed before him in honour, whose superior he thought himself in desert, because through envy and stomach prone unto contradiction.

Hooker.

Think you this York

Was not incensed by his subtile mother,

To taunt and scorn you?

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

O subtile love, a thousand wiles thou hast

By humble suit, by service, or by hire,

To win a maiden's hold.

Fairfax.

A woman, an harlot and subtile of heart.

Prov. vii. 10.

Nor thou his malice, and false guile, contemn:

Subtile he needs must be, who could seduce

Angels.

5. Deceitful.

Like a bowl upon a subtile ground,

I've tumbled past the throw.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

6. Refined; acute beyond necessity.

Things remote from use, obscure and subtile. Milton, P. L.

SUB'TILELY. adv. [from subtile.]

1. In a subtile manner; thinly; not densely.

2. Finely; not grossly.

The constitution of the air appeareth more subtily by worms in oak-apples than to the sense of man.

Bacon.

In these plaisters the stone should not be too subtily powdered; for it will better manifest its attraction in more sensible dimensions.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The opake bodies, if subtily divided, as metals dissolved in acid menstruums, become perfectly transparent.

Newton.

3. Artfully; cunningly.

By granting this, add the reputation of loving the truth sincerely to that of having been able to oppose it subtly.

Others have sought to ease themselves of affliction by disputing subtly against it, and pertinaciously maintaining that afflictions are no real evils. Boyle.
Tillotson, Serm.

SUBTILENESS. n. s. [from subtile.]

1. Fineness; rareness.
2. Cunning; artfulness.

SUBTILIZATION. n. s. [subtilization, Fr. from subtilize.]

The act of making thin.

By subtilization and rarefaction the oil contained in grapes, if distilled before it be fermented, becomes spirit of wine. Boyle.

SUBTILIZATION. n. s. [from subtilize.]

1. Subtilization is making any thing so volatile as to rise readily in steam or vapour. Quincy.

Fluids have their resistances proportional to their densities, so that no subtilization, division of parts, or refining can alter these resistances. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

2. Refinement; superfluous acuteness.

To SUBTILIZE. v. a. [subtilizer, Fr. from subtile.]

1. To make thin; to make less gross or coarser.

Chyle, being mixed with the choler and pancreatic juices, is further subtilized, and rendered so fluid and penetrant, that the thinner and finer part easily finds way in at the straight orifices of the lacteous veins. Ray on the Creation.

Body cannot be vital; for if it be, then is it so either as subtilized or organized, moved or endowed with life. Grew.

2. To refine; to spin into useless niceties.

The most obvious verity is subtilized into niceties, and spun into a thread indiscernible by common optics. Glanville.

To SUBTILIZE. v. n. To talk with too much refinement.

Qualities and moods some modern philosophers have subtilized on. Digby on Bodies.

SUBTILTY. n. s. [subtilité, Fr. from subtile.]

1. Thinness; fineness; exility of parts.

The subtilities of particular sounds may pass through small crannies not confused, but its magnify not so well. Bacon.

How shall we this union well express?

Nought ties the soul, her subtly is such. Davies.

The corporeity of all bodies being the same, and subtly in all bodies being essentially the same thing, could any body by subtly become vital, then any degree of subtly would produce some degree of life. Grew, Cosmol.

Bodies the more of kin they are to spirit in subtly and refinement, the more spreading and self-diffusive are they. Norris.

2. Nicety; exility.

Whatever is invisible, in respect of the fineness of the body, or subtly of the motion, is little enquired. Bacon.

3. Refinement; too much acuteness.

You prefer the reputation of candour before that of subtly. Boyle.

Intelligible discourses are spoiled by too much subtly in nice divisions. Locke.

Greece did at length a learned race produce,

Who needful science mock'd, and arts of use;

Mankind with idle subtly embroil,

And fashion systems with romantick toil. Blackmore.

They give method, and shed subtly upon their author. Baker.

4. Cunning; artifice; slyness.

Finding force now faint to be,

He thought grey hairs afforded subtly. Sidney.

The rudeness and barbarity of savage Indians knows not so perfectly to hate all virtues as some men's subtly. King Charles.

Sleights proceeding

SUBTLE. adj. [Written often for subtile, especially in the sense of cunning.] Sly; artful; cunning.

Some subtle headed fellow will put some quirk, or devise some evasion, whereof the rest will take hold. Spenser.

Shall we think the subtle witted French
Conjurers and sorcerers, that, afraid of him,
By magick verse have thus contriv'd his end?

The serpent, subtlest beast of all the field. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The Arabians were men of a deep and subtle wit. Milton, P. L.

SUBTLY. adv. [from subtile.]

1. Slyly; artfully; cunningly.

Thou see'st how subtly to detain thee I devise;

Inviting thee to hear, while I relate. Milton, P. L.

2. Nicely; delicately.

In the nice bee, what sense so subtly true,
From poisonous herbs extracts the healing dew! Pope.

To SUBTRACT. v. a. [subtractus, Latin. They who derive it from the Latin write subtract; those who know the French original, write substract, which is the common word.] To withdraw part from the rest.

Reducing many things unto charge, which, by confusion, became concealed and subtracted from the crown. Davies.

What is subtracted or subducted out of the extent of the divine perfection, leaves still a quotient infinite. Hale.

The same swallow, by the subtracting daily of her eggs, lay nineteen successively, and then gave over. Ray.

SUBTRACTION. n. s.

1. Subtraction; which see.

2. In law.

Subtraction happens, when any person who owes any suit, duty, custom, or service to another, withdraws or neglects to perform it. Blackstone.

Subtraction, the withholding or detaining of legacies, is apparently injurious. Blackstone.

SUBTRACTER. n. s. [subtrahō, Lat.] The number to be taken out of a larger number.

SUBTRAHEND. n. s. [subtrahendum, Latin.] The number out of which part is taken. Dr. Johnson. — Not so; but the number to be subtracted or taken out of another, and not that from which another number is subtracted.

SUBTRIPLE. adj. [subtriple, Fr. sub and triple, Lat.] Containing a third or one part of three.

The power will be in a subtriple proportion to the weight. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

To SUBVERT. v. a. [subvertir, Fr. subverto, Lat.]

1. To overthrow; to overturn; to destroy; to turn upside down.

God, by things deem'd weak,
Subverts the worldly strong and worldly wise. Milton, P. L.
No proposition can be received for divine revelation, if contradictory to our clear intuitive knowledge; because this would subvert the principles of all knowledge. Locke.
Trees are subverted or broken by high winds. Mortimer.

2. To corrupt; to confound.
Strive not about words to no purpose, but to the subverting of the hearers. 2 Tim. ii. 14.

SUBVE'RTER. n. s. [from subvert.] Overthrower; destroyer.

O traitor; worse than Sinon was to Troy;
O vile subverter of the Gallick reign,
More false than Gano was to Charlemagne. Dryden.
They anathematize them as enemies to God, and subverters of souls. Waterland.

SUBUNDA'TION.* n. s. [sub and unda, Lat.] Flood;

reum*. Brown.

I have not discovered the menstruum: I will present a succedaneous experiment made with a common liquor. Boyle.

SUCCEDA'NEUM.† n. s. [Latin.] That which is put to serve for something else.

They did not need a succedaneum to that inward conscious persuasion. Warburton, Doct. of Grace, i. 75.

To SUCCE'ED. v. n. [succeder, Fr. succedo, Lat.]

1. To follow in order.

If I were now to die,
'Twere to be most happy; for I fear,
My soul hath her consent so absolute,
That not another comfort like to this
Succeeds in unknown fate. Shakspeare, Othello.
Those of all ages to succeed—will curse my head.
Milton, P. L.

2. To come into the place of one who has quitted or died.

Workmen let it cool by degrees in such relentings of neal-ing heats, lest it should shiver in pieces by a violent succeeding of air in the room of the fire. Digby on Bodies.

Enjoy till I return

Short pleasures; for long woes are to succeed. Milton, P. L.
If the father left only daughters, they equally succeeded to him in copartnership, without prelation or preference of the eldest to a double portion. Hale.

Revenge succeeds to love, and rage to grief. Dryden.

While these limbs the vital spirit feeds,
While day to night, and night to day succeeds,
Burnt-off rings morn and ev'ning shall be thine,
And fires eternal in thy temples shine. Dryden.

These dull harmless makers of lampoons are yet of dangerous example to the publick: some witty men may succeed to their designs, and, mixing sense with malice, blast the reputation of the most innocent. Dryden.

The pretensions of Saul's family, who received his crown from the immediate appointment of God, ended with his reign; and David, by the same title, succeeded in his throne, to the exclusion of Jonathan. Locke.

3. To obtain one's wish; to terminate an undertaking in the desired effect.

'Tis almost impossible for poets to succeed without ambition: imagination must be raised by a desire of fame to a desire of pleasing. Dryden.

This address I have long thought owing; and if I had never attempted, I might have been vain enough to think I might have succeeded. Dryden.

A knave's a knave to me in ev'ry state;

Alike my scorn, if he succeed or fail:
Sporus at court, or Japhet in a jail. Pope.

4. To terminate according to wish; to have a good effect.

If thou deal truly, thy doings shall prosperously succeed to thee. Tob. iv. 6.

This was impossible for Virgil to imitate, because of the severity of the Roman language: Spenser endeavoured it in Shepherd's Kalendar; but neither will it succeed in English. Dryden.

5. To go under cover.

Please that silvan scene to take,
Where whistling winds uncertain shadows make;
Or will you to the cooler cave succeed,
Whose mouth the curling vines have overspread. Dryden.

To SUCCE'ED.† v. a.

1. To follow; to be subsequent or consequent to.

In that place no creature was hurtful unto man, and those destructive effects they now discover succeeded the curse, and came in with thorns and briars. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. To prosper; to make successful.

Now frequent trines the happier lights among,
And high rais'd Jove from his dark prison freed,
Those weights took off that on his planet hung,
Will gloriously the new laid works succeed. Dryden.
Succeed my wish, and second my design, }
The fairest Deiopeia shall be thine, } Dryden, Æn.
And make thee father of a happy line. }
God was pleased to succeed their endeavours. Stillingfleet, Serm. p. 14.

SUCCE'EDER. n. s. [from succeed.] One who follows; one who comes into the place of another.

Now this great succeder all repairs,
He builds up strength and greatness for his heirs,
Out of the virtues that adorn'd his blood. Daniel.

Nature has so far imprinted it in us, that should the envy of predecessors deny the secret to succeders, they yet would find it out. Suckling.

They make one man's particular fancies, perhaps failings, confining laws to others, and convey them to their succeders, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness as presumption. Boyle.

SUCCE'SS. n. s. [succes, Fr. successus, Lat.]

1. The termination of any affair happy or unhappy.

Success without any epithet is commonly taken for good success.

For good success of his hands he asketh ability to do of him that is most unable. Wisd. xiii. 19.

Perplex'd and troubled at his bad success
The tempter stood. Milton, P. R.

Not Lemuel's mother with more care,
Did counsel or instruct her heir;
Or teach, with more success, her son
The vices of the time to shun. Waller.

Every reasonable man cannot but wish me success in this attempt, because I undertake the proof of that which it is every man's interest that it should be true. Tillotson.

Whilst malice and ingratitude confess,
They've strove for ruin long without success. Garth.

Gas sulphuris may be given with success in any disease of the lungs. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Military successes, above all others, elevate the minds of a people. Atterbury.

2. Succession. Obsolete.

All the sons of these five brethren reigned
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descents, the crown retained. Spenser.

SUCCE'SSFUL. adj. [success and full.] Prosperous; happy; fortunate.

They were terrible alarms to persons grown wealthy by a long and successful imposture, by persuading the world that men might be honest and happy, though they never mortified any corrupt appetites. South.

He observ'd the illustrious throng,
Their names, their fates, their conduct and their care
In peaceful senates and successful war. Dryden.

This is the most proper and most successful season to meet and attack the advancing enemy. Blackmore.

The early hunter

Blesses Diana's hand, who leads him safe
O'er hanging cliffs; who spreads his net successful,
And guides the arrow through the panther's heart. Prior.

SUCCE'SSFULLY. adv. [from successful.] Prosperously; luckily; fortunately.

He is too young, yet he looks successfully. Shakspeare.

They would want a competent instrument to collect and convey their rays successfully, or so as to imprint the species with any vigour on a dull prejudicate faculty. Hammond.

The rule of imitating God can never be successfully proposed but upon Christian principles; such as that this world is a place not of rest, but of discipline. Atterbury.

A reformation successfully carried on in this great town, would in time spread itself over the whole kingdom. Swift.

Bleeding, when the expectoration goes on successfully, suppresseth it. Arbuthnot on Diet.

SUCCE'SSFULNESS. n. s. [from successful.] Happy conclusion; desired event; series of good fortune.

An opinion of the successfulness of the work is as necessary to found a purpose of undertaking it, as the authority of commands, or the persuasiveness of promises. Hammond.

SUCCE'SSION. n. s. [succession, Fr. successio, Lat.]

1. Consecution; series of one thing or person following another.

St. Augustine, having reckoned up a great number of the bishops of Rome, saith, in all this order of succession of bishops there is not one found a Donatist. Hooker.

Reflection on appearances of several ideas, one after another, in our minds, furnishes us with the idea of succession. Locke.

Let a cannon bullet pass through a room, and take with it any limb of a man, it is clear that it must strike successively the two sides of the room, touch one part of the flesh first, and another after, and so in succession. Locke.

2. A series of things or persons following one another.

These decays in Spain have been occasioned by so long a war with Holland; but most by two successions of inactive princes. Bacon.

The smallest particles of matter may cohere by the strongest attractions, and compose bigger particles of weaker virtue; and many of these may cohere and compose bigger particles, whose virtue is still weaker; and so on for divers successions, until the progression end in the biggest particles, on which the operations in chymistry and the colours of natural bodies depend. Newton, Opt.

3. A lineage; an order of descendants:

Cassibelan,
And his succession, granted Rome a tribute. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

A long succession must ensue;
And his next son the clouded ark of God
Shall in a glorious temple enshrine. Milton, P. L.

4. The power or right of coming to the inheritance of ancestors.

What people is so void of common sense,
To vote succession from a native prince? Dryden.

SUCCE'SSIVE. adj. [successif, Fr.]

1. Following in order; continuing a course or consecution uninterrupted.

Three with fiery courage he assails,
And each successive after other quails,
Still wond'ring whence so many kings should rise. Daniel.

God hath set
Labour and rest, as day and night, to men
Successive. Milton, P. L.

God, by reason of his eternal indivisible nature, is by one single act of duration present to all the successive portions of time, and all successively existing in them. South.

Send the successive ills through ages down,
And let each weeping father tell his son. Prior.

2. Inherited by succession. Not in use.

Countrymen,
Plead my successive title with your swords. Titus Andron.
The empire being elective, and not successive, the emperors, in being, made profit of their own times. Raleigh.

SUCCE'SSIVELY. adv. [successivemēt, Fr. from successive.] In uninterrupted order; one after another.

Three sons he left,
All which successively by turns did reign. Spenser, F. Q.
Is it upon record? or else reported
Successively from age to age? Shakspeare, Rich. III.
That king left only by his six wives three children, who reigned successively, and died childless. Bacon.

We that measure times by first and last,
The sight of things successively do take,
When God on all at once his view doth cast,
And of all times doth but one instant make. Davies.

I inclined the paper to the rays very obliquely, that the most refrangible rays might be more copiously reflected than the rest, and the whiteness at length changed successively into blue, indigo, and violet. Newton, Opt.

No such motion of the same atom can be all of it existent at once: it must needs be made gradually and successively, both as to place and time, seeing that body cannot at the same instant be in more places than one. Bentley, Serm.

We have a tradition coming down to us from our fathers; a kind of inheritance successively conveyed to us by the primitive saints from the apostles themselves. Waterland.

SUCCE'SSIVENESS. n. s. [from successive.] The state of being successive.

All the notion we have of duration is partly by the successive-ness of its own operations, and partly by those external measures that it finds in motion. Hale.

SUCCE'SSLESS. adj. [from success.] Unlucky; unfortunate; failing of the event desired.

A second colony is sent hither, but as successless as the first.
Heylin.
Dryden.

The Bavarian duke,
Bold champion! brandishing his Noric blade,
Best temper'd steel, successless prov'd in field. Philips.
Passion unpyt'd, and successless love,
Plant daggers in my heart. Addison, Cato.

Successless all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love. Pope.

SUCCE'SSLESSNESS. * n. s. [from successless.] Not prosperous conclusion; unsuccessfulness. Boyle has somewhere used this word.

SU'CCESSOR. n. s. [successeur, Fr. successor, Lat. This is sometimes pronounced succéssor, with the accent in the middle.] One that follows in the place or character of another: correlative to predecessor.

This king by this queen had a son of tender age, but of great expectation, brought up in the hope of themselves, and already acceptation of the inconstant people, as successor of his father's crown. Sidney.

The successor of Moses in prophecies. Ecclus. xlv. 1.

The fear of what was to come from an unacknowledged successor to the crown, clouded much of that prosperity then, which now shines in chronicle. Clarendon.

The second part of confirmation is the prayer and benediction of the bishop, the successor of the apostles in this office.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

The surly savage offspring disappear,
And curse the bright successor of the year;
Yet crafty kind with daylight can dispense.
Whether a bright successor, or the same. Dryden.
Tate.

The descendants of Alexander's successors cultivated navigation in some lesser degree. Arbuthnot.

A man of great wrath shall suffer punishment.

Prov. xix.

A woman suffered many things of physicians, and spent all she had.

St. Mark, v. 26.

Shall we then live thus vile, the race of heaven

Thus trampled, thus expell'd to suffer here

Chains and these torments? Better these than worse,

By my advice; since fate inevitable

Subdues us, and omnipotent decreee,

The victor's will. To suffer, as to do,

Our strength is equal, nor the law unjust

That so ordains.

Milton, P. L.

Obedience impos'd,

On penalty of death, and suffering death.

Milton, P. L.

2. To endure; to support; not to sink under.

Our spirit and strength entire Strongly to suffer and support our pains.

Milton, P. L.

3. To allow; to permit; not to hinder.

He wonder'd that your lordship

Would suffer him to spend his youth at home.

Shakespeare.

most young men suffer in the want of them.

Locke.

2. To undergo punishment.

The father was first condemned to suffer upon a day appointed, and the son afterwards the day following.

Clarendon.

He thus

Was forc'd to suffer for himself and us !
Heir to his father's sorrows and his crown.

Dryden.

3. To be injured.

Publick business suffers by private infirmities, and kingdoms fall into weaknesses by the diseases or decays of those that manage them.

Temple.

SUFFERABLE.† adj. [from suffer; suffrable, old Fr.]

Tolerable; such as may be endured.

Thy rages be

Now no more sufferable.

Chapman.

It is sufferable in any to use what liberty they list in their own writing, but the contracting and extending the lines and sense of others would appear a thankless office.

Wotton.

SUFFERABLENESS.* n. s. [from sufferable.] Tolerableness.

Scott.

SUFFERABLY. adv. [from sufferable.] Tolerably; so as to be endured.

But, hasty heat tempering with sufferance wise,
He staid his hand.

Spenser.

He hath given excellent sufferance, and vigorousness to the sufferers, arming them with strange courage.

Bp. Taylor.

Nor was his sufferance of other kinds less exemplary than that he evidenced in the reception of calumny.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

And should I touch it nearly, bear it
With all the sufferance of a tender friend.

Otway, Orphan.

3. Toleration; permission; not hindrance.

Most wretched man,

That to affections does the bridle lend;
In their beginning they are weak and wan,
But soon through sufferance grow to fearful end.

Spenser.

In process of time, somewhiles by sufferance, and somewhiles by special leave and favour, they erected to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner.

Hooker.

Some villains of my court

Are in consent and sufferance in this.

Shakspeare.

Both gloried to have 'scap'd the Stygian flood,
As gods, and by their own recover'd strength;
Not by the suff'rance of supernal power.

SUFFERER. n. s. [from suffer.]

1. One who endures or undergoes pain or inconvenience.

This evil on the Philistines is fall'n,
The sufferers then will scarce molest us here,
From other hands we need not much to fear.

Milton, S. A.

He when his love was bounded in a few,
That were unhappy that they might be true,
Made you the fav'rite of his last sad times,
That is, a sufferer in his subjects' crimes.

Dryden.

She returns to me with joy in her face, not from the sight of her husband, but from the good luck she has had at cards; and if she has been a loser, I am doubly a sufferer by it: she comes home out of humour, because she has been throwing away my estate.

Addison, Spect.

The history of civil wars and rebellions does not make such deep and lasting impressions, as events of the same nature in which we or our friends have been sufferers.

Addison.

Often these unhappy sufferers expire for want of sufficient vigour and spirit to carry on the animal regimen.

Blackmore.

2. One who allows; one who permits.

SUFFERING. n. s. [from suffer.] Pain suffered.

Rejoice in my sufferings for you.

Col. i. 24.

With what strength, what steadiness of mind,
He triumphs in the midst of all his sufferings?

Addison.

We may hope the sufferings of innocent people, who have lived in that place which was the scene of rebellion, will secure from the like attempts.

Addison.

It increased the smart of his present sufferings to compare them with his former happiness.

Atterbury.

Then it is that the reasonableness of God's providence, in relation to the sufferings of good men in this world, will be fully justified.

Nelson.

SUFFERINGLY.* adv. [from suffering.] With pain.

An ilopadua, or an affect or moving sufferingly to become matter.

Cabalistical Dialogue, (1682,) p. 8.

To SUFFICE. v. n. [suffire, French; sufficio, Latin.]

To be enough; to be sufficient; to be equal to the end or purpose.

If thou ask me why, sufficeth, my reasons are good.

Shakspeare.

To recount almighty works

What words or tongue of seraph can suffice,
Or heart of man suffice to comprehend?

Milton, P. L.

The indolency we have, sufficing for our present happiness, we desire not to venture the change; being content; and that is enough.

Locke.

He lived in such temperance, as was enough to make the longest life agreeable; and in such a course of piety, as sufficed to make the most sudden death so also.

Pope.

To SUFFICE. v. a.

1. To afford; to supply.

A strong and succulent moisture is able, without drawing help from the earth, to suffice the sprouting of the plant.

Bacon.

Thou king of horned floods whose plenteous urn

Suffices fatness to the fruitful corn,

Shall share my morning song and evening vows.

Dryden.

The pow'r appeas'd, with winds suffic'd the sail;

The belling canvas strutted with the gale.

Dryden.

2. To satisfy; to be equal to want or demand.

Israel, let it suffice you of all your abominations.

Ezekiel.

Parched corn she did eat, and was sufficed, and left.

Ruth.

Let it suffice thee that thou know'st us happy.

Milton, P. L.

He our conqueror left us this our strength,

That we may so suffice his vengeful ire.

Milton, P. L.

When the herd suffic'd, did late repair

To ferny heaths, and to the forest laze.

Dryden.

SUFFICIENCY. n. s. [suffisance, Fr. from sufficient.]

1. State of being adequate to the end proposed.

'Tis all men's office to speak patience

To those that wring under the load of sorrow;

But no man's virtue nor sufficiency

To be so moral, when he shall endure

The like himself.

Shakspeare.

His sufficiency is such, that he bestows and possesses, his plenty being unexhausted.

Boyle.

This he did with that readiness and sufficiency, as at once gave testimony to his ability, and to the evidence of the truth he asserted.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

2. Qualification for any purpose.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency, as not willingly to admit the counsel of others.

King Charles.

The bishop, perhaps an Irishman, being made judge by that law, of the sufficiency of the ministers, may dislike the Englishman as unworthy.

Spenser on Ireland.

Their pensioner De Wit was a minister of the greatest authority and sufficiency ever known in their state.

Temple.

3. Competence; enough.

An elegant sufficiency, content.

Thomson.

4. Supply equal to want.

The most proper subjects of dispute are questions not of the very highest importance, nor of the meanest kind; but rather the intermediate questions between them: and there is a large sufficiency of them in the sciences.

Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

5. It is used by Temple for that conceit which makes a man think himself equal to things above him; and is commonly compounded with self.

Sufficiency is a compound of vanity and ignorance.

Temple.

SUFFICIENT. adj. [suffisant, Fr. sufficiens, Latin.]

1. Equal to any end or purpose; enough; competent; not deficient.

Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. St. Matt. vi. 34.
Heaven yet retains

Number sufficient to possess her realms. Milton, P. L.
Man is not sufficient of himself to his own happiness.

Tillotson.

It is sufficient for me, if, by a discourse something out of the way, I shall have given occasion to others to cast about for new discoveries. Locke.

She would ruin me in silks, were not the quantity that goes to a large pin-cushion sufficient to make her a gown and petticoat. Addison.

Sufficient benefice is what is competent to maintain a man and his family, and maintain hospitality; and likewise to pay and satisfy such dues belonging to the bishop.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

Seven months are a sufficient time to correct vice in a Yahoo. Swift.

2. Qualified for any thing by fortune or otherwise.

In saying he is a good man, understand me, that he is sufficient. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

SUFFICIENTLY. adv. [from sufficient.] To a sufficient degree; enough.

If religion did possess sincerely and sufficiently the hearts of all men, there would need be no other restraint from evil.

Hooker.

Seem I to thee sufficiently possess'd
Of happiness?

Milton.

All to whom they are proposed, are by his grace sufficiently moved to attend and assent to them; sufficiently, but not irresistibly; for if all were irresistibly moved, all would embrace them; and if none were sufficiently moved, none would embrace them. Rogers.

In a few days, or hours, if I am to leave this carcase to be buried in the earth, and to find myself either for ever happy in the favour of God, or eternally separated from all light and peace; can any words sufficiently express the littleness of every thing else? Law.

SUFFISANCE. n. s. [French.] Excess; plenty. Obsolete.

There him rests in riotous suffisance
Of all gladfulness and kingly joyance.

Spenser.

TO SUFFLAMINATE.* v. a. [sufflamino, Latin.] To stop; to stay; to impede.

God could any where sufflamine and subvert the beginnings of wicked designs. Barrow, Sermon on Gunpowder Treason.

TO SUFFLATE.* v. a. [sufflo, Latin.] To blow up. Not used. Bailey.

SUFFLATION.* n. s. [sufflatio, Latin.] The act of blowing up. Coles.

TO SUFFOCATE. v. a. [suffoquer, Fr. suffoco, Lat.] To choke by exclusion or interception of air.

Let gallows gape for dog, let man go free,

And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate. Shakespeare.

Air but momentarily remains in our bodies, only to refrigerate the heart, which being once performed, lest being self-heated again, it should suffocate that part, it hasteth back the same way it passed. Brown, Vulg. Err.

A swelling discontent is apt to suffocate and strangle without passage. Collier of Friendship.

All involv'd in smoke, the latent foe
From every cranny suffocated fell.

Thomson.

SUFFOCATE.* part. adj. [from the verb.] Choked.

This chaos, when degree is suffocate,
Follows the choking.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

SUFFOCATION. n. s. [suffocation, Fr. from suffocate.] The act of choking; the state of being choked.

Diseases of stoppings and suffocations are dangerous. Bacon.
White consists in an equal mixture of all the primitive colours, and black in a suffocation of all the rays of light.

Cheyne.

Mushrooms are best corrected by vinegar; some of them being poisonous, operate by suffocation, in which the best remedy is wine or vinegar and salt, and vomiting as soon as possible. Arbuthnot on Diet.

SUFFOCATIVE. adj. [from suffocate.] Having the power to choke.

From rain, after great frosts in the winter, glandulous tumours and suffocative catarrhs proceed. Arbuthnot on Air.

SUFFOSSION.* n. s. [suffossio, Latin.] The act of digging under.

Those conspiracies against maligned sovereignty, those suffossions of walls, those powder-trains.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

SUFFRAGAN.† n. s. [suffragant, Fr. suffraganeus, Latin.]

1. A bishop considered as subject to his metropolitan.

The four archbishops of Mexico, Lima, S. Fov, and Dominico, have under them twenty-five suffragan-bishops, all liberally endowed and provided for. Heylin.

Suffragan-bishops shall have more than one riding apparitor. Ayliffe, Parergon.

Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, insolently took upon him to declare five articles void, in his epistle to his suffragans.

Hale.

2. An assistant bishop: this is the more proper sense of the word. By an act, 26 Hen. VIII. suffragans were to be denominated from some principal place in the diocese of the prelate, whom they were to assist.

For a bishop to have a coadjutor, or, as the statute calls him, a suffragan to assist him, was no new thing, but of ancient use in England before Henry the Eighth.—Such suffragan, or coadjutor, was to have no revenue or jurisdiction in his diocese, whose suffragan he was; save what the bishop should by commission under his seal allow him. Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 161.

SUFFRAGANT.* adj. [suffragans, Latin.] Assisting; concurring with.

Heavenly doctrine ought to be chief ruler and principal head every where, and not suffragant and subsidiary.

Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613,) p. 175.

If I should let my pen loose to the suffragant testimonies whether of antiquity, or of modern divines and reformed churches, I should try your patience, and instead of a letter send you a volume. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 302.

SUFFRAGANT.* n. s. An assistant; a favourer; one who concurs with.

Hoping to find them more friends and suffragants to the virtues and modesty of sober women, than enemies to their beauty. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 118.

TO SUFFRAGATE. v. n. [suffragor, Latin.] To vote with; to agree in voice with.

No tradition could universally prevail, unless there were some common congruity of somewhat inherent in nature, which suits and suffragates with it, and closeth with it. Hale.

SUFFRAGATOR.* n. s. [suffragator, Lat.] A favourer; one that helps with his vote.

The Synod in the Low Countries is held at Dort; the most of their suffragators are already assembled.

Bp. of Chester to Abp. Usher, (1618,) Lett. p. 67.

SUFFRAGE.† n. s. [suffrage, Fr. suffragium, Lat.]

1. Vote; voice given in a controverted point.

Noble confederates, thus far is perfect,

Only your suffrages I will expect

At the assembly for the chusing of consuls.

B. Jonson.

They would not abet by their suffrages or presence the designs of those innovations. King Charles.

The fairest of our island dare not commit their cause to the suffrage of those who most partially adore them. Addison.

Fabius might joy in Scipio, when he saw

A beardless consul made against the law;

And join his suffrage to the votes of Rome.

Dryden.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, is extremely agreeable, the ancients and moderns giving their suffrages unanimously herein. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Lactantius and St. Austin confirm by their suffrage the observation made by the heathen writers. Atterbury.

To the law and to the testimony let the appeal be in the first place; and next to the united suffrage of the primitive churches, as the best and safest comment upon the other. Waterland.

2. United voice of persons in publick prayer.

This is said in reference to the chants, responds, suffrages, versicles. Pref. to the Vers. of the Ps. (1550.)

The suffrages next after the Creed shall stand thus.

Comm. Pr. Form of Thanksg. for May 29.

3. Aid; assistance: a latinism.

They make little account of indulgences, especially of those which are to be applied to the souls in purgatory by way of suffrage. Dorrington, Obs. on the Rom. Ch. (1699), p. 191.

SUFFRAGINOUS. adj. [suffrago, Latin.] Belonging to the knee-joint of beasts.

In elephants, the bought of the forelegs is not directly backward, but laterally, and somewhat inward; but the hough or suffraginous flexure behind, rather outward. Brown.

SUFFUMIGATION. † n. s. [suffumigation, Fr. suffumigo, Latin.] Operation of fumes raised by fire.

We commend a fume, or suffumigation, every morning, of dried rosemary. Bacon, Hist. of Life and Death.

If the matter be so gross as it yields not to remedies, it may be attempted by suffumigation. Wiseman, Surgery.

SUFFUMIGE. n. s. [suffumigo, Lat.] A medical fume. Not used.

For external means, drying suffumiges or smoaks are prescribed with good success; they are usually composed out of frankincense, myrrh, and pitch. Harvey.

TO SUFFUSE. † v. a. [suffusus, Lat.] To spread over with something expansible, as with a vapour or a tincture.

[She] gan recomfort her in her rude wise,
With womanish compassion of her plaint,
Wiping the tears from her suffused eyes. Spenser, F. Q.

Suspicious, and fantastical surmise,
And jealousy suffus'd with jaundice in her eyes. Dryden.

To that recess,
When purple light shall next suffuse the skies,
With me repair. Pope.

Instead of love-enliven'd cheeks,
With flowing rapture bright, dark looks succeed,
Suffus'd and glaring with untender fire. Thomson.

SUFFUSION. n. s. [suffusion, Fr. from suffuse.]

1. The act of overspreading with any thing.

2. That which is suffused or spread.

A drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
Or dim suffusion veil'd. Milton, P. L.

The disk of Phœbus, when he climbs on high,
Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye;
And when his chariot downward draws to bed,
His ball is with the same suffusion red. Dryden.

To those that have the jaundice or like suffusion of eyes, objects appear of that colour. Ray.

SUG. n. s. [from sugo, Lat. to suck.] A small kind of worm.

Many have sticking on them sugs, or trout-lice, which is a kind of worm like a clove or pin, with a big head, and sticks close to him, and sucks his moisture. Walton.

SUGAR. † n. s. [sucre, Fr. saccharum, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — It has been traced to the Arabick succar, which is formed from the Pers. schachar. See Morin, in V. SUCRE.]

i. The native salt of the sugar-cane, obtained by the expression and evaporation of its juice. Quincy.

All the blood of Zelmane's body stirred in her, as wine will do when sugar is hastily put into it. Sidney.

Lumps of sugar lose themselves, and twine
Their subtle essence with the soul of wine. Crashaw.

A grocer in London gave for his rebus a sugar-loaf standing upon a flat steeple. Peacham.

Saccharum candidum shoots into angular figures, by placing a great many sticks a-cross a vessel of liquid sugar. Grew.

If the child must have sugar-plums when he has a mind, rather than be out of humour; why, when he is grown up, must he not be satisfied too with wine? Locke.

In a sugar-baker's drying-room, where the air was heated fifty-four degrees beyond that of a human body, a sparrow died in two minutes. Arbutnot on Air.

A piece of some geniculated plant, seeming to be part of a sugar-cane. Woodward on Fossils.

2. Any thing proverbially sweet.

Your fair discourse has been as sugar,
Making the hard way sweet and delectable. Shakspeare.

3. A chymical dry crystallization.

Sugar of lead, though made of that insipid metal, and sour salt of vinegar, has in it a sweetness surpassing that of common sugar. Boyle.

TO SUGAR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To impregnate or season with sugar.

Short thick sobs
In panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,
That ever-bubbling spring, the sugar'd nest
Of her delicious soul, that there does lie,
Bathing in streams of liquid melody. Crashaw.

2. To sweeten.

Thou would'st have plung'd thyself
In general riot, and never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect, but followed
The sugar'd game before thee. Shakspeare, Timon.

His glosing sire his errand daily said,
And sugar'd speeches whisper'd in mine ear. Fairfax.

Who casts out threats, no man deceives,
But flatt'ry still in sugar'd words betrays,
And poison in high tasted meats conveys. Denham.

SUGARCANDY. † n. s. [from sugar and candy.] Sugar candied, or crystallized.

One poor pennyworth of sugar-candy.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

SUGARY. † adj. [from sugar.]

1. Sweet; tasting of sugar.

With the sugary sweet thereof allure
Chaste ladies' ears to phantasies impure. Spenser.

2. Fond of sugar or sweet things.

Sugary palates. Hist. R. S. i. 145.

SUGESCENT.* adj. [from sugeo, Lat.] Relating to sucking.

The sugescent parts of animals are fitted for their use, and the knowledge of that use put into them. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 18.

TO SUGGEST. v. a. [suggero, suggestum, Latin; suggerer, Fr.]

1. To hint; to intimate; to insinuate good or ill; to tell privately.

Are you not asham'd?
What spirit suggests this imagination? Shakspeare.
I could never have suffered greater calamities, by denying to sign that justice my conscience suggested to me. King Charles.

These Romish casuists speak peace to the consciences of men, by suggesting something to them, which shall satisfy their minds, notwithstanding a known, actual, avowed continuance of their sins. South.

Some ideas make themselves way, and are suggested to the mind by all the ways of sensation and reflexion. Locke.

Reflect upon the different state of the mind in thinking, which those instances of attention, reverie, and dreaming, naturally enough suggest. Locke.

Search for some thoughts thy own suggesting mind,
And others dictated by heavenly power,
Shall rise spontaneous. Pope, Odys.

2. To seduce; to draw to ill by insinuation. Out of use.

When devils will their blackest sins put on,
They do suggest at first with heavenly shows. Shakspeare.

Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
I nightly lodge her in an upper tower. Shakspeare.

3. To inform secretly. Out of use.

We must suggest the people, in what hatred
He still hath held them, that to's power he would Have made them mules. Shakspeare, Coriol.

SUGGE'STER.† n. s. [from suggest.] One that remindeth another.

Some suborn'd suggester of these treasons, Believ'd in him by you. Beaumont and Fl. Bloody Brother.

The Spirit of God in person is not the immediate suggester of this conclusion. Bp. Bull, Works, iii. 885.

SUGGESTION. n. s. [suggestion, Fr. from suggest.]

1. Private hint; intimation; insinuation; secret notification.

It allayeth all base and earthly cogitations, banisheth and driveth away those evil secret suggestions which our invisible enemy is always apt to minister. Hooker.

He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking
Himself with princes: one that by suggestion
Tied all the kingdom. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Native and untaught suggestions of inquisitive children.

Another way is letting the mind, upon the suggestion of any new notion, run after similes. Locke.

2. Secret incitement.

Arthur, they say, is kill'd to-night
On your suggestion. Shakspeare, K. John.

To SU'GGIL.* v. a. [suggillo, Lat.] To defame: the Latin word has the same figurative meaning.

They will not shrink to offer their blood for the defence of Christ's verity, if it be openly impugned, or secretly suggilled.

Abp. Parker, Strype Append. to his Life.

To SU'GGILATE. v. a. [suggillo, Lat.] To beat black and blue; to make livid by a bruise.

The head of the os humeri was bruised, and remained suggilated long after. Wueman, Surgery.

SUGGILLATION.* n. s. [from suggilate; Fr. sugillation. Cotgrave.] A black and blue mark; a blow; a bruise.

SU'ICIDE. n. s. [suicidium, Lat.]

1. Self-murder; the horrid crime of destroying one's self.

Child of despair, and suicide my name. Savage.
To be cut off by the sword of injured friendship is the most dreadful of all deaths, next to suicide. Richardson, Clarissa.

2. A self-murderer.

If fate forbears us, fancy strikes the blow,
We make misfortune, suicides in woe. Young.

SUI'LLAGE. n. s. [souillage, Fr.] Drain of filth. Obsolete.

When they have chosen the plot, and laid out the limits of the work, some Italians dig wells and cisterns, and other conveyances for the suillage of the house. Wotton.

SU'ING. n. s. [This word seems to come from suer, to sweat, Fr. It is perhaps peculiar to Bacon.] The act of soaking through any thing.

Note the percolation or suing of the verjuice through the wood; for verjuice of itself would never have passed through the wood. Bacon.

SUIT.† n. s. [suite, Fr.]

1. A set; a number of things correspondent one to the other.

Whose verses they deduc'd from those first golden times,
Of sundry sorts of feet, and sundry suits of rhimes. Drayton.
We, ere the day, two suits of armour sought,
Which borne before him, on his steed he brought. Dryden.

2. Clothes made one part to answer another.

VOL. IV.

What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming bottles, and ale-washed wits, is wonderful. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Him all repute

For his device in handsoning a suit;
To judge of lace, pink, panes, print, cut, and plait,
Of all the court to have the best conceit. Donne.

Three or four suits one winter there does waste,
One suit does there three or four winters last. Cowley.

His majesty was supplied with three thousand suits of clothes, with good proportions of shoes and stockings.

Clarendon.

3. Consecution; series; regular order.

Every five-and-thirty years the same kind and suite of weather comes about again; as great frost, great wet, great droughts, warm winters, summers with little heat; and they call it the prime. Bacon.

4. Out of SUITS. Having no correspondence. A metaphor, I suppose, from cards.

Wear this for me; one out of suits with fortune,
That would give more, but that her hand lacks means. Shakspeare.

5. [suite, Fr.] Retinue; company.

Plexirtus's ill-led life, and worse-gotten honour, should have tumbled together to destruction, had there not come in Tydeus and Telenor, with fifty in their suite to his defence.

Sidney.

6. [From To sue.] A petition; an address of entreaty.

Mine ears against your suits are stronger than Your gates against my force. Shakspeare.

She gallops o'er a courtier's nose;
And then dreams he of smelling out a suit. Shakspeare.

Had I a suit to Mr. Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakspeare.

Many shall make suit unto thee. Job, xi. 19.

My mind, neither with pride's itch, nor yet hath been Poison'd with love to see or to be seen;

I had no suit there, nor new suit to shew:
Yet went to court. Donne.

It will be as unreasonable to expect that God should attend and grant those suits of ours, which we do not at all consider ourselves. Wh. Duty of Man.

7. Courtship.

He that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my suit. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Their determinations are to return to their home and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition. Shakspeare.

8. In Spenser it seems to signify pursuit; prosecution. Dr. Johnson. — This is certainly an old usage of the word.

A keper, whiche I knewe, [was] requyred to folow a sute with hys hounde after one that hadde stolen a deere.

Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 198.

High amongst all knights hast hung thy shield,
Thenceforth the suit of earthly conquest shoone,
And wash thy hands from guilt of bloody field. Spenser.

9. [In law.] Suit is sometimes put for the instance of a cause, and sometimes for the cause itself deduced in judgement.

Ayliffe.

All that had any suits in law came unto them. Suanna.

Wars are suits of appeal to the tribunal of God's justice, where there are no superiors on earth to determine the cause.

Bacon, War with Spain.

Involve not thyself in the suits and parties of great personages.

Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devot.

To Alibech alone refer your suit,
And let his sentence finish your dispute. Dryden.

A suit of law is not a thing unlawful in itself, but may be innocent, if nothing else comes in to make a sin thereof; but then it is our sin, and a matter of our account, when it is either upon an unjustifiable ground, or carried on by a sinful management. Kettlewell.

John Bull was flattered by the lawyers that his suit would not last above a year, and that before that time he would be in quiet possession of his business. Arbutnot.

10. [In law also, from the old Fr. suit, "l'obligation de suivre les plaids de son seigneur. Les Anglois se servent encore de ce mot depuis Guillaume le Bâtard. 960." Lacombe.] Suit of court; suit-service; attendance of tenants at the court of their lord. See Cowel.

Then found he many missing of his crew,
Which wont doe suit and service to his might.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. vii. 34.

SUIT Covenant. n. s. [In law.] Is where the ancestor of one man covenanted with the ancestor of another to sue at his court. Bailey.

SUIT Court. † n. s. [In law.] The court in which tenants owe attendance to their lord. Bailey. See the last sense of SUIT.

SUIT Service. † n. s. [In law.] Attendance which tenants owe to the court of their lord. Bailey. See the last sense of SUIT.

To SUIT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fit; to adapt to something else.

Suit the action to the word, the word to the action, with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

The matter and manner of their tales, and of their telling, are so *suit*ed to their different educations and humours, that each would be improper in any other. Dryden.

2. To be fitted to; to become.

Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal,
Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryden.

Her purple habit sits with such a grace
On her smooth shoulders, and so suits her face. Dryden.

If different sects should give us a list of those innate practical principles, they would set down only such as *suit*ed their distinct hypotheses. Locke.

Raise her notes to that sublime degree,
Which suits a song of piety and thee. Prior.

3. To dress; to clothe.

Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
So went he *suit*ed to his watry tomb:
If spirits can assume both form and suit,
You come to fright us. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Be better *suit*ed;
These weeds are memories of those worser hours;
I pry'thee put them off. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I'll disrobe me
Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
As does a Briton peasant. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

To SUIT. v. n. To agree; to accord. Dryden uses it both with to and with.

The one intense, the other still remiss,
Cannot well suit with either; but soon prove
Tedious alike. Milton, P. L.

The place itself was *suit*ing to his care,
Uncouth and savage as the cruel fair. Dryden.

Pity does with a noble nature suit. Dryden.

Constraint does ill with love and beauty suit. Dryden.

This he says, because it suits with his hypothesis, but proves it not. Locke.

Give me not an office
That suits with me so ill; thou know'st my temper. Addison.

SUITABLE. adj. [from suit.] Fitting; according with; agreeable to: with to.

Through all those miseries, in both there appeared a kind of nobleness not suitable to that affliction. Sidney.

What he did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform, in manner suitable to their present and ancient state. Hooker.

To solemn acts of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty; are they only in religion a stain? Hooker.

It is very suitable to the principles of the Roman Church; for why should not their science as well as service be in an unknown tongue? Tillotson.

As the blessings of God upon his honest industry had been great, so he was not without intentions of making suitable returns in acts of charity. Atterbury.

Expression is the dress of thought, and still Appears more decent, as more suitable;
A vile conceit in pompous words express'd,
Is like a clown in regal purple dress'd. Pope.

It is as great an absurdity to suppose holy prayers and divine petitions without an holiness of life suitable to them, as to suppose an holy and divine life without prayers. Law.

SUITABLENESS. n. s. [from suitable.] Fitness; agreeableness.

In words and styles, suitableness makes them acceptable and effective. Glanville.

With ordinary minds, it is the suitableness, not the evidence of a truth that makes it to be yielded to; and it is seldom that any thing practically convinces a man that does not please him first. South.

He creates those sympathies and suitableness of nature that are the foundation of all true friendship, and by his providence brings persons so affected together. South.

Consider the laws themselves, and their suitableness or unsuitableness to those to whom they are given. Tillotson.

SUITABLY. adv. [from suitable.] Agreeably; accordingly to.

Whosoever speaks upon an occasion may take any text suitably thereto; and ought to speak suitably to that text. South.

Some rank deity, whose filthy face
We suitably o'er stinking stables place. Dryden.

SUITER. } n. s. [from suit.]
SUITOR. }

1. One that sues; a petitioner; a suppliant.

As humility is in suitors a decent virtue, so the testification thereof, by such effectual acknowledgements, not only argueth a sound apprehension of his supereminent glory and majesty before whom we stand, but putteth also into his hands a kind of pledge or bond for security against our unthankfulness. Hooker.

She hath been a suitor to me for her brother,
Cut off by course of justice. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

My piteous soul began the wretchedness
Of suitors at court to mourn. Donne.

Not only bind thine own hands, but bind the hand of suitors also from offering. Bacon.

Yet their port
Not of mean suitors; nor important less
Seem'd their petition, than when the ancient pair,
Deucalion and chaste Pyrrha, to restore
The race of mankind drown'd, before the shrine
Of Themis stood devout. Milton, P. L.

I challenge nothing;
But I'm an humble suitor for these prisoners. Denham.
My lord, I come an humble suitor to you. Rowe.

2. A wooer; one who courts a mistress.

I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart; for truly I love none.

— A dear happiness to women! they would else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. Shakspeare.

He passed a year under the counsels of his mother, and then became a suitor to Sir Roger Ashton's daughter. Wotton.

By many suitors sought, she mocks their pains,
And still her vow'd virginity maintains. Dryden.

He drew his seat, familiar, to her side,
Far from the suitor train, a brutal crowd. Pope, Odys.

SUITRESS. n. s. [from suit.] A female suppliant.

'Twere pity
That could refuse a boon to such a suitress;
Y' have got a noble friend to be your advocate. Rowe.

SULCATED. adj. [sulcus, Lat.] Furrowed.

All are much chopped and sulcated by having lain exposed on the top of the clay to the weather, and to the erosion of the vitriolick matter mixed amongst the clay. Woodward.

To SULK.* v. n. [scolen, Sax. deses, desidiosus, sulky. Lye, edit. Manning.] To be sluggishly discontented; to be silently sullen; to be morose or obstinate. We use also, as a colloquial term, to be in the sulks; which formerly was, in the sullens. See SULLENS. Our word is modern.

SU'LKILY.* adv. [from sulky.] In the sulks; morosely.

He stands sulkily before me. Iron Chest, Pref. p. 11.

SU'LKINESS.* n. s. [from sulky; Sax. folcennejpe, desidia. Lye, edit. Manning.] State of silent sullenness; moroseness; gloominess.

I am come to my resting-place, and find it very necessary, after living for a month in a house with three women that laughed from morning till night, and would allow nothing to the sulkiness of my disposition.

Gray, Lett. to Dr. Clarke, (1760.)

SU'LVY.* adj. [folcen, Sax. See To SULK.] Sluggishly discontented; silently sullen; morose.

During the time he was in the house, he seemed sulky, or rather stupid. He never asked any questions; and, if spoken to, either replied shortly, or turned away without giving any answer.

Haslam on Madness, Case 10.

SULL.† n. s. [sulh, Sax. idem; suola, Icel. lignum crassum et nodosum. Serenius.] A plough.

Answorth.

SULLEN.† adj. [Of this word the etymology is obscure. Dr. Johnson.—The Icel. sollin, tumidus, livescens, has been offered as the etymon. See the Death-Song of Lodbrog, 1782. p. 54. But perhaps it may be referred to the Lat. solus, solitary; whence our old word solein, used in that sense, and afterwards, by an easy application from place to person, transferred to a gloomy disposition, to persons morosely shunning the company of others. I consider therefore solitary as the primary meaning of the word, though Dr. Johnson has wholly overpassed it.]

1. Solitary.

It maketh me drawe out of the waic,
In soleyn place by my selfe. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

2. Gloomily angry; sluggishly discontented.

He loveth none hevinesse,
But mirth and play and all gladnesse;
He hateth eke alle trechours,
And soleine folke and envious. Chaucer, Rom. R. 3897.

Wilmot continued still sullen and perverse, and every day grew more insolent. Clarendon.

A man in a jail is sullen and out of humour at his first coming in. L'Estrange.

Forc'd by my pride, I my concern suppress'd;
Pretended drowsiness, and wish of rest;
And sullen I forsook th' imperfect feast. Prior.

If we sit down sullen and inactive, in expectation that God should do all, we shall find ourselves miserably deceived. Rogers.

3. Mischievous; malignant.

Such sullen planets at my birth did shine,
They threaten every fortune mixt with mine. Dryden.
The sullen fiend her sounding wings display'd,
Unwilling left the night, and sought the nether shade. Dryden.

4. Intractable; obstinate.

Things are as sullen as we are, and will be what they are, whatever we think of them. Tillotson.

5. Gloomy; dark; cloudy; dismal.

Why are thine eyes fixt to the sullen earth,
Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight?

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Night with her sullen wings to double shade
The desert; fowls in their clay nests were couch'd,
And now wild beasts came forth the woods to roam.

Milton, P. R.

A glimpse of moonshine, streak'd with red;
A shuffled, sullen, and uncertain light,
That dances through the clouds, and shuts again. Dryden.

He snatches off my new bob wig, and throws it upon two apples that were roasting by a sullen sea-coal fire.

No cheerful breeze this sullen region knows;
The dreaded East is all the wind that blows. Pope.

6. Heavy; dull; sorrowful.

Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,
And sullen presage of your own decay. Shakspeare, K. John.
I hear the far-off curfew sound,
Over some wide water'd shore
Swinging slow with sullen roar. Milton, Il Pens.

To SU'LVEN.* v. a. [from the adjective.] To make sullen.

In the body of the world, when members are sullen'd, and snarl one at another, down falls the frame of all.

Felham, Res. i. 86.

SU'LVENLY. adv. [from sullen.] Gloomily; malignantly; intractably.

To say they are framed without the assistance of some principle that has wisdom in it, and come to pass from chance, is sullenly to assert a thing because we will assert it. More.

He in chains demanded more
Than he impos'd in victory before:
He sullenly reply'd, he could not make These offers now. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

The gen'ral mends his weary pace,
And sullenly to his revenge he sails;
So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryden.

SU'LVENNESS. n. s. [from sullen.] Gloominess; moroseness; sluggish anger; malignity; intractability.

Speech being as rare as precious, her silence without sullenness, her modesty without affectation, and her shamefacedness without ignorance. Sidney.

To fit my sullenness,
He to another key his stile doth dress. Donne.

In those vernal seasons, when the air is calm and pleasant, it were an injury and sullenness against nature not to go out, and see her riches. Milton on Education.

Quit not the world out of any hypocrisy, sullenness, or superstition, but out of a sincere love of true knowledge and virtue. More.

With these comforts about me, and sullenness enough to use no remedy, Zulichem came to see me. Temple.

SU'LVENS.† n. s. [Without singular.] Morose temper; gloominess of mind. A burlesque word.

SU'LLIAGE. n. s. [souillage, Fr.] Pollution; filth; stain of dirt; foulness. Not in use.

Require it to make some restitution to his neighbour for what it has detracted from it, by wiping off that sullage it has cast upon his fame. Gov. of the Tongue.

Calumniate stoutly; for though we wipe away with never so much care the dirt thrown at us, there will be left some sullage behind. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

To SU'LLY. v. a. [souiller, Fr.] To soil; to tarnish; to dirt; to spot.

Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding. Bacon.

The falling temples which the gods provoke,
And statutes sully'd yet with sacrilegious smoke. Roscommon.

He's dead, whose love had sully'd all your reign,
And made you empress of the world in vain. Dryden.

Lab'ring years shall weep their destin'd race,
Charg'd with ill omens, sully'd with disgrace. Prior.

Publick justice may be done to those virtues their humility took care to conceal, which were sullied by the calumnies and slanders of malicious men. Nelson.

Let there be no spots to sully the brightness of this solemnity. Atterbury.

Ye walkers too, that youthful colours wear,
Three *sully*ing trades avoid with equal care;
The little chimney-sweeper skulks along,
And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng. Gay.

SU'LLY. n. s. [from the verb.] Soil; tarnish; spot.
 You laying these light sullies on my son,
 As 'twere a thing a little soil'd i' th' working. Shakespeare.
 A noble and triumphant merit breaks through little spots and sullies in his reputation. Addison, Spect.

SULPHUR. n. s. [Latin.] Brimstone.
 In his womb was hid metallick ore,
 The work of sulphur. Milton, P. L.
 Sulphur is produced by incorporating an oily or bituminous matter with the fossil salt. Woodward.

SULPHURATE.* adj. [sulphuratus, Lat.] Of or belonging to sulphur; of the colour of sulphur.
 He interprets their breastplates of fire, and of jacinth and brimstone, of the colour of their horsemen's coats, as if they were made of thread of either colour "de feu," violet colour, or a pale sulphurate colour. More, Myst. of Godliness, (1660,) p. 189.

SULPHURATION.* n. s. [sulphuratio, Lat.] Act of dressing or anointing with sulphur.
 Then they seek for expiations of those visions nocturnal;
 charms, sulphurations, dippings in the sea. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 50.

SULPHUREOUS. } adj. [sulphureus, Lat.] Made SULPHUROUS. } of brimstone; having the qualities of brimstone; containing sulphur; impregnated with sulphur.

My hour is almost come,
 When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames
 Must render up myself. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Dart and javelin, stones and sulphurous fire. Milton, P. L.
 Is not the strength and vigour of the action between light and sulphureous bodies, observed above, one reason why sul-phureous bodies take fire more readily, and burn more vehemently than other bodies do? Newton, Opt.

The fury heard, while on Cocytus' brink,
 Her snakes unty'd sulphureous waters drink. Pope.

No sulphureous glooms
 Swell'd in the sky, and sent the lightning forth. Thomson.

SULPHUREOUSLY.* adv. [from sulphureous.] In a sulphureous manner.

A town low in its situation, and sulphureously shaded by the high and barren mountain Cabobarra, whose brazen front scorches this miserable place. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 35.

SULPHUREOUSNESS. n. s. [from sulphureous.] The state of being sulphureous.

SU'LTANRY. n. s. [from sultan.] An Eastern empire.
 I affirm the same of the sultanry of the Mamalukes, where slaves, bought for money, and of unknown descent, reigned over families of freemen. Bacon.

SULTRINESS. n. s. [from sultry.] The state of being sultry; close and cloudy heat.

S U M

SULTRY.† adj. [This is imagined by Skinner to be corrupted from sulphury, or sweltry. Dr. Johnson.—Speltan, Sax. signifies to die. Chaucer uses swelte to signify the effect of a great oppression of spirits. Hence our word sultry, i. e. sweltry, to express a suffocating heat. Tyrwhitt.—Hence formerly, which our etymologists have not observed, the verb sulter or soulter, was used for swelter, i. e.
 to overpower with heat. "Horse and asses tired, and soultred with the heat of the day." Gayton, Notes on Don Quix. 1654, p. 64.] Hot without ventilation; hot and close; hot and cloudy.

It is very sultry and hot. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The sultry breath
 Of tainted air had cloy'd the jaws of death. Sandys.

Such as born beneath the burning sky,
 And sultry sun betwixt the tropicks lie. Dryden, Æn.

Our foe advances on us,
 And envies us even Lybia's sultry desarts. Addison, Cato.

Then would sultry heats and a burning air have scorched and chapped the earth, and galled the animal tribes in houses or dens. Cheyne.

SUM. n. s. [summa, Lat. somme, Fr.]

1. The whole of any thing; many particulars aggregated to a total.

We may as well conclude so of every sentence, as of the whole sum and body thereof. Hooker.

How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them. Pt. cxxxix. 17.

The Almighty Father, where he sits
 Shrin'd in his sanctuary of heaven secure,
 Consulting on the sum of things, foreseen
 This tumult, and permitted all, advis'd. Milton, P. L.

Such and no less is he, on whom depends
 The sum of things. Dryden.

Weighing the sum of things with wise forecast,
 Solicitous of publick good. Philips.

2. Quantity of money.

 some set time of casting up the whole sum. Wh. Duty of Man.

Britain, once despis'd, can raise
 As ample sums as Rome in Cæsar's days. C. Arbuthnot.

3. [Somme, Fr.] Compendium; abridgement; the whole abstracted.

This, in effect, is the sum and substance of that which they bring by way of opposition against those orders, which we have common with the church of Rome. Hooker.

They replenish the hearts of the nearest unto them with words of memorable consolation, strengthened men in the fear of God, gave them wholesome instructions of life, and confirmed them in true religion: in sum, they taught the world no less virtuously how to die, than they had done before how to live. Hooker.

This having learn'd, thou hast attain'd the sum
 Of wisdom. Milton, P. L.

In sum, no man can have a greater veneration for Chaucer than myself. Dryden.

Thy sum of duty let two words contain;
 Be humble, and be just. Prior.

In sum, the Gospel, considered as a law, prescribes every virtue to our conduct, and forbids every sin. Rogers.

4. The amount; the result of reasoning or computation.

I appeal to the readers, whether the sum of what I have said be not this. Tillotson.

5. Height; completion.

Thus I have told thee all my state, and brought
 My story to the sum of earthly bliss,
 Which I enjoy. Milton, P. L.

In saying ay or no, the very safety of our country, and the sum of our well-being, lies. L'Estrange.

To SUM. v. a. [sommer, Fr. from the noun.]

You cast the event of war,
And summ'd th' account of chance. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The high priest may sum the silver brought in. 2 Kings, xxii.
In sickness time will seem longer without a clock than with it; for the mind doth value every moment, and then the hour doth rather sum up the moments than divide the day. Bacon.

He that would reckon up all the accidents preferments depend upon, may as well undertake to count the sands, or sum up infinity. South.

2. To comprise; to comprehend; to collect into a narrow compass.

So lovely fair!

That what seem'd fair in all the world, seem'd now
Mean, or in her summ'd up, in her contain'd. Milton, P. L.

To conclude, by summing up what I would say concerning what I have, and what I have not been, in the following paper I shall not deny that I pretended not to write an accurate treatise of colours, but an occasional essay. Boyle.

Go to the ant, thou sluggard, in few words sums up the moral of this fable. L'Estrange.

This Atlas must our sinking state uphold;
In council cool, but in performance bold:
He sums their virtues in himself alone,
And adds the greatest, of a loyal son. Dryden, Aurengz.

A fine evidence summ'd up among you! Dryden.

3. [In falconry.] To have feathers full grown.

With prosperous wing full summ'd. Milton, P. R.

SU'MACH-TREE. n. s. [sumach, Fr.] A plant. The flowers are used in dying, and the branches for tanning, in America. Miller.

SU'MLESS. adj. [from sum.] Not to be computed.

As is the oozy bottom of the sea

With sunken wreck and sumless treasures. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Above, beneath, around the palace shines,
The sumless treasure of exhausted mines. Pope.

SU'MMARILY. adv. [from summary.] Briefly; the shortest way.

The decalogue of Moses declareth summarily those things which we ought to do; the prayer of our Lord, whatsoever we should request or desire. Hooker.

While we labour for these demonstrations out of Scripture, and do summarily declare the things which many ways have been spoken, be contented quietly to hear, and do not think my speech tedious. Hooker.

When the parties proceed summarily, and they chase the ordinary way of proceeding, the cause is made plenary. Ayliffe.

SU'MMARY. adj. [sommaire, Fr. from sum.] Short; brief; compendious.

The judge

Directed them to mind their brief,
Nor spend their time to shew their reading,
She'd have a summary proceeding. Swift.

SU'MMARY. n. s. [from the adj.] Compendium; abstract; abridgement.

We are enforc'd from our most quiet sphere
By the rough torrent of occasion;
And have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve, to shew in articles.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

In that comprehensive summary of our duty to God, there is no express mention thereof. Rogers.

SU'MMER.* n. s. [from sum.] One who casts up an account; a reckoner. Sherwood.

SU'MMER. n. s. [rumen, Saxon; somer, Dutch.]

1. The season in which the sun arrives at the hither solstice.

Sometimes hath the brightest day a cloud;
And, after summer, evermore succeeds

The barren winter with his nipping cold. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Can't such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

An hundred of summer fruits. 2 Sam. xvi.

He was sitting in a summer parlour. Judg. iii. 20.

In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride. Milton, P. L.

Dry weather is best for most summer corn. Mortimer.

The dazzling roofs,
Resplendent as the blaze of summer noon,
Or the pale radiance of the midnight moon. Pope.

Child of the sun,

See sultry summer comes. Thomson.

2. [Trabs summaria.] The principal beam of a floor.
Oak, and the like true hearty timber, may be better trusted in cross and transverse works for summers, or girders, or binding beams. Wotton.

Then enter'd sin, and with that sycamore,
Whose leaves first shelter'd man from drought and dew,
Working and winding slyly evermore,
The inward walls and summers cleft and tore;
But grace shor'd these, and cut that as it grew. Herbert.

To SU'MMER. v. n. [from the noun.] To pass the summer.

The fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts shall winter upon them. Is. xviii. 6.

To SU'MMER. v. a. To keep warm.

Maids well summer'd, and warm kept, are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes. Shakspeare.

SU'MMERHOUSE. n. s. [from summer and house.] An apartment in a garden used in the summer.

I'd rather live

With cheese and garlick, in a windmill, far,
Than feed on cates, and have him talk to me,
In any summerhouse in Christendom. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

With here a fountain, never to be play'd,
And there a summerhouse, that knows no shade. Pope.

There is so much virtue in eight volumes of Spectators, such a reverence of things sacred, so many valuable remarks for our conduct in life, that they are not improper to lie in parlours or summerhouses, to entertain our thoughts in any moments of leisure. Watts.

SU'MMERSAULT. } n. s. [See SOMERSET.] A high leap

SU'MMERSET. } in which the heels are thrown over the head.

1. To call with authority; to admonish to appear; to cite.

Catesby, sound lord Hastings,
And summon him to-morrow to the Tower.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The course of method summoneth me to discourse of the inhabitants.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

The tirsan is assisted by the governour of the city, where the feast is celebrated, and all the persons of both sexes are summoned to attend.

Bacon.

Rely on what thou hast of virtue, summon all.

Milton, P. L.

Nor trumpets summon him to war,

Nor drums disturb his morning sleep.

Dryden.

We are summon'd in to profess repentance and amendment of all our sins.

Kettlewell.

Love, duty, safety, summon us away;

'Tis nature's voice, and nature we obey.

Pope.

2. To excite; to call up; to raise: with up emphatical.

When the blast of war blows in our ears,

Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

SUMMONER. † n. s. [from summon. See SOMNER.

Chaucer writes it sompnour, and others sumner.

See Phillips's Dict.] One who cites; one who summons.

Close pent-up guilts

Rive your concealing continents, and ask

These dreadful summoners grace.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

SUMMONS. † n. s. [from the verb. Dr. Johnson. —

Rather from the law-writ called a summoneas. See

Pegge's Anecd. of the Engl. Lang. 2d edit. p. 173.]

A call of authority; admonition to appear; citation.

What are you?

Your name, your quality, and why you answer,

This present summons?

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He sent to summon the seditious, and to offer pardon; but neither summons nor pardon was any thing regarded.

Hayward.

The sons of light

Hasted, resorting to the summons high,

And took their seats.

Milton, P. L.

This summons, as he resolved unfit either to dispute, or disobey, so could he not, without much violence to his inclinations, submit unto.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

Strike your sails at summons, or prepare

To prove the last extremities of war.

Dryden.

SUMPTER. n. s. [sommier, Fr. somaro, Italian.] A horse that carries the clothes or furniture.

Return with her!

Persuade me rather to be a slave and sumpter

To this detested groom.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Bp. Taylor.

SUMPTUARY. adj. [sumptuarius, Lat.] Relating to expence; regulating the cost of life.

To remove that material cause of sedition, which is want and poverty in the estate, serveth the opening and well-balancing of trade, the banishing of idleness, the repressing of waste and excess by sumptuary laws.

Bacon.

S U N

SUMPTUOUSITY. n. s. [from sumptuous.] Expensiveness; costliness. Not used.

He added sumptuously, invented jewels of gold and stone, and some engines for the war.

Raleigh.

SUMPTUOUS. adj. [sumptuosus, from sumptus, Latin.] Costly; expensive; splendid.

We see how most Christians stood then affected, how joyful they were to behold the sumptuous stateliness of houses built unto God's glory.

Hooker.

We are too magnificent and sumptuous in our tables and attendance.

Atterbury.

SUMPTUOUSLY. adv. [from sumptuous.]

1. Expensively; with great cost.

This monument five hundred years hath stood,

Which I have sumptuously re-edified.

Titus Andronicus.

Ethelwold, bishop of Winchester, in a famine, sold all the rich vessels and ornaments of the church, to relieve the poor with bread; and said, there was no reason that the dead temples of God should be sumptuously furnished, and the living temples suffer penury.

Bacon, Apophthegms.

2. Splendidly.

A good employment will make you live tolerably in London, or sumptuously here.

Swift.

SUMPTUOUSNESS. n. s. [from sumptuous.] Expensiveness; costliness.

Boyle.

SUN. † n. s. [sunno, Gothick; runna, runne, Sax. son, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Wachter concludes, that the word is certainly Arabick; viz. from sana, to shine; senā, splendour. "Quæ dum mecum perpendo, et quod Arabibus quoque sol feminini generis sit, non amplius dubito majores nostros, ante migrationem in occidentem, et nomen et genus solis ab Arabibus accepisse." Wachter, in V. SONNE. The German word is of the feminine gender; as the Saxon is. And this distinction may be found in our old English. See Lib. Fest. fol. 29. Mr. Harris, in his Hermes, has argued upon the masculine gender of the sun, without any knowledge of this curious circumstance in the history of language. See Herm. B. i. ch. 4.]

1. The luminary that makes the day.

Doth beauty keep which never sun can burn,

Nor storms do turn?

Sidney.

Bid her steal into the pleached bower,

Where honeysuckles ripen'd by the sun,

Forbid the sun to enter.

Shakspeare.

Though there be but one sun existing in the world, yet the idea of it being abstracted, so that more substances might each agree in it, it is as much a sort as if there were as many suns as there are stars.

Locke.

By night, by day, from pole to pole they run;

Or from the setting seek the rising sun.

Harte.

2. A sunny place; a place eminently warmed by the sun.

Yonder bank hath choice of sun and shade.

Milton, S. A.

3. Any thing eminently splendid.

I will never consent to put out the sun of sovereignty to posterity, and all succeeding kings.

King Charles.

4. Under the SUN. In the world. A proverbial expression.

There is no new thing under the sun.

Ecc. i. 9.

To SUN. v. a. [from the noun.] To insolate; to expose to the sun; to warm in the sun.

The cry to shady delve him brought at last,

Where Mammon earst did sun his treasury.

Spenser.

What aim'st thou at? delicious fare;

And then to sun thyself in open air.

Dryden, Pers.

SU'NBEAM.† n. s. [sun and beam; Sax runnebeam.
The old poets have usually placed the accent on the last syllable.] Ray of the sun.

Vanish'd in the sunbeams. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Gliding through the ev'n
On a sunbeam. Milton, P. L.

There was a God, a being distinct from this visible world;
and this was a truth wrote with a sunbeam, legible to all mankind, and received by universal consent. South.

SU'NBEAT.† part. adj. [sun and beat.] Shone on fiercely by the sun.

As sun-beat snow so let them thaw. Sandys, Ps. p. 91.
Its length runs level with the Atlantick main,
And wearies fruitful Nilus to convey
His sunbeat waters by so long a way. Dryden, Juv.

SU'NBRIGHT. adj. [sun and bright.] Resembling the sun in brightness.

Gathering up himself out of the mire,
With his uneven wings did fiercely fall
Upon his sunbright shield. Spenser.

Now would I have thee to my tutor:
How and which way I may bestow myself,
To be regarded in her sunbright eye. Shakspeare.

High in the midst, exalted as a god,
The apostate in his sunbright chariot sat,
Idol of majesty divine! inclos'd
With flaming cherubims, and golden shields. Milton, P. L.

SU'NBURNING. n. s. [sun and burning.] The effect of the sun upon the face.

If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sunburning, let thine eye be thy cook. Shakspeare.

The heat of the sun may darken the colour of the skin, which we call sunburning. Boyle.

SU'NBURNT. part. adj. [sun and burnt.]

1. Tanned; discoloured by the sun.

Where such radiant lights have shone,
No wonder if her cheeks be grown
Sunburnt with lustre of her own. Cleaveland.

Sunburnt and swarthy though she be,
She'll fire for winter nights provide. Dryden.

One of them, older and more sunburnt than the rest, told him he had a widow in his line of life. Addison.

2. Scorched by the sun.

How many nations of the sunburnt soil
Does Niger bless? how many drink the Nile? Blackmore.

SU'NCLAD.† part. adj. [sun and clad.] Clothed in radiance; bright.

To him, that dares
Arm his profane tongue with contemptuous words
Against the sun-clad power of Chastity, Fain would I something say. Milton, Comus.

SU'NDAY.† n. s. [sun and day; Sax. runnan-dæg, the day of the sun.] The day anciently dedicated to the sun; the first day of the week; the Christian sabbath.

If thou wilt needs thrust thy neck into a yoke, wear the print of it, and sigh away Sundays. Shakspeare.

An' she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

At prime they enter'd on the Sunday morn;
Rich tap'stry spread the streets. Dryden.

Our ardent labours for the toys we seek,
Join night to day, and Sunday to the week. Young.

To SU'NDER. v. a. [runþian, Sax.] To part; to separate; to divide.

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That sundred friends greet in the hour of death. Shakspeare.

It is sundred from the main land by a sandy plain. Carew.

She that should all parts to reunion bow,
She that had all magnetick force alone,
To draw and fasten sundred parts in one. Donne.

A sundred clock is piecemeal laid,
Not to be lost, but by the maker's hand
Repolish'd, without error then to stand. Donne.

When both the chiefs are sunder'd from the fight,
Then to the lawful king restore his right. Dryden.

The enormous weight was cast,
Which Crantor's body sunder'd at the waist. Dryden.

Bears, tigers, wolves, the lion's angry brood,
Whom heaven endu'd with principles of blood,
He wisely sunder'd from the rest, to yell
In forests. Dryden.

Bring me the lightning, give me thunder;
— Jove may kill, but ne'er shall sunder. Granville.

SU'NDER. n. s. [runþen, Sax.] Two; two parts.

SU'NDIAL. n. s. [sun and dial.] A marked plate on which the shadow points the hour.

All your graces no more you shall have,
Than a sundial in a grave. Donne.

The body, though it really moves, yet not changing perceiv-able distance, seems to stand still; it is evident in the shadows of sundials. Locke.

SU'NDRIED.* part. adj. [sun and dry.] Dried by the heat of the sun.

The building is of sun-dried brick.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 162.

SU'NDRY.† adj. [runþen, Sax. sundr, Goth. from to sunder. See also ASUNDER.] Several; more than one.

That law, which, as it is laid up in the bosom of God, we call eternal, receiveth, according unto the different kind of things which are subject unto it, different and sundry kinds of names. Hooker.

Not of one nation was it peopled, but of sundry people of different manners. Spenser.

But, dallying in this place so long, why do'st thou dwell,
So many sundry things here having yet to tell? Drayton.

He caus'd him to be arrested upon complaint of sundry grievous oppressions. Davies.

How can she several bodies know,
If in herself a body's form she bear?

How can a mirror sundry faces show,
If from all shapes and forms it be not clear? Davies.

I have composed sundry collects, as the Adventual, Quadragesimal, Paschal or Pentecostal. Sanderson.

SU'NSHINE. † n. s. [sun and shine; Sax. sun-jcin.]

Milton accents it on the last syllable; and so sunshiny was formerly accented on the second.] Action of the sun; place where the heat and lustre of the sun are powerful.

That man that sits within a monarch's heart,
And ripens in the sunshine of his favour,
Would he abuse the countenance of the king,

Alack, what mischiefs might be set abroad,
In shadow of such greatness? Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

He had been many years in that sunshine, when a new comet appeared in court. Clarendon.

Sight no obstacle found here, nor shade,
But all sunshine, as when his beams at noon
Culminate from the equator. Milton, P. L.

I that in his absence
Blaz'd like a star of the first magnitude,
Now in his brighter sunshine am not seen. Denham, Sophy.

Nor can we this weak shower a tempest call,
But drops of heat that in the sunshine fall. Dryden.

The more favourable you are to me, the more distinctly I see my faults: spots and blemishes are never so plainly discovered as in the brightest sunshine. Pope.

SU'NSHINE. } adj. [from sunshine. It was anciently
SU'NSHINY. } accented on the second syllable.]

Dryden.

SU'PERFINE. adj. [super and fine.] Eminently fine.

Some, by this journey of Jason, understand the mystery of the philosopher's stone: to which also other superfine chymists draw the twelve labours of Hercules. L'Estrange.

If you observe your cyder, by interposing it between a candle and your eye, to be very transparent, it may be called superfine.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

SUPERFLUENCE. n. s. [super and fluo, Lat.] More than is necessary.

The superfluence of grace is ordinarily proportioned to the faithful discharge of former trusts, making use of the foregoing sufficient grace.
Hammond.

SUPERFLUITANCE. n. s. [super and fluito, Lat.] The act of floating above.

Spermaceti, which is a superfluitance on the sea, is not the sperm of a whale.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

SUPERFLUITANT. adj. [superfluitans, Lat.] Floating above.

A chalky earth, beaten and steeped in water, affordeth a cream or fatness on the top, and a gross subsidence at the bottom: out of the cream, or superfluitance, the finest dishes are made; out of the residue, the coarser.
Brown.

SUPERFLUITY. n. s. [superfluité, Fr. from superfluus.] More than enough; plenty beyond use or necessity.

Having this way eased the church, as they thought, of superfluity, they went on till they had plucked up even those things which also had taken a great deal deeper root.
Hooker.

They are as sick that surfeit with too much, as they that starve with nothing; therefore it is no mean happiness to be seated in the mean: superfluity comes sooner by white hairs, but competency lives longer.
Shakespeare.

A quiet mediocrity is still to be preferred before a troubled superfluity.
Suckling.

Like the sun, let bounty spread her ray,
And shine that superfluity away.
Pope.

SUPERFLUOUS. adj. [super and fluo, Lat. superflu, Fr.] Exuberant; more than enough; unnecessary; offensive by being more than sufficient.

I think it superfluous to use any words of a subject so praised in itself as it needs no praises.
Sidney.

When a thing ceaseth to be available unto the end which gave it being, the continuance of it must then appear superfluous.
Hooker.

Our superfluous lacqueys and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle.
Shakespeare, Hen. V.

A proper title of a peace, and purchas'd

Woodward.

TO SUPERINDUCE. v. a. [super and induco, Latin.]

1. To bring in as an addition to something else.

To superinduce any virtue upon a person, take the living creature in which that virtue is most eminent.
Bacon.

Custom and corruption superinduce upon us a kind of necessity of going on as we began.
L'Estrange.

Father is a notion superinduced to the substance or man, and refers only to an act of that thing called man, whereby he contributed to the generation of one of his own kind, let man be what it will.
Locke.

Long custom of sinning superinduces upon the soul new and absurd desires, like the distemper of the soul, feeding only upon filth and corruption.
South.

2. To bring on as a thing not originally belonging to that on which it is brought.

Relation is not contained in the real existence of things, but something extraneous and superinduced.
Locke.

In children, savages, and ill-natured people, learning not having cast their native thoughts into new moulds, nor by superinducing foreign doctrines, confounded those fair characters nature had written, their innate notions might lie open.
Locke.

SUPERINDUCTION. n. s. [from superinduce.] The act of superinducing.

A good inclination is but the 'first rude draught of virtue; the superinduction of ill habits quickly deface it.
South.

Bailey.

TO SUPERINTEND. v. a. [super and intend.] To oversee; to overlook; to take care of others with authority.

The king will appoint a council, who may superintend the works of this nature, and regulate what concerns the colonies.
Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

This argues design, and a superintending wisdom, power, and providence in this special business of food.
Derham.

Angels, good or bad, must be furnished with prodigious knowledge, to oversee Persia and Grecia of old; or if any such superintend the affairs of Great Britain now.
Watts.

SUPERINTENDENCE. } n. s. [from super and intend.]
SUPERINTENDENCY. } Superiour care; the act of overseeing with authority.

Such an universal superintendency has the eye and hand of Providence over all, even the most minute and inconsiderable things.
South.

The Divine Providence, which hath a visible respect to the being of every man, is yet more observable in its superintendency over societies.
Grew.

An admirable indication of the divine superintendence and management.
Derham.

SUPERINTENDENT.† n. s. [superintendent, Fr. from superintend.] One who overlooks others authoritatively.

Our new superintendentes and ministers.

Martin, Marr. of Pr. (1550.) I. iii. b.
The world pays a natural veneration to men of virtue, and rejoice to see themselves conducted by those who act under the care of a Supreme Being, and who think themselves accountable to the great Judge and Superintendent of human affairs. Addison.

SUPERINTE'NDENT.* adj. Overlooking others with authority.

Next to Brama, one Deuendre is the superintendent deity, who hath many more under him. Stillingfleet.

SUPERIO'RITY. n. s. [from superiour.] Pre-eminence; the quality of being greater or higher than another in any respect.

Bellarmino makes the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superiour; but he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it; whereas mere excellency without superiority doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillingfleet.

The person who advises, does in that particular exercise a superiority over us, thinking us defective in our conduct or understanding. Addison, Spect.

SUPERIOUR. adj. [superieur, Fr. superior, Lat.]

1. Higher: greater in dignity or excellence; preferable or preferred to another.

In commending another, you do yourself right; for he that you commend is either superiour to you in that you commend, or inferiour; if he be inferiour, if he be to be commended, you much more: if he be superiour, if he be not to be commended, you much less glorious. Bacon.

Although superior to the people, yet not superior to their own voluntary engagements once passed from them. Bp. Taylor.

Heaven takes part with the oppressed, and tyrants are upon their behaviour to a superior power. I. E. Strange.

Superior beings above us, who enjoy perfect happiness, are more steadily determined in their choice of good than we, and yet they are not less happy or less free than we are. Locke.

He laughs at men of far superior understandings to his, for not being as well dressed as himself. Swift.

2. Upper; higher locally.

By the refraction of the second prism, the breadth of the image was not increased, but its superior part, which in the first prism suffered the greater refraction, and appeared violet and blue, did again in the second prism suffer a greater refraction than its inferiour part, which appeared red and yellow. Newton, Opt.

3. Free from emotion or concern; unconquered; unaffected.

From amidst them forth he pass'd,
Long way through hostile scorn; which he sustain'd

Here passion first I felt,
Commotion strange! in all enjoyments else

There is not in earth a spectacle more worthy than a great man superiour to his sufferings. Addison, Spect.

SUPERIOUR. n. s. One more excellent or dignified than another.

Those under the great officers of state have more frequent opportunities for the exercise of benevolence than their superiours. Addison, Spect.

SUPERLA'TION. n. s. [superlatio, Latin.] Exaltation of any thing beyond truth or propriety.

There are words that as much raise a style as others can depress it; superlation and overmuchness amplifies: it may be above faith, but not above a mean. B. Jonson.

SUPERLATIVE. adj. [superlatif, Fr. superlativus, Latin.]

1. Implying or expressing the highest degree.

It is an usual way to give the superlative unto things of eminence; and when a thing is very great, presently to define it to be the greatest of all. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Some have a violent and turgid manner of talking and thinking; they are always in extremes, and pronounce concerning every thing in the superlative. Watts.

2. Rising to the highest degree.

The high court of parliament in England is superlative.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.
Martyrdoms I reckon amongst miracles, because they seem to exceed the strength of human nature; and I may do the like of superlative and admirable holiness. Bacon.

The generality of its reception is with many the persuading argument of its superlative desert; and common judges measure excellency by numbers. Glanville.

Ingratitude and compassion never cohabit in the same breast; which shews the superlative malignity of this vice, and the baseness of the mind in which it dwells. South.

SUPERLATIVELY. adv. [from superlative.]

1. In a manner of speech expressing the highest degree.

I shall not speak superlatively of them; but that I may truly say, they are second to none in the Christian world. Bacon.

2. In the highest degree.

Tiberius was bad enough in his youth; but superlatively and monstrously so in his old age. South.

SUPERLUNARY. } } nary; placed above the moon;

not of this world.

The mind, in metaphysics, at a loss,
May wander in a wilderness of moss;
The head that turns at superlunar things,
Pois'd with a tail, may steer on Wilkins' wings. Pope.

Other ambition than of crowns in air,
And superlunary felicities,
Thy bosom warms.

Young, Night Th. 6.

SUPERNACULUM.* n. s. ["vox hybrida, ex Lat. præpositione super (upon) et Germ. nagel (a nail) composita; qui mos nova vocabula fingendi Anglis potissimum usitatus est, vocemque supernaculi apud eosdem produxit." De Supernaculo Anglorum, 4to. Lips. 1746, p. 8. Cited by Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 239. Mr. Brand, however, has produced no instance of the use of this word by any English writer, except Grose's definition of it; to which he has added an explanation translated from the Latin book already named. Dr. King, of facetious memory, I may add, will confirm it.] Good liquor, of which there is not even a drop left sufficient to wet one's nail. Grose.

To drink supernaculum was an ancient custom not only in England, but also in several other parts of Europe, of emptying the cup or glass, and then pouring the drop or two that remained at the bottom upon the person's nail that drank it, to shew that he was no flincher. Brand.

I saw some sparks as they were drinking,
With mighty mirth, and little thinking;
Their jests were supernaculum,
I snatch'd the rubies from each thumb;
And in this crystal have 'em here. King, Miscell. p. 385.

SUPERNAL. adj. [supernus, Lat.]

1. Having an higher position; locally above us.

By heaven and earth was meant the solid matter and substance, as well of all the heavens and orbs supernal, as of the globe of the earth, and waters which covered it. Raleigh.

2. Relating to things above; placed above; celestial; heavenly.

That supernal Judge that stirs good thoughts
In any breast of strong authority,
To look into the blots and stains of right.

Shakspeare.

He with frequent intercourse
Thither will send his winged messengers,
On errands of supernal grace. Milton, P. L.
Both glorying to have 'scap'd the Stygian flood,
As gods, and by their own recover'd strength,
Not by the suff'rance of supernal pow'r. Milton, P. L.

SUPERNATANT. adj. [supernatans, Lat.] Swimming above.

Whilst the substance continued fluid, I could shake it with the supernatant menstrium, without making between them any true union. Boyle.

SUPERNATA'TION. n. s. [from supernato, Lat.] The act of swimming on the top of any thing.

Touching the supernatation of bodies, take of aquafortis two ounces, of quicksilver two drams, the dissolution will not bear a flint as big as a nutmeg. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Bodies are differenced by supernatation, as floating on water; for chrystal will sink in water, as carrying in its own bulk a greater ponderosity than the space of any water it doth occupy; and will therefore only swim in molten metal and quicksilver. Brown, Vulg. Err.

SUPERNATURAL. adj. [super and natural.] Being above the powers of nature.

There resteth either no way unto salvation, or if any, then surely a way which is supernatural, a way which could never have entered into the heart of a man, as much as once to conceive or imagine, if God himself had not revealed it extraordinarily; for which cause we term it the mystery or secret way of salvation. Hooker.

When supernatural duties are necessarily exacted, natural are not rejected as needless. Hooker.

The understanding is secured by the perfection of its own nature, or by supernatural assistance. Tillotson.

No man can give any rational account how it is possible that such a general flood should come, by any natural means. And if it be supernatural, that grants the thing I am proving, namely, such a supreme being as can alter the course of nature. Wilkins.

What mists of providence are these,
Through which we cannot see?
So saints by supernatural power set free
Are left at last in martyrdom to die. Dryden.

SUPERNATURALLY. adv. [from supernatural.] In a manner above the course or power of nature.

The Son of God came to do every thing in miracle, to love supernaturally, and to pardon infinitely, and even to lay down the Sovereign while he assumed the Saviour. South.

SUPERNUMERARY. adj. [supernumeraire, Fr. super and numerus, Lat.] Being above a stated, a necessary, an usual, or a round number.

Well if thrown out, as supernumerary

2. That which is written on the top or outside.

Doth this churlish superscription
Portend some alteration in good will. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Read me the superscription of these letters; I know not which is which. Shakespeare, Timon.

No superscriptions of fame,
Of honour or good name. Suckling.

I learn of my experience, not by talk,
How counterfeit a coin they are who friends
Bear in their superscription; in prosperous days
They swarm, but in adverse withdraw their head. Milton, S. A.

It is enough her stone
May honour'd be with superscription
Of the sole lady, who had pow'r to move
The great Northumberland. Waller.

SUPERSE'CLAR.* adj. [super and secular.] Above the world.

Let us, saith he, celebrate this feast, not in a panegyric but divine, not in a worldly but supersecular manner. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 302.

To SUPERSE'DE. v. a. [super and sedeo, Latin.] To make void or inefficacious by superiour power; to set aside.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind; and therefore in its present workings not controulable by reason; for as much as the proper effect of it is, for the time, to supersede the workings of reason. South.

In this genuine acceptance of chance, nothing is supposed that can supersede the known laws of natural motion. Bentley.

SUPERSE'DEAS. n. s. [In law.] Is a writ which lieth in divers and sundry cases; in all which it signifies a command or request to stay or forbear the doing of that which in appearance of law were to be done, were it not for the cause whereupon the writ is granted: for example, a man regularly is to have surety of peace against him of whom he will swear that he is afraid; and the justice required hereunto cannot deny him: yet if the party be formerly bound to the peace, in Chancery or elsewhere, this writ lieth to stay the justice from doing that, which otherwise he might not deny. Cowel.

The far distance of this county from the court hath afforded it a superseas from takers and purveyours. Carew.

SUPERSE'VICEABLE. adj. [super and serviceable.]

Over officious; more than is necessary or required.

A glass-gazing, superserviceable, finical rogue. Shakspeare.

SUPERSTITION. n. s. [superstition, Fr. superstition, Lat.]

1. Unnecessary fear or scruples in religion; observance of unnecessary and uncommanded rites or practices; religion without morality.

A rev'rent fear, such superstition reigns
Among the rude, ev'n then possess'd the swains. Dryden.

2. Rite or practice proceeding from scrupulous or timorous religion. In this sense it is plural.

They the truth
With superstitions and traditions taint. Milton, P. L.

If we had a religion that consisted in absurd superstitions, that had no regard to the perfection of our nature, people might well be glad to have some part of their life excused from it. Law.

3. False religion; reverence of beings not proper objects of reverence; false worship.

They had certain questions against him of their own superstition. Acts, xxv. 19.

4. Over-nicety; exactness too scrupulous.

SUPERSTITIONIST.* n. s. [from superstition.] One who is addicted to superstition.

Our Saviour certainly conceived high indignation and sorrow in his heart, while he observed that scorn and contempt those blind superstitionists, the Jews, bore against the poor despised Gentiles, in thus profaning their place of worship.

More, Myst. of Godliness, (1660), p. 417.

Every vain-glorious superstitionist, that would make a show in the flesh. More, ut supr. p. 495.

SUPERSTITIOUS.† adj. [superstitieux, Fr. superstitiosus, Latin.]

1. Addicted to superstition; full of idle fancies or scruples with regard to religion.

At the kindling of the fire, and lighting of candles, they say certain prayers, and use some other superstitious rites, which shew that they honour the fire and the light. Spenser.

Nature's own work it seem'd, nature taught art,
And to a superstitious eye the haunt
Of wood-gods and wood-nymphs. Milton, P. R.

A venerable wood,
Where rites divine were paid, whose holy hair
Was kept and cut with superstitious care. Dryden.

2. Over accurate; scrupulous beyond need.

Have I with all my full affections
Still met the king? lov'd him next heaven? obey'd him?
Been out of fondness superstitious to him?
And am I thus rewarded? Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

SUPERSTITIOUSLY. adv. [from superstitious.]

1. In a superstitious manner; with erroneous religion.

There reigned in this island a king, whose memory of all others we most adore; not superstitiously, but as a divine instrument. Bacon.

2. With too much care.

Neither of these methods should be too scrupulously and superstitiously pursued. Watts, Logick.

SUPERSTITIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from superstition.] The state of being superstitious.

Remembring also hys prynces pleasure, which hath wylled all superstyciousnesse to be taken away from the ceremonies.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543), fol. 22.

To SUPERSTRAIN. v. a. [super and strain.] To strain beyond the just stretch.

In the straining of a string, the further it is strained, the less superstraining goeth to a note. Bacon.

To SUPERSTRUCT. v. a. [superstruo, superstructus, Latin.] To build upon any thing.

Two notions of fundamentals may be conceived, one signifying that whereon our eternal bliss is immediately superstructed, the other whereon our obedience to the faith of Christ is founded. Hammond.

If his habit of sin have not corrupted his principles, the vicious Christian may think it reasonable to reform, and the preacher may hope to superstruct good life upon such a foundation. Hammond on Fundamentals.

This is the only proper basis on which to superstruct first innocency, and then virtue. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

SUPERSTRU'CTION.† n. s. [from superstruct.] An edifice raised on any thing.

Trees sprout not cross like dry and sapless beams; nor do spars and tiles spring with a natural uniformity into a roof, and that out of stone and mortar: these are not the works of nature, but superstructions and additions to her, as the supplies of art. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

I want not to improve the honour of the living by impairing that of the dead; and my own profession hath taught me not to erect new superstructions upon an old ruin. Denham.

SUPERSTRU'CTIVE. adj. [from superstruct.] Built upon something else.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, must necessarily resolve, that what were drunkenness in another, is not so in him, and nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superstructive, be it never so gross. Hammond.

SUPERSTRU'CTURE. n. s. [super and structure.] That which is raised or built upon something else.

He who builds upon the present, builds upon the narrow compass of a point; and where the foundation is so narrow, the superstructure cannot be high and strong too. South.

Purgatory was not known in the primitive church, and is a superstructure upon the Christian religion. Tillotson.

You have added to your natural endowments the superstructures of study. Dryden.

SUPERSUBSTA'NTIAL. adj. [super and substantial.] More than substantial.

SUPERSU'BTLE.* adj. [super and subtle.] Over subtle. If sanctimony and a frail vow betwixt an erring barbarian and a supersubtle Venetian be not too hard for my wits. Shakspeare, Othello.

SUPERVACA'NEOUS.† adj. [supervacaneus, Lat.] Superfluous; needless; unnecessary; serving to no purpose. Dict.

Having in my former letters made a flying progress through the European world, and taken a view of the several languages, dialects, and sub-dialects, whereby people converse with one another; and being now wind-bound for Africk, I held it not altogether supervacaneous to take a review of them. Howell, Lett. (dat. 1630), ii. 60.

SUPERVACA'NEOUSLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Needlessly.

SUPERVACA'NEOUSNESS. n. s. [from the adjective.] Needlessness. Bailey.

To SUPERVE'NE. v. n. [supervenio, Lat.] To come as an extraneous addition.

His good-will, when placed on any, was so fixed and rooted, that even supervening vice, to which he had the greatest detestation imaginable, could not easily remove it. Fell, Life of Hammond.

Such a mutual gravitation can never supervene to matter, unless impressed by a divine power. Bentley.

SUPERVE'NIANT. adj. [superveniens, Latin.] Added; additional.

If it were unjust to murder John, the supervenient oath did not extenuate the fact, or oblige the jurer unto it. Brown.

That branch of belief was in him supervénient to Christian practice, and not all Christian practice built on that.

Hammond.

SUPERVE'NTION.† n. s. [from supervene.] The act of supervening.

An espousal contract may be broken off by the supervention of a legal kindred, unexpected. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

To SUPERVISE.† v. a. [super and visus, Latin.] To overlook; to oversee; to intend.

The small time I supervised the glass-house, I got among those Venetians some smatterings of the Italian tongue.

Howell, Lett. (dat. 1618.) i. i. 3.

M. Bayle speaks of the vexation of the supervising of the press, in terms so feeling that they move compassion.

Congreve.

SU'PERVISE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Inspection. Not in use.

That on the supervise, no leisure bated,

No, not to stay the grinding of the axe,

My head should be struck off.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

SUPERVIS'ION.* n. s. [from supervise.] Act of supervising.

I have a confused remembrance of having seen an old donation, for the sustenance of a perpetual lamp to burn before the high-altar in the royal chapel at Islip, under the trust and supervision of the abbots of Westminster.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 17.

SUPERVI'SOR. n. s. [from supervise.] An overseer; an inspector; a superintendant.

A supervisor may signify an overseer of the poor, an inspector of the customs, a surveyor of the highways, a supervisor of the excise. Watts, Logick.

How satisfy'd, my lord!

Would you be supervisor, grossly gape on?

Shakspeare.

I am informed of the author and supervisors of this pamphlet.

Dryden.

To SUPERVIVE. v. n. [super and vivo.] To overlive; to outlive.

Upon what principle can the soul be imagined to be naturally mortal, or what revolutions in nature will it not be able to resist and supervive?

Clarke.

SUPINA'TION.† n. s. [supination, Fr. from supino, Latin.]

1. The act of lying, or state of being laid with the face upward.

2. In anatomy, the position of the hand, in which the palm is lifted upwards, or exposed.

They [the muscles] can perform — flexion, extension, pronation, supination, the tonic motion, circumgyration; and all these with so great expedition and agility, that they are much sooner done than said, yea as soon done as thought on.

Smith on Old Age, p. 62.

SUPI'NE. adj. [supinus, Latin.]

1. Lying with the face upward: opposed to prone.

Upon these divers positions in man, wherein the spine can only be at right lines with the thigh, arise those remarkable postures, prone, supine, and erect. Brown, Vulg. Err.

At him he lanc'd his spear, and pierc'd his breast;

On the hard earth the Lycian knock'd his head,

And lay supine; and forth the spirit fled.

Dryden.

What advantage hath a man by this erection above other animals, the faces of most of them being more supine than ours.

Ray on the Creation.

2. Leaning backwards with exposure to the sun.

If the vine,

On rising ground be plac'd, or hills supine,

Extend thy loose battalions.

Dryden.

And all the busy cares of life defies.

Talkers.

He became pusillanimous and supine, and openly exposed to any temptation. Woodward.

SUP'INE. n. s. [supin, French; supinum, Latin.] In Latin Grammar, a term signifying a particular kind of verbal noun.

SUPI'NELY. adv. [from supine.]

1. With the face upward.

2. Drowsily; thoughtlessly; indolently.

Who on the beds of sin supinely lie,

They in the summer of their age shall die.

Sandys.

The old imprison'd king,

Whose lenity first pleas'd the gaping crowd;

But when long try'd, and found supinely good,

Like Æsop's log, they leapt upon his back.

Dryden.

He panting on thy breast supinely lies,

While with thy heavenly form he feeds his famish'd eyes.

Dryden, Luc.

Wilt thou then repine

To labour for thyself? and rather chuse

To lie supinely, hoping Heaven will bless

Thy slighted fruits, and give thee bread unearn'd?

Philips.

Beneath a verdant laurel's shade,

Horace, immortal bard! supinely laid.

Prior.

SUPI'NESS. n. s. [from supine.]

1. Posture with the face upward.

2. Drowsiness; carelessness; indolence.

When this door is open to let Dissenters in, considering their industry and our supineness, they may in a very few years grow to a majority in the house of commons.

Swift.

SUPI'NITY. n. s. [from supine.]

1. Posture of lying with the face upwards.

2. Carelessness; indolence; thoughtlessness.

The fourth cause of error is a supinity or neglect of enquiry, even in matters wherein we doubt, rather believing than going to see.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

SUP'PAGE.* n. s. [from To sup.] What may be supped; pottage.

Their tables, when they gave themselves to fasting, had not that usual furniture of such dishes as do cherish blood with blood; but for food they had bread; for suppage, salt; and for sauce, herbs.

Hooker, Ecl. Pol. v. § 72.

SUPPALPA'TION.* n. s. [from suppalpor, Lat. to wheedle.] Act of enticing by soft words.

Let neither bugs of fear, nor suppalpations of favour, weaken your hands.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

Thou art a courtier, and hast laid a plot to rise; if obsequious servility to the great; if those gifts in the bosom, which our blunt ancestors would have termed bribes; if plausible suppalpations, if restless importunities will hoise thee; thou wilt mount!

Seasonable Serm. (1644,) p. 30.

SUPPARASITA'TION.* n. s. [from supparasitor, Lat. to flatter.] The act of flattering or paying servile court to.

Here cozening in bargains, there breaking of promises; here perfidious underminings, there flattering supparasitations.

Bp. Hall, Fast Serm. (1628.)

SUPPEDA'NEOUS. adj. [sub and pes, Lat.] Placed under the feet.

He had slender legs, but encreased by riding after meals; that is, the humour descended upon their pendulosity, they having no support or suppedaneous stability.

Brown.

To SUPPE'DITATE.* v. a. [suppedito, Latin.] To supply.

Those things there is a logical possibility for us to do, and strength sufficient suppeditated.

Hammond, Works, iv. § 72.

His physicians, after his great fever that he had in Oxford, required him to eat suppers.

Fell.

SUPPERLESS. adj. [from supper.] Wanting supper ;
fasting at night.

Suppose a man's going supperless to bed, should introduce him to the table of some great prince.

Spectator.

She ey'd the bard, where supperless he sat,
And pin'd, unconscious of his rising fate.

Pope.

To SUPPLANT. v. u. [supplanter, Fr. sub and planta, Latin.]

1. To trip up the heels.

His legs entwining

Each other, till supplanted down he fell ;
A monstrous serpent on his belly prone.

Milton, P. L.

The thronging populace with hasty strides
Obstruct the easy way ; the rocking town

Supplants their footsteps ; to and fro they reel.

Philips.

2. To displace by stratagem ; to turn out.

It is Philoclea his heart is set upon ; it is my daughter I have borne to supplant me.

Sidney.

Upon a just survey, take Titus' part,
And so supplant us for ingratitude.

Shakspeare.

3. To displace ; to overpower ; to force away.

If it be fond, call it a woman's fear ;

Which fear, if better reasons can supplant,

I will subscribe, and say, I wrong'd the duke.

Shakspeare

Suspecting that the courtier had supplanted the friend.

Fell.

4. The sense in this passage seems to be mistaken.

For such doctrines as depend merely upon institution and the instruction of others, men do frequently differ both from themselves, and from one another about them ; because that which can plant, can supplant.

Wilkins.

SUPPLANTER. † n. s. [from supplant.] One that supplants ; one that displaces.

A man to ben a supplantour.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

A treacherous supplanter and underminer of the peace of all families and societies.

South, Serm. vi. 113.

The Gentiles began to press into the Gospel, and as by force to take it from the Jews. This was signified in the name Jacob, that is, a supplanter ; for the Gentiles here supplanted their elder brother the Jews, and stole the blessing and heirship from them.

Leslie, Truth of Chr. Demonstrated.

SUPPLANTING. \ n. s.* [from supplant.] The act of displacing or turning out.

That sad disunion and jealousy, those divisions and supplant- ings that were among the king's own friends.

Hoadly, Serm. 30 Jan. 1717-8, p. 20.

SUPPLE. adj. [souple, Fr.]

1. Pliant ; flexible.

The joints are more supple to all feats of activity in youth than afterwards.

Bacon.

Will ye submit your necks, and choose to bend

The supple knee ?

Milton, P. L.

And sometimes went, and sometimes ran,

With supple joints, as lively vigour led.

Milton, P. L.

No women are apter to spin linen well than the Irish, who labouring little in any kind with their hands, have their fingers more supple and soft than other women of the poorer condition in England,

Temple.

2. Yielding ; soft ; not obstinate.

When we've stuff'd

These pipes and these conveyances of blood
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls
Than in our priestlike fasts.

Shakspeare.

Ev'n softer than thy own, of suppler kind,

More exquisite of taste, and more than man refin'd.

Dryden.

If punishment reaches not the mind, and makes not the will supple, it hardens the offender.

Locke.

3. Flattering ; fawning ; bending.

There is something so supple and insinuating in this absurd unnatural doctrine, as makes it extremely agreeable to a prince's ear.

Addison.

4. That which makes supple.

Each part depriv'd of supple government,

Shall stiff, and stark, and cold appear, like death,

Shakspeare.

To SUPPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

pliantly.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

SUPPLEMENT. n. s. [supplement, Fr. supplementum,
Latin.]

1. Addition to any thing by which its defects are supplied.

Unto the word of God, being in respect of that end for which God ordained it, perfect, exact, and absolute in itself, we do not add reason as a supplement of any maim or defect therein, but as a necessary instrument, without which we could not reap by the Scripture's perfection that fruit and benefit which it yieldeth.

Hooker.

His blood will atone for our imperfection, his righteousness he imputed in supplement to what is lacking in ours.

Rogers.

Instructive satire, true to virtue's cause !

Young.

2. Store ; supply. Not in use.

We had not spent

Our ruddie wine a ship-board ; supplement

Of large sort, each man to his vessel drew.

Chapman.

SUPPLEMENTAL. } adj. [from supplement.] Addi-SUPPLEMENTARY. } tional ; such as may supply the place of what is lost or wanting.

Supplemental acts of state were made to supply defects of laws ; and so tonnage and poundage were collected.

Clarendon.

Divinity would not then pass the yard and loom, nor preaching be taken in as an easier supplementary trade, by those that disliked the pains of their own.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Provide his brood next Smithfield fair,

With supplemental hobby horses ;

And happy be their infant courses.

Prior.

SUPPLENESS. n. s. [souplesse, Fr. from supple.]

1. Pliantness ; flexibility ; readiness to take any form.

The fruit is of a pleasant taste, caused by the suppleness and gentleness of the juice, being that which maketh the boughs also so flexible.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Readiness of compliance ; facility.

Study gives strength to the mind, conversation grace ; the first apt to give stiffness, the other suppleness.

Temple.

A compliance and suppleness of their wills, being by a steady hand introduced by parents, will seem natural to them, preventing all occasions of struggling.

Locke.

SUPPLETORY. † adj. [from suppleo, Lat.] Brought in to fill up deficiencies.

I have partly from Prynne, partly from my own conjecture, supplied the mutilated places as well as I could ; but have included all such suppletory words in crotchets.

Wharton, Diary of Abp. Laud, p. 58.

SUPPLETORY. † n. s. [suppletorium, Lat.] That which is to fill up deficiencies.

They invent suppletories to excuse an evil man.

Society is preserved by mutual wants, the supplial of which causeth mutual happiness. Warburton, Sermon.

SUPPLI'ANCE.* n. s. [from supply.] Continuance.

A violet in the youth of primy nature,
Forward, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,
The perfume and suppliance of a minute. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

SUPPLIANT. adj. [suppliant, Fr.] Entreating; beseeching; precatory; submissive.

To those legions your levy
Must be suppliant. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

To bow and sue for grace with suppliant knee. Milton, P. L.

The rich grow suppliant, and the poor grow proud;
Those offer mighty gain, and these ask more. Dryden.

Constant to his first decree,
To bow the haughty neck, and raise the suppliant knee. Prior.

SUPPLIANT. n. s. [from the adjective.] An humble petitioner; one who begs submissively.

A petition from a Florentine I undertook,
Vanquish'd thereto by the fair grace and speech
Of the poor suppliant. Shakespeare.

Hourly suitors come:
The east with incense and the west with gold,
Will stand like suppliants to receive her doom. Dryden.
Spare this life, and hear thy suppliant's prayer. Dryden.

SUPPLIANTLY.* adv. [from suppliant.] In a submissive manner.

Can the man, whose breast glows with the least spark of gratitude, indulge these meditations, and not prostrate himself, with the deepest humiliation of soul, before the throne of grace, and suppliantly implore the divine mercy for his many and great sins? The Student, vol. i. p. 139.

SUPPLICANT. n. s. [supplicans, Lat.] One that entreats or implores with great submission; an humble petitioner.

The prince and people of Nineveh assembling themselves a main army of suplicants, God did not withstand them. Hooker.

The wise suppliant, though he prayed for the condition he thought most desirable, yet left the event to God. Rogers.
Abraham, instead of indulging the suppliant in his desire of new evidence, refers him to what his brethren had. Atterbury.

SUPPLICANT.* adj. [supplicans, Lat.] Entreating; submissively petitioning.

[They] offered to this council their letters suppliant, confessing that they had sinned. Bp. Bull on the Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome.

To SUPPLICATE. v. n. [supplior, Fr. supplicare, Lat. from supplex.] To implore; to entreat; to petition submissively and humbly.

Many things a man cannot with any comeliness say or do, a man cannot brook to supPLICATE or beg. Bacon.

Thither the kingdoms and the nations come,
In supplicating crowds to learn their doom. Addison.

SUPPLICAT'ION. n. s. [supplication, Fr. from supplicare.]

1. Petition humbly delivered; entreaty.

In supplication nod. Shakespeare, Coriol.

VOL. IV.

2. Petitionary worship; the adoration of a suppliant or petitioner.

Praying with all prayer and supplication, with 'all perseverance and supplication for all saints. Eph. vi. 18.

Bend thine ear

To supplication; hear his sighs though mute. Milton, P. L.

A second sort of publick prayer is, that all in a family that are members of it join in their common supplications.

Wh. Duty of Man.

These prove the common practice of the worship of images in the Roman church, as to the rites of supplication and adoration, to be as extravagant as among the heathens. Stillington.

We should testify our dependence upon God, and our confidence of his goodness, by constant prayers and supplications for mercy. Tillotson.

SUPPLICATORY.* adj. [from supplicate.] Petitionary.

All the skill of men and angels cannot afford a more exquisite model of supplicatory devotion, than that blessed Saviour of ours gave us in the Mount. Bp. Hall, Devout Soul, § 2.

If we except the Creeds, no part of the service was accompanied by musick, which was not either of the supplicatory or thanksgiving species. Mason on Ch. Musick, p. 110.

SUPPLI'ER.* n. s. [from supply.] One who supplies; one who makes up for an omission.

Saul might set up for a supplier of the default of Joshua and the princes of Israel in sparing the Gibeonites. Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bible.

To SUPPLY'. v. a. [suppleo, Lat. supplere, Fr.]

1. To fill up as any deficiencies happen.
Out of the fry of these rakehell horseboys are their kearn supplied and maintained. Spenser.

2. To give something wanted; to yield; to afford.
They were princes that had wives, sons, and nephews; and yet all these could not supply the comfort of friendship. Bacon.

I wanted nothing fortune could supply,
Nor did she slumber 'till that hour deny. Dryden.

3. To relieve with something wanted.
Although I neither lend nor borrow,
Yet, to supply the ripe wants of my friend,
I'll break a custom. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

4. To serve instead of.
Burning ships the banish'd sun supply,
And no light shines but that by which men die. Waller.

5. To give or bring, whether good or bad.
Nearer care supplies
Sighs to my breast, and sorrow to my eyes. Prior.

6. To fill any room made vacant.
Upstart creatures to supply our vacant room. Milton, P. L.
The sun was set; and Vesper, to supply
His absent beams, had lighted up the sky. Dryden.

7. To accommodate; to furnish.
While trees the mountain-tops with shades supply,
Your honour, name, and praise shall never die. Dryden.
The reception of light must be supplied by some open form of the fabrick. Wotton.
My lover, turning away several old servants, supplied me with others from his own house. Swift.

SUPPLY'. n. s. [from the verb.] Relief of want; cure of deficiencies.

I mean that now your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want. 2 Cor. viii. 14.

Art from that fund each just supply provides,
Works without show, and without pomp presides. Popc.

SUPPLY'MENT.* n. s. [from supply.] Prevention of deficiency. Not in use.

I will never fail
Beginning, nor supplyment. Shakespeare, Cymb.

To SUPPORT. v. a. [supporter, Fr. supportare, Ital.]

1. To sustain; to prop; to bear up.
Stooping to support each flower of tender stalk. Milton, P. L.

The palace built by Pícus, vast and proud,
Supported by a hundred pillars stood. Dryden.
The original community of all things appearing from this donation of God, the sovereignty of Adam, built upon his private dominion, must fall, not having any foundation to support it. Locke.

2. To endure any thing painful without being overcome.
Strongly to suffer and support our pains. Milton, P. L.
Could'st thou support that burden? Milton, P. L.
This fierce demeanour, and his insolence,
The patience of a god could not support. Dryden.

3. To endure; to bear.
She scarce awake her eyes could keep,
Unable to support the fumes of sleep. Dryden.
None can support a diet of flesh and water without acids, as salt, vinegar, and bread, without falling into a putrid fever. Arbuthnot.

4. To sustain; to keep from fainting.
With inward consolations recompens'd,
And oft supported. Milton, P. L.

SUPPO'RT.† n. s. [support, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Act or power of sustaining.
Though the idea we have of a horse or stone be but the collection of those several sensible qualities which we find united in them, yet, because we cannot conceive how they should subsist alone, we suppose them existing in and supported by some common subject, which support we denote by the name substance, though it be certain we have no clear idea of that support. Locke.

2. Prop; sustaining power.
3. Necessaries of life.
Theirs be the produce of the soil!
O may it still reward their toil!
Nor ever the defenceless train
Of clinging infants ask support in vain! Shenstone.

4. Maintenance; supply.
Let us next consider the ward, or person within age, for whose assistance and support these guardians are constituted by law. Blackstone.

SUPPO'RTABLE. adj. [supportable, Fr. from support.]
Tolerable; to be endured. It may be observed that Shakespeare accents the first syllable.

As great to me, as late; and, supportable
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker
Than you may call to comfort you. Shakespeare, Tempest.
Alterations in the project of uniting Christians might be very supportable, as things in their own nature indifferent.

I wish that whatever part of misfortunes they must bear, may be rendered supportable to them. Pope.

SUPPO'RTABLENESS.† n. s. [from supportable.] The state of being tolerable.

It hath an influence on the supportableness of the burthen.
Hammond, Works, iv. 477.

SUPPO'RTANCE.† } n. s. [from support; old French, SUPPORTA'TION. } supportation.] Maintenance; support. Both these words are obsolete.

Give some supportance to the bending twigs. Shakespeare.
His quarrel he finds scarce worth talking of, therefore draw for the supportance of his vow. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
The benefited subject should render some small portion of his gain, for the supportation of the king's expence. Bacon.
The firm promises and supportations of a faithful God.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 385.

SUPPO'RTER.† n. s. [from support.]

1. One that supports.
You must walk by us upon either hand,
And good supporters are you. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
Because a relation cannot be founded in nothing, and the thing here related as a supporter, or a support, is not represented to the mind by any distinct idea. Locke.
2. Prop; that by which any thing is borne up from falling.

The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured. Bacon.
We shall be discharged of our load; but you, that are designed for beams and supporters, shall bear. L'Estrange.
There is no loss of room at the bottom, as there is in a building set upon supporters. Mortimer.

3. Sustainer; comforter.
The saints have a companion and supporter in all their miseries. South.

4. Maintainer; defender.
The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute in great part to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Wotton.

Such propositions as these are competent to blast and defame any cause which requires such aids, and stands in need of such supporters. Hammond.

All examples represent ingratitude as sitting in its throne, with pride at its right hand, and cruelty at its left; worthy supporters of such a reigning impiety. South.

Love was no more, when loyalty was gone,
The great supporter of his awful throne. Dryden.

5. Supporters. [In heraldry.] Figures of beasts, birds, and sometimes of human beings, which support the arms.

More might be added of helms, crests, mantles, and supporters.
Camden.

Unless this should be esteemed a relick, I know of no other,
of this once magnificent monastery, except the rude capital of a pillar with a date in the stone-work 1484, surmounted by a stone-escocheon of arms with supporters, preserved in the Vicar's Garden at Ensham. Warton, Hist. of Kiddingdon, p. 14.

SUPPO'RTFUL.* adj. [support and full.] Abounding with support. Not used.

Upon the Eolian god's supportfull wings,
With chearefull shouts, they parted from the shore.
Mir. for Mag. p. 821.

SUPPO'RTMENT.* n. s. [from support.] Support. Obsolete.

Not taking effect by the supportment of Spain.
Wotton, Rem. p. 479.

Prelaty in her fleshly supportments, in her carnal doctrine of ceremony and tradition. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

SUPPO'SABLE. adj. [from suppose.] That may be supposed.

Invincible ignorance is, in the far greatest number of men, ready to be confronted against the necessity of their believing all the severals of any supposable catalogue. Hammond.

SUPPO'SAL. n. s. [from suppose.] Position without proof; imagination; belief.

Young Fortinbras,
Holding a weak supposal of our worth,
Thinks our state to be out of frame. Shakespeare.

Little can be looked for towards the advancement of natural theory, but from those that are likely to mend our prospect:
the defect of events, and sensible appearances, suffer us to proceed no further towards science, than to imperfect guesses and timorous supposals. Glanville, Scops. Pref.

When this comes, our former supposal of sufficient grace, as of the preaching of the word, and God's calls, are utterly at an end. Hammond.

Interest, with a Jew, never proceeds but upon supposal at least of a firm and sufficient bottom. South.

Artful men endeavour to entangle thoughtless women by bold supposals and offers. Richardson, Clarissa.

To SUPPO'SE. v. a. [supposer, Fr. suppono, Lat.]

1. To lay down without proof; to advance by way of argument or illustration without maintaining the truth of the position.

Where we meet with all the indications and evidences of such a thing as the thing is capable of, supposing it to be true, it must needs be very irrational to make any doubt of it.

2. To admit without proof.

This is to be entertained as a firm principle, that when we have as great assurance that a thing is, as we could possibly, supposing it were, we ought not to make any doubt of its existence. Tillotson.

Suppose some so negligent that they will not be brought to learn by gentle ways, yet it does not thence follow that the rough discipline of the cudgel is to be used to all. Locke.

3. To imagine; to believe without examination.

Tell false Edward, thy supposed king,
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers. Shakespeare.
Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the king's sons; for Ammon only is slain. 2 Sam. xiii. 32.

I suppose

We should compel them to a quick result. Milton, P. L.

4. To require as previous.

This supposeth something, without evident ground. Hale.

5. To make reasonably supposed.

One falsehood always supposes another, and renders all you can say suspected. Female Quixote.

6. To put one thing by fraud in the place of another. SUPPO'SE. n. s. [from the verb.] Supposition; position without proof; unevicenced conceit.

We come short of our suppose so far,
That after seven years' siege, yet Troy-walls stand. Shakespeare.
Is Egypt's safety, and the king's, and your's,
Fit to be trusted on a bare suppose
That he is honest? Dryden, Cleomenes.

SUPPO'SER. n. s. [from suppose.] One that supposes.

Thou hast by marriage made thy daughter mine,
While counterfeit supposers blear'd thine eyne. Shakespeare.

SUPPOSITION. n. s. [supposition, Fr. from suppose.] Position laid down; hypothesis; imagination yet unproved.

In saying he is a good man, understand me that he is sufficient; yet his means are in supposition. Shakespeare.

Sing, syren, for thyself, and I will dote;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lye;
And in that glorious supposition think

He gains by death, that hath such means to die. Shakespeare.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

Such an original irrealisable notion is neither requisite upon supposition of a Deity, nor is pretended to by religion. Bentley.

SUPPOSITIONAL.* adj. [from supposition.] Hypothetical.

Men and angels, indeed, have also a certain knowledge of future things, but it is not absolute, but only suppositional. South, Sermon ix. 327.

SUPPOSITIVIOUS. adj. [from suppositus, suppositivus, Latin.]

1. Not genuine; put by a trick into the place or character belonging to another.

The destruction of Mustapha was so fatal to Solyman's line, as the succession of the Turks from Solyman is suspected to be of strange blood; for that Selymus II. was thought to be supposititious. Bacon.

It is their opinion that no man ever killed his father; but that, if it should ever happen, the reputed son must have been illegitimate, supposititious, or begotten in adultery. Addison.

There is a Latin treatise among the supposititious pieces, ascribed to Athanasius. Waterland.

2. Supposed; imaginary; not real.

Some alterations in the globe tend rather to the benefit of the earth, and its productions, than their destruction, as all these supposititious ones manifestly would do. Woodward.

SUPPOSITIVIOUSLY.* adv. [from supposititious.] By supposition.

Suppositivously he derives it from the Lunæ Montes 15 degrees south. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 31.

SUPPOSITIVIOUSNESS. n. s. [from supposititious.] State of being counterfeit.

SUPPO'SITIVE.* adj. [from supposition.] Supposed; including a supposition.

You can infer from hence but only a suppositive necessity of having an infallible guide, and that grounded upon a false supposition. Chillingworth, Rel. of Prot. ch. 2. § 145.

Nor was his burial only represented typically, but foretold prophetically, both by a suppositive intimation, and by an express prediction. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

SUPPO'SITIVE.* n. s. What implies supposition: as, if.

The suppositives denote connection, but assert not actual existence; the positives imply both the one and the other. Harris, Hermes, B. 2. ch. 2.

SUPPO'SITIVELY. adv. [from suppose.] Upon supposition.

The unreformed sinner may have some hope suppositively, if he do change and repent: the honest penitent may hope positively. Hammond.

SUPPOSITORY. n. s. [suppositoire, Fr. suppositorium, Lat.] A kind of solid clyster.

Nothing relieves the head more than the piles, therefore suppositories of honey, aloes, and rock-salt ought to be tried. Arbuthnot.

To SUPPRESS. v. a. [supprimo, suppressus, Lat. supprimer, Fr.]

1. To crush; to overpower; to overwhelm; to subdue; to reduce from any state of activity or commotion.

Glo'ster would have armour out of the Tower,
To crown himself king and suppress the prince. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Every rebellion, when it is suppressed, doth make the subject weaker, and the prince stronger. Davies on Ireland.

Sir William Herbert, with a well armed and ordered company, set sharply upon them; and oppressing some of the forwardest of them by death, suppressed the residue by fear. Hayward.

2. To conceal; not to tell; not to reveal.

Things not reveal'd, which the invisible King,
Only omniscient, hath suppress'd in night. Milton, P. L.

Still she suppresses the name, and this keeps him in a pleasing suspense; and, in the very close of her speech, she indirectly mentions it. Broome on the Odyssey.

3. To keep in; not to let out.

Well did'st thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice;
For had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I fear we should have seen decypher'd there
More rancorous spight, more furious raging broils. Shakespeare.

SUPPRESSION. n. s. [suppression, Fr. suppressio, Lat. from suppress.]

1. The act of suppressing.

2. Not publication.

You may depend upon a suppression of these verses. Pope.

SUPPRESSIVE.* adj. [from suppress.] Suppressing; overpowering; concealing; keeping in.

Johnson gives us expressive and oppressive, but neither expressive nor suppressive, though proceeding as obviously from their respective sources. Seward, Lett. ii. 154.

SUPPRESSOR.† n. s. [from suppress.] One that suppresses, crushes, or conceals. Sherwood.

To SUPPURATE. v. a. [from pus puris, Lat. suppurar, Fr.] To generate pus or matter.

This disease is generally fatal: if it suppurates the pus, it is evacuated into the lower belly, where it produceth putrefaction. Arbuthnot on Diet.

To SUPPURATE. v. n. To grow to pus.

SUPPURATION. n. s. [suppuration, Fr. from suppurate.]

1. The ripening or change of the matter of a tumour into pus.

If the inflammation be gone too far towards a suppuration, then it must be promoted with suppuratives, and opened by incision. Wiseman.

This great attrition must produce a great propensity to the putrescent alkaline condition of the fluids, and consequently to suppurations. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. The matter suppurated.

The great physician of souls sometimes cannot cure without cutting us: sin has festered inwardly, and he must lance the imposthume, to let out death with the suppuration. South.

SUPPURATIVE.† adj. [suppuratif, Fr. from suppurate.] Digestive; generating matter.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

SUPPURATIVE.* n. s. A suppurating medicine.

If the inflammation be gone too far towards a suppuration, then it must be promoted with suppuratives, and opened by incision. Wiseman, Surgery.

SUPPUTATION. n. s. [supputation, Fr. supputo, Lat.]

Reckoning; account; calculation; computation.

From these differing properties of day and year arise difficulties in carrying on and reconciling the supputation of time in long measures. Holder on Time.

The Jews saw every day their Messiah still farther removed from them; that the promises of their doctors, about his speedy manifestations, were false; that the predictions of the prophets, whom they could now no longer understand, were covered with obscurity; that all the supputations of time either terminated in Jesus Christ, or were without a period. West.

To SUPPUTE. v. a. [from supputo, Lat.] To reckon; to calculate.

SUPPRA. [Latin.] In composition, signifies above, or before.

SUPRALAPSARIAN. } adj. [supra and lapsus, Latin.]
SUPRALAPSARY. } Antecedent to the fall of man.

SUPRALAPSARIAN.* n. s. One who maintains the supralapsarian doctrine.

The supralapsarians, with whom the object of the decree is homo conditus, man created, not yet fallen; and the sublapsarians, with whom it is man fallen, or the corrupt mass.

Hammond.

The supralapsarians think, that God does only consider his own glory in all that he does; and that whatever is done, arises, as from its first cause, from the decree of God; that, in this decree, God, considering only the manifestation of his own glory, intended to make the world, to put a race of men in it, to constitute them under Adam as their fountain and head; that he decreed Adam's sin, the lapse of his posterity, and Christ's death, together with the salvation or damnation of such as should be most for his glory; that to those, who were to be saved, he decreed to give such efficacious assistances, as should certainly put them in the way of salvation; and to those, whom he rejected, he decreed to give such assistances and means only, as should render them inexcusable; that all men do continue in a state of grace or of sin, and shall be saved or damned, according to that first decree.

Burnet on the 39 Articles, Art. 17.

SUPRAMUNDANE.* adj. [supra and mundane.] Above the world.

He that was in the form of God, clothed with all the majesty and glory of the supramundane life, yet emptied himself of all this unspeakable felicity, and took upon him the form of a servant.

Hallywell, Sav. of Souls, (1677,) p. 19.

Beings divine, supramundane, and unchangeable.

Harris, Three Treatises, Notes.

SUPRAVULGAR. adj. [supra and vulgar.] Above the vulgar.

None of these motives can prevail with a man to furnish himself with supravulgar and noble qualities. Collier.

SUPREMACY. n. s. [from supreme.] Highest place; highest authority; state of being supreme.

No appeal may be made unto any one of higher power, in as much as the order of your discipline admitteth no standing inequality of courts, no spiritual judge to have any ordinary superior on earth, but as many supremacies as there are parishes and several congregations. Hooker.

As we under heav'n are supreme head,
So, under him, that great supremacy,
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold.

Shakspeare, K. John.

I am asham'd that women
Should seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shakspeare.

Put to proof his high supremacy,
Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate. Milton, P. L.
Henry VIII. had no intention to change religion: he continued to burn protestants after he had cast off the pope's supremacy. Swift.

You're formed by nature for this supremacy, which is granted from the distinguishing character of your writing. Dryden.

From some wild curs that from their masters ran,
Abhorring the supremacy of man,
In woods and caves the rebel race began. Dryden.

Supremacy of nature, or supremacy of perfection, is to be possessed of all perfection, and the highest excellency possible. Waterland.

To deny him this supremacy is to dethrone the Deity, and give his kingdom to another. Rogers.

SUPREME. adj. [supremus, Lat.]

1. Highest in dignity; highest in authority. It may be observed, that superiour is used often of local elevation, but supreme only of intellectual or political.

As no man serveth God, and loveth him not; so neither can any man sincerely love God, and not extremely abhor that sin which is the highest degree of treason against the supreme Guide and Monarch of the whole world, with whose divine authority and power it investeth others. Hooker.

The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness. Shakspeare, Coriol.

My soul akes
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both. Shakspeare, Coriol.

This strength, the seat of Deity supreme. Milton, P. L.
The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees;
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.

2. Highest; most excellent.

No single virtue we could most commend,
Whether the wife, the mother, or the friend;
For she was all in that supreme degree,
That as no one prevail'd, so all was she. Dryden.
To him both heaven
The right had given;
And his own love bequeath'd supreme command. Dryden.

SUPREMEY. adv. [from the adjective.] In the highest degree.

The starving chemist in his golden views
Supremely blest, the poet in his muse. Pope.

SUR. [sur, Fr.] In composition, means upon or over and above.

SURADDITION. n. s. [sur and addition.] Something added to the name.

He serv'd with glory and admir'd success,
So gain'd the suraddition, Leonatus. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

SURAL. adj. [from sura, Lat.] Being in the calf of the leg.

He was wounded in the inside of the calf of his leg, into the sural artery. Wiseman, Surgery.

SURANCE. n. s. [from sure.] Warrant; security; assurance.

Give some surance that thou art revenge;
Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels. Shakspeare.

SURBASE.* n. s. [sur and base.] A kind of skirt, border, or moulding, above the base.

There is a double flight of steps, a rustic surbase. Pennant.

Round the hall, the oak's high surbase rears
The field-day triumphs of two hundred years. Langhorne.

SURBA'SED.* adj. [surbassé, Fr. "voute surbassée." Cotgrave.] Having a surbase or moulding.

The tomb — has a wide sur-based arch with scalloped ornaments. Gray, Lett. to Mason.

To SURBA'TE. v. a. [solbatir, Fr.] To bruise and batter the feet with travel; to harass; to fatigue.

Their march they continued all that night, the horsemen often alighting, that the foot might ride, and others taking many of them behind them; however they could not but be extremely weary and surbated. Clarendon.

Chalky land surbates and spoils oxen's feet. Mortimer.

SURBEAT.† } The participle passive of surbeat, which
SURBE.T. } Spenser and Hall have used for surbate.

A bear and tyger being met
In cruel fight on Lybick ocean wide,
Espy a traveller with feet surbet,
Whom they in equal prey hope to divide. Spenser, F. Q.
Along thy way thou canst not but descry
Fair glittering halls to tempt the hopeful eye;
Thy right eye 'gins to leap for vaine delight,
And surbeat toes to tickle at the sight. Bp. Hall, Sat. v. 2.

To SURCEA'SE. v. n. [sur and cesser, Fr. cesso, Latin.]

1. To be at an end; to stop; to cease; to be no longer in use or being.

Small favours will my prayers increase:
Granting my suit, you give me all;
And then my prayers must needs surcease;
For I have made your godhead fall. Donne.

2. To leave off; to practise no longer; to refrain finally.

To fly altogether from God, to despair, that creatures unworthy shall be able to obtain any thing at his hands, and under that pretence to surcease from prayers, as bootless or fruitless offices, were to him no less injurious than pernicious to our own souls. Hooker.

Nor did the British squadrons now surcease
To gall their foes o'erwhelm'd. Philips.
So pray'd he, whilst an angel's voice from high,
Bade him surcease to importune the sky. Harte.

To SURCEA'SE.† v. a. To stop; to put to an end.

All pain hath end, and every war hath peace;
But mine no price, nor prayer, may surcease. Spenser.
God, according to the wise and unsearchable economy of his dealing with sinners, after such an height of provocation, withdraws his grace, and surceases the operations of his spirit. South, Sermon. x. 323.

Abrogating or surceasing the judiciary power. Temple, Introd. Hist. Eng. p. 174.

SURCEA'SE. n. s. Cessation; stop.

It might very well agree with your principles, if your discipline were fully planted, even to send out your writs of surcease into all courts of England for the most things handled in them. Hooker.

To SURCHA'RGE. v. a. [surcharger, Fr.] To overload; to overburthen.

They put upon every portion of land a reasonable rent, which they called Romescot, the which might not surcharge the tenant or freeholder. Spenser on Ireland.

Tamas was returned to Tauris, in hope to have suddenly surprised his enemy, surcharged with the pleasures of so rich a city. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

More remov'd,
Lest heaven surcharg'd with potent multitude,
Might hap to move new broils. Milton, P. L.

He ceas'd, discerning Adam with such joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears Without the vent of words. Milton, P. L.

When graceful sorrow in her pomp appears,
Sure she is dress'd in Melesinda's tears:

Your head reclin'd, as hiding grief from view,
Droops like a rose surcharg'd with morning dew. Dryden.

SURCHA'RGE. n. s. [surcharge, Fr. from the verb.] Burthen added to burthen; overburthen; more than can be well borne.

The air, after receiving a charge, doth not receive a surcharge, or greater charge, with like appetite as it doth the first. Baron, Nat. Hist.

An object of surcharge or excess destroyeth the sense; as the light of the sun, the eye; a violent sound near the ear, the hearing. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The moralists make this raging of a lion to be a surcharge of one madness upon another. L'Esrange.

SURCHA'RGER. n. s. [from surcharge.] One that overburthens.

SURC'INGLE. n. s. [sur and cingulum, Lat.]

1. A girth with which the burthen is bound upon a horse.

2. The girdle of a cassock.
Justly he chose the surcingle and gown. Marvel.

SURC'INGLED.* adj. [from the noun.] Girt.

Is't not a shame to see each homely groom
Sit perched in an idle chariot roome,
That were not meete some pannel to bestride,
*Surcingle*d to a galled hackney's hide? Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 6.

SUR'CLE. n. s. [surculus, Lat.] A shoot; a twig; a sucker. Not in general use.

It is an arboreous excrescence, or superplant, which the tree cannot assimilate, and therefore sprouteth not forth in boughs and surcles of the same shape unto the tree. Brown.

The basilica dividing into two branches below the cubit, the outward sendeth two surcles unto the thumb. Brown.

SUR'COAT. n. s. [surcot, old French; sur and coat.] A short coat worn over the rest of the dress.

The honourable habiliments, as robes of state, parliament-robes, the surcoat, and mantle. Camden.

The commons were besotted in excess of apparel, in wide surcoats reaching to their loins. Camden.

That day in equal arms they fought for fame;
Their swords, their shields, their surcoats were the same. Dryden.

SURCREW.* n. s. [sur and crew.] Augmentation; additional collection. Not in use.

It [a fever] had once left me, as I thought; but it was only to fetch more company, returning with a surcrew of those splenetick vapours that are called hypochondriacal. Wotton, Rem. p. 361.

To SURCULATE.* v. a. [surculo, Lat.] To prune; to cut off young shoots. Cockeram.

SURCULATION.* n. s. [from surculate.] The act of pruning.

When insition and grafting, in the text, is applied unto the olive tree, it hath an emphatical sense, very agreeable unto that tree, which is best propagated this way; not at all by surculation. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 47.

SURD.† adj. [surdus, Lat. sourd, Fr.]

1. Deaf; wanting the sense of hearing.

He who hath had the patience of Diogenes, to make orations unto statues, may more sensibly apprehend how all words fall to the ground, spent upon such a surd and earless generation of men, stupid unto all instruction, and rather requiring an exorcist than an orator for their conversion. Brown, Chr. Morals, ii. 6.

2. Unheard; not perceived by the ear.

3. Not expressed by any term.

SURDNU'MBER. n. s. [from surd and number.] That is incommensurate with unity.

SUR'DITY.† n. s. [from surd.] Deafness. Cockeram.

SURE. adj. [seure, Fr.]

1. Certain; unfailing; infallible.

The testimony of the Lord is sure, and giveth wisdom unto the simple. Ps. xix. 7.

Who knows,
Let this be good, whether our angry foe
Can give it, or will ever? How he can
Is doubtful, that he never will, is sure. Milton, P. L.

2. Certainly doomed.

Our coin beyond sea is valued according to the silver in it :
sending it in bullion is the safest way, and the weightiest is sure to go. Locke.

3. Confident; undoubting; certainly knowing.

Friar Laurence met them both ;
Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she ;
But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it. Shakspeare.
Let no man seek what may befall ;
Evil he may be sure. Milton, P. L.

The youngest in the morning are not sure
That till the night their life they can secure. Denham.

While sore of battle, while our wounds are green,
Why would we tempt the doubtful dye agen ?
In wars renew'd, uncertain of success,
Sure of a share, as umpires of the peace. Dryden.
If you find nothing new in the matter, I am sure much less will you in the stile. Wake.

Be silent always, when you doubt your sense ;
And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence. Pope.

4. Safe; firm; certain; past doubt or danger. To make sure is to secure, so as that nothing shall put it out of one's possession or power.

Thy kingdom shall be sure unto thee, after that thou shalt have known that the Heavens do rule. Dan. iv. 26.
He had me make sure of the bear, before I sell his skin. L' Estrange.

They would make others on both sides sure of pleasing, in preference to instruction. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

They have a nearer and surer way to the felicity of life, by tempering their passions, and reducing their appetites. Temple.

A peace cannot fail, provided we make sure of Spain. Temple.

Revenge is now my joy ; he's not for me,
And I'll make sure he ne'er shall be for thee. Dryden.
I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
All to make sure the vengeance of this day,
Which even this day has ruin'd. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Make Cato sure, and give up Utica,
Cæsar will ne'er refuse thee such a trifle. Addison.
They have reason to make all actions worthy of observation, which are sure to be observed. Atterbury.

5. Firm; stable; steady; not liable to failure.

Thou the garland wear'st successively ;
Yet though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,
Thou art not firm enough. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
I wish your horses swift and sure of foot,
And so I do commend you to their backs. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I wrapt in sure bands both their hands and feet,
And cast them under hatches. Chapman.

Virtue, dear friend, needs no defence ;
The surest guard is innocence. Roscommon.

Partition firm and sure the waters to divide. Milton, P. L.
Doubting thus of innate principles, men will call pulling up the old foundations of knowledge and certainty : I persuade myself that the way I have pursued, being conformable to truth, lays those foundations surer. Locke.

To prove a genuine birth,
On female truth assenting faith relies :
Thus manifest of right, I build my claim,
Sure founded on a fair maternal fame. Pope, Odys.

6. To be SURE. Certainly. This is a vicious expression : more properly be sure.

Objects of sense would then determine the views of all such, to be sure, who conversed perpetually with them. Atterbury.

Though the chymist could not calcine the caput mortuum, to obtain its fixed salt, to be sure it must have some. Arbuthnot.

SURE. adv. [surement, French.] Certainly ; without doubt ; doubtless. It is generally without emphasis ; and, notwithstanding its original meaning, expresses rather doubt than assertion.

Something, sure, of state
Hath puddled his clear spirit. Shakspeare.

Her looks were flush'd, and sullen was her mien,
That sure the virgin goddess, had she been Aught but a virgin, must the guilt have seen. Addison.

Sure the queen would wish him still unknown :
She loaths, detests him, flies his hated presence. Smith.

Sure, upon the whole, a bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic. Pope.

SUREFOOTED. adj. [sure and foot.] Treading firmly ;
not stumbling.

True earnest sorrows, rooted miseries,
Anguish in grain, vexations ripe and blown,
Surefooted griefs, solid calamities. Herbert.

SURELY. adv. [from sure.]

1. Certainly ; undoubtedly ; without doubt. It is often used rather to intend and strengthen the meaning of the sentence, than with any distinct and explicable meaning.

In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die. Genesis.

Thou surely hadst not come sole fugitive. Milton, P. L.
He that created something out of nothing, surely can raise great things out of small. South.

The curious have thought the most minute affairs of Rome worth notice ; and surely the consideration of their wealth is at least of as great importance as grammatical criticisms. Arbuthnot.

Surely we may presume, without affecting to sit in the seat of God, to think some very fallible men liable to errors. Waterland.

2. Firmly ; without hazard.

He that walketh uprightly, walketh surely. Proverbs.

SURENESS. n. s. [from sure.] Certainty.

The subtle ague, that for sureness sake
Takes its own time th' assault to make. Cowley.
He diverted himself with the speculation of the seed of coral ; and for more sureness he repeats it. Woodward.

SURETISHIP. n. s. [from surety.] The office of a surety or bondsman ; the act of being bound for another.

Idly, like prisoners, which whole months will swear
That only suretiship hath brought them there. Donne.

If here not clear'd, no suretiship can bail
Condemned debtors from th' eternal gaol. Denham.

Hath not the greatest slaughter of armies been effected by stratagem ? And have not the fairest estates been destroyed by suretiship ? South.

SURETY. n. s. [sureté, Fr.]

1. Certainty ; indubitableness.

Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger. Gen. xv.

2. Security ; safety.

There the princesses determining to bathe, thought it was so privileged a place as no body durst presume to come thither ;
yet, for the more surety, they looked round about. Sidney.

3. Foundation of stability ; support.

We our state
Hold, as you your's, while our obedience holds :
On other surety none. Milton, P. L.

4. Evidence ; ratification ; confirmation.

She call'd the saints to surety,
That she would never put it from her finger,
Unless she gave it to yourself. Shakspeare.

5. Security against loss or damage ; security for payment.

There remains unpaid
A hundred thousand more, in surety of the which
One part of Acquitain is bound to us. Shakspeare.

6. Hostage; bondsman; one that gives security for another; one that is bound for another.

That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you,
One of the greatest in the Christian world
Shall be my surety. Shakspeare, All's Well.

I will be surety for him; of my hand shalt thou require him.
Gen. xliii. 9.

Yet be not surety, if thou be a father;
Love is a personal debt: I cannot give
My children's right, nor ought he take it. Herbert.

All, in infancy, are by others presented with the desires of the parents, and intercession of sureties, that they may be early admitted by baptism into the school of Christ. Hammond.

SURF.* n. s. [probably from the French surflot, "the rising of billow upon billow, or the interchanged swelling of several waves." Cotgrave.] The swell or dashing of the sea that beats against rocks or the shore.

Swell is more particularly applied to the fluctuating motion of the sea, which remains after the expiration of a storm; and also to that which breaks on the shore, or on rocks and shallows, called surf. Falconer.

SURFACE.† n. s. [surface, old Fr. sur and face.
Milton, as Dr. Johnson has observed, places the accent on the last syllable; and the poet's word is the earliest of his examples. I find it in use about half a century earlier, where it is written sur-face.
Shakspeare has not this word.] Superficies; outside;
superfice.

With several medicines the body of the earth is so every where replenished, yea and the sur-face of it so every where overstrewed. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 254.

Which of us who beholds the bright surface
Of this ethereal mold, whereon we stand. Milton, P. L.

Errors like straws upon the surface flow;
He who would search for pearls must dive below. Dryden.

All their surfaces shall be truly plain, or truly spherical, and look all the same way, so as together to compose one even surface. Newton, Opt.

TO SURFEIT. v. a. [from sur and faire, French, to do more than enough, to overdo.] To feed with meat or drink to satiety and sickness; to cram over-much.

The surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snores. Shakspeare.

TO SURFEIT. v. n. To be fed to satiety and sickness.

They are as sick that surfeit with too much, as they that starve with nothing. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Take heed lest your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness. St. Luke, xxi. 34.

Though some had so surfeited in the vineyards, and with the wines, that they had been left behind, the generosity of the Spaniards sent them all home. Clarendon.

They must be let loose to the childish play they fancy, which they should be weaned from, by being made to surfeit of it.
Locke.

SURFEIT. n. s. [from the verb.] Sickness or satiety caused by overfulness.

When we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon and stars. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

How ill white hairs become a fool and jester!
I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
So surfeit swell'd, so old, and so profane. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made;
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Why, disease, dost thou molest
Ladies, and of them the best?
Do not men grow sick of rites,
To thy altars, by their nights
Spent in surfeits? B. Jonson.

Surfeits many times turn to purges, both upwards and downwards. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Peace, which he lov'd in life, did lend
Her hand to bring him to his end;
When age and death call'd for the score,
No surfeits were to reckon for. Crashaw.

Our father
Has ta'en himself a surfeit of the world,
And cries, it is not safe that we should taste it. Otway.

SURFEITER. n. s. [from surfeit.] One who riots; a glutton.

I did not think
This am'rous surfeiter would have donn'd his helm
For such a petty war. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

SURFEITING.* n. s. [from surfeit.] The act of feeding with meat or drink to satiety and sickness.

Kill not her quickening power with surfeittings;
Mar not her sense with sensuality. Davies.

SURFEITWATER. n. s. [surfeit and water.] Water that cures surfeits.

A little cold distilled poppywater, which is the true surfeit- water, with ease and abstinence, often ends distempers in the beginning. Locke.

SURGE. n. s. [from surgo, Lat.] A swelling sea; wave rolling above the general surface of the water;
billow; wave.

The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unrul'd and undirected of any. Spenser.

The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous main
Seems to cast water on the burning bear,
And quench the guards of the ever-fired pole:
I never did like molestation view
On the enshafed flood. Shakspeare.

He trod the water,
Whose enmity he flung aside, and breasted
The surge most swoln that met him. Shakspeare, Tempest.

It was formerly famous for the unfortunate loves of Hero and Leander, drowned in the uncompassionate surges. Sandys.

The sulph'rous hail
Shot after us in storm, o'erblown, hath laid
The fiery surge, that from the precipice
Of heaven receiv'd us falling. Milton, P. L.

He sweeps the skies, and clears the cloudy North:
He flies aloft, and with impetuous roar
Pursues the foaming surges to the shore. Dryden.

Thetis, near Ismena's swelling flood,
With dread beheld the rolling surges sweep
In heaps his slaughter'd sons into the deep. Pope.

TO SURGE. v. n. [from surgo, Lat.] To swell; to rise high.

From midst of all the main
The surging waters like a mountain rise. Spenser.

He, all in rage, his sea-god sire besought,
Some cursed vengeance on his son to cast;
From surging gulfs two monsters straight were brought. Spenser.

The serpent mov'd, not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear,
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd
Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton, P. L.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, the assault renew,
Vain battery, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton, P. R.

SURGELESS.* adj. [surge and less.] Without surges; calm.

In surgeless seas of quiet rest when I
Seven yeares had sail'd, a pirrie did arise,
The blasts whereof abridg'd my libertie. Mir. for Mag. p. 194.

SURGEON.† n. s. [Corrupted by conversation from chirurgion. Dr. Johnson. — Surgeon is a very old English word; and is no doubt adopted from the ancient French, surgien.] One who cures by manual operation; one whose duty is to act in external maladies by the direction of the physician.

The wound was past the cure of a better surgeon than myself, so as I could but receive some few of her dying words.
Sidney.

I meddle with no woman's matters; but withal, I am a surgeon to old shoes. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

He that hath wounded his neighbour is tied to the expences of the surgeon, and other incidences. Bp. Taylor.

Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain:

The surgeons soon despoil'd them of their arms,

And some with salves they cure.

Dryden.

SURGEONRY. } n. s. [for chirurgery.] The act of cur-
SURGERY. } ing by manual operation.

It would seem very evil surgery to cut off every unsound part of the body, which, being by other due means recovered, might afterwards do good service. Spenser.

Strangely visited people,

The mere despair of surgery he cures. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

They are often tarr'd over with the surgery of our sheep, and would you have us kiss tar? Shakspeare.

SURGICAL.* adj. Pertaining to the art and skill of a surgeon; chirurgical.

SURGY. adj. [from surge.] Rising in billows.

Do publick or domestick cares constrain

This toilsome voyage o'er the surgy main?

Pope.

SURLILY.† adv. [from surly.] In a surly manner.

Sherwood.

They were both hastily passionate; he was sometimes surlily ill-natured, while she was apt to conceive what he never intended. The Student, vol. ii. p. 102.

SURLINESS.† n. s. [from surly.] Gloomy moroseness; sour anger.

Lycurgus — sent the poet Thales from Crete to prepare and mollify the Spartan surliness with his smooth songs and odes.

Milton, Areopagitica.

Thus pale they meet; their eyes with fury burn;

None greets; for none the greeting will return;

But in dumb surliness, each arm'd with care

His foe profest, as brother of the war.

Dryden.

SURLING. n. s. [from surly.] A sour morose fellow. Not used.

As for these sour surlings, they are to be commended to sieur Gaulard. Camden, Rem.

SURLY.† adj. [from rup, sour, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Or rather, perhaps, from the old Fr. sural, the same.] Gloomily morose; rough; uncivil; sour; silently angry.

'Tis like you'll prove a jolly surly groom,

That take it on you at the first so roundly.

Shakspeare.

That surly spirit, melancholy,

Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy thick,

Which else runs tickling up and down the veins,

Making that idiot laughter keep men's eyes,

And strain their cheeks to idle merriment. Shakspeare, K. John.

Against the Capitol I met a lion,

Who glar'd upon me, and went surly by,

Without annoying me.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

If a man be harsh or surly in his discourse, rugged or rude in his demeanour, hard and rigorous in his dealing, it is a certain argument of his defect in charity. Barrow, Sermon i. 335.

Repuls'd by surly grooms, who wait before

The sleeping tyrant's interdicted door.

Dryden.

What if among the courtly tribe,

You lost a place, and sav'd a bribe?

And then in surly mood came here

To fifteen hundred pounds a year,

And fierce against the Whigs harangu'd?

Swift.

The zephyrs floating loose, the timely rains,

Now soften'd into joy the surly storms.

Thomson.

SURMISAL.* n. s. [from surmise.] Imperfect notion; surmise.

From this needless surmisal I shall hope to dissuade the intelligent and equal auditor. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

To SURMISE. v. a. [surmise, French.] To suspect; to image imperfectly; to imagine without certain knowledge.

Man coveteth what exceedeth the reach of sense, yea somewhat above capacity of reason, somewhat divine and heavenly, which with hidden exultation it rather surmiseth than con-ceiveth; somewhat it seeketh, and what that is directly it knoweth not; yet very intensive desire thereof doth so incite it, that all other known delights and pleasures are laid aside, and they give place to the search of this but only suspected desire. Hooker.

Of questions and strifes of words cometh envy, railings, and evil surmisings. 1 Tim. vi. 4.

Surmise not

His presence to these narrow bounds confin'd. Milton, P. L.

It wafted nearer yet, and then she knew

That what before she but surmis'd, was true.

Dryden.

This change was not wrought by altering the form or position of the earth, as was surmised by a very learned man, but by dissolving it. Woodward.

SURMISE. n. s. [surmise, French.] Imperfect notion; suspicion; imagination not supported by knowledge.

To let go private surmises, whereby the thing itself is not made better or worse; if just and allowable reasons might lead them to do as they did, then are these censures frustrate.

Hooker.

They were by law of that proud tyranness,

Provok'd with wrath, and envy's false surmise,

Condemned to that dungeon merciless,

Where they should live in woe, and die in wretchedness.

Spenser.

My compassionate heart

Will not permit my eyes once to behold

The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise.

Shakspeare.

My thought, whose murdering yet is but fantastical,

Shakes so my single state of man, that function

Is smother'd in surmise.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

No sooner did they espy the English turning from them, but they were of opinion that they fled towards their shipping: this surmise was occasioned, for that the English ships removed the day before.

Hayward.

We double honour gain

From his surmise prov'd false.

Milton, P. L.

Hence guilty joys, distastes, surmises,

False oaths, false tears, deceipts, disguises.

Pope.

No man ought to be charged with principles he actually disowns, unless his practices contradict his profession; not upon small surmises.

Swift.

SURMISER.* n. s. [from surmise.] One who surmises.

I should first desire these surmisers to point out the time when, and the persons who began this design.

Lively Oracles, &c. (1678,) p. 37.

To SURMOUNT. v. a. [surmonter, French.]

1. To rise above.

The mountains of Olympus, Atho, and Atlas, over-reach and surmount all winds and clouds. Raleigh.

2. To conquer; to overcome.

Though no resistance was made, the English had much ado to surmount the natural difficulties of the place the greatest part of one day. Hayward.

He hardly escaped to the Persian court; from whence, if the love of his country had not surmounted its base ingratitude to him, he had many invitations to return at the head of the Persian fleet; but he rather chose a voluntary death. Swift.

3. To surpass; to exceed.

What surmounts the reach

Of human sense, I shall delineate so,

By lik'ning spiritual to corporeal forms,

As may express them best.

Milton, P. L.

SURMOUNTABLE.† adj. [surmontable, old Fr.] Conquerable; superable.

SURMOUNTER. n. s. [from surmount.] One that rises above another.

SURMOUNTING. n. s. The act of getting uppermost.

SURMULLET. n. s. [mugil, Lat.] A sort of fish.

Ainsworth.

SURNAME.† n. s. [surnom, French.] "It is a great dispute whether we should write surname or sirname: on the one hand, there are a thousand instances in court-rolls, and other ancient muniments, where the description of the person, le Smyth, le Tayleur, &c. is written over the Christian name of the person, this only being inserted in the line; and the French always write surnom. And certainly surname must be the truth, in regard of the patriarch or first person that bore the name. However, there is no impropriety, at this time of day, to say sirname, since these additions are so apparently taken from our sires or fathers. Thus the matter seems to be left to people's option." Pegge, Anonym. iii. 32.]

1. The name of the family; the name which one has over and above the Christian name.

Many which are mere English joined with the Irish against the king, taking on them Irish habits and customs, which could never since be cleau wiped away; of which sort be most of the surnames that end in an, as Hernan, Shinan, and Mungan, which now account themselves natural Irish. Spenser.

He, made heir not only of his brother's kingdom, but of his virtues and haughty thoughts, and of the surname also of Barbarossa, began to aspire to the empire. Knolles, Hist.

The epithets of great men, monsieur Boileau is of opinion, were in the nature of surnames, and repeated as such. Pope.

2. An appellation added to the original name.

Witness may

My surname Coriolanus: the painful service,
The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood
Shed for my thankless country, are requited
But with that surname.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

To SURNAME. v. a. [surnommer, Fr. from the noun.] To name by an appellation added to the original name.

Another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and surname himself by the name of Israel. Isa. xlv. 5.

Pyreicus, only famous for counterfeiting earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, was sirnamed Rupographus. Peacham on Drawing.

How he, surnam'd of Africa, dismiss'd
In his prime youth the fair Iberian maid. Milton, P. R.

God commanded man what was good; but the devil surnamed it evil, and thereby baffled the command. South.

To SURPASS. v. a. [surpasser, Fr.] To excel; to exceed; to go beyond in excellence.

The climate's delicate,
Fertile the isle, the temple much surpassing
The common praise it bears. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

SUSCEPTIVE.† adj. [from susceptus, Lat.] This word is more analogical, though less used than susceptible.
 Dr. Johnson. — The word is old; and I should suppose in common use. Dr. Johnson produces no other authority than the comparatively modern one of Watts.] Capable to admit.

The limiter of this susceptive power unto the matter, in such differing degrees, and measures, and manners, can be none other but only that Omnipotent Creator of the matter.

Fotherby, Alheom. (1622), p. 181.

Our plea was, that we had neither a decisive voice to determine with them; nor a deliberative voice to consult with them; nor an elective voice in choice of their persons, to make them our trustees to determine for us; nor lastly, as at least we should have, a susceptive voice, in a body of our own to receive their resolutions, and of ourselves to submit unto them.

Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 91.

Since our nature is so susceptive of errors on all sides, it is fit we should have notices given us how far other persons may become the causes of false judgments. Watts, Logick.

SUSCEPTIVITY.* n. s. [from susceptive.] Capability of admitting.

Nor can we have any idea of matter, which does not imply a natural discernibility, and susceptivity of various shapes and modifications. Wollaston, § v. 11.

SUSCEPTOR.* n. s. [susceptor, Lat.] One who undertakes; a godfather. Coles.

In our church, those who are not secular persons, are not forbid to be godfathers, (as in the church of Rome,) nor are any susceptors supposed to contract any affinity, as that such an undertaking should hinder marriage between the sponsors and the persons baptized, if otherwise it be lawful.

Fuller, Moder. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 281.

SUSCIPENCY. n. s. [from suscipiens.] Reception; admission.

SUSCIPIENT.† n. s. [suscipiens, Lat.] One who takes; one that admits or receives.

5. To keep undetermined.

A man may suspend his choice from being determined for or against the thing proposed, till he has examined whether it be really of a nature to make him happy or no. Locke.

6. To debar for a time from the execution of an office or enjoyment of a revenue.

Good men should not be suspended from the exercise of their ministry, and deprived of their livelihood for ceremonies, which are on all hands acknowledged indifferent. Sanderson.

The bishop of London was summoned for not suspending Dr. Sharp. Swift.

SUSPENDER.* n. s. [from suspend.] One who suspends or delays.

I may add the cautiousness of suspenders and not forward concluders. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625), p. 146.

SUSPENSE. n. s. [suspens, Fr. suspensus, Lat.]

1. Uncertainty; delay of certainty or determination; indetermination.

Till this be done, their good affection towards the safety of the church is acceptable; but the way they prescribe us to preserve it by, must rest in suspense. Hooker.

Such true joy's suspense
What dream can I present to recompense? Waller.

Ten days the prophet in suspense remain'd,
Would no man's fate pronounce; at last constrain'd
By Ithacus, he solemnly design'd
Me for the sacrifice. Denham.

2. Act of withholding the judgement.

In propositions, where though the proofs in view are of most moment, yet there are sufficient grounds to suspect that there is fallacy, or proofs as considerable to be produced on the contrary side, there suspense or dissent are often voluntary. Locke.

Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, deliberation, and scrutiny, whether its satisfaction misleads from our true happiness. Locke.

3. Stop in the midst of two opposites.

For thee the fates, severely kind, ordain
A cool suspense from pleasure or from pain. Pope.

SUSPENSE. adj. [suspensus, Lat.]

1. Held from proceeding.

The great light of day yet wants to run
Much of his race, though steep, suspense in heaven
Held by thy voice. Milton, P. L.

2. Held in doubt; held in expectation.

The self-same orders allowed, but yet established in more wary and suspense manner, as being to stand in force till God should give the opportunity of some general conference what might be best for every of them afterwards to do; had both prevented all occasions of just dislike which others might take, and reserved a greater liberty unto the authors themselves, of entering unto further consultation afterwards. Hooker.

This said, he sat; and expectation held
His looks suspense, awaiting who appear'd
To second or oppose. Milton, P. L.

SUSPENSION.† n. s. [suspension, Fr. from suspend.]

1. Act of making to hang on any thing.

True and formal crucifixion is often named by the general word suspension. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

2. Act of making to depend on any thing.

3. Act of delaying.

Had we had time to pray,
With thousand vows and tears we should have sought,
That sad decree's suspension to have wrought. Waller.

4. Act of withholding or balancing the judgement.

In his Indian relations, wherein are contained incredible accounts, he is surely to be read with suspension; these are they which weakened his authorities with former ages, for he is seldom mentioned without derogatory parentheses. Brown.

The mode of the will, which answers to dubitation, may be called suspension; and that which in the fantastick will is obstinacy, is constancy in the intellectual. Grew.

5. Interruption; temporary cessation.

Nor was any thing done for the better adjusting things in the time of that suspension, but every thing left in the same state of unconcernedness as before. Clarendon.

6. Temporary privation of an office: as, the clerk incurred suspension.

SUSPENSIVE.* adj. [from suspense.] Doubtful. An old and elegant word.

Psyche, snatch'd from danger's desperate jaws
Into the arms of this illustrious lover,
The truth of her condition hardly knows,
But in suspensive thoughts awhile doth hover. Beaumont, Psyche, (1651), p. 18.

SUSPENSORY.† adj. [suspensoire, French; suspensus, Latin.]

1. Suspending; belonging to that by which a thing hangs.

The crowns and garlands of the ancients were—pensile or suspensory, such as they hanged about the posts of their houses in honour of their gods. Brown, Miscell. p. 90.

There are several parts peculiar to brutes which are wanting in man, as the seventh or suspensory muscle of the eye. Ray.

2. Doubtful.

This moves sober pens unto suspensory and timorous assertions. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 4.

SUSPICABLE.* adj. [from suspicio, Lat.] That may be suspected; liable to suspicion.

I look upon these two last cures as done out of susplicable principles and upon extravagant objects. More, Myst. of Godl. (1660), p. 141.

SUSPICION. n. s. [suspicion, Fr. suspicio, Latin.]

The act of suspecting; imagination of something ill without proof.

This suspicion Miso for the hoggish shrewdness of her brain, and Mopsa for a very unlikely envy stumbled upon. Sidney.
Suspensions amongst thoughts are like bats amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight; they are to be repressed, or at the least well guarded, for they cloud the mind. Bacon.

Suspicion all our lives shall be stuck full of eyes ;
For treason is but trusted like a fox,
Who ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors. Shakspeare.
Though wisdom wake, suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate; and to simplicity
Resigns her charge, while goodness thinks no ill
Where no ill seems. Milton, P. L.

SUSPICIOUS. adj. [suspiciosus, Lat.]

1. Inclined to suspect; inclined to imagine ill without proof.

Nature itself, after it has done an injury, will for ever be suspicious, and no man can love the person he suspects. South.

2. Indicating suspicion or fear.

A wise man will find us to be rogues by our faces; we have a suspicious, fearful, constrained countenance, often turning and slinking through narrow lanes. Swift.

3. Liable to suspicion; giving reason to imagine ill.

They, because the light of his candle too much drowned theirs, were glad to lay hold on so colourable matter, and exceeding forward to traduce him as an author of suspicious innovations. Hooker.

I spy a black suspicious threatening cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun. Shakspeare.

Authors are suspicious, nor greedily to be swallowed, who pretend to deliver antipathies, sympathies, and the occult abstrusities of things. Brown, Vulg. Err.

His life
Private, unactive, calm, contemplative,
Little suspicious to any king. Milton, P. R.

Many mischievous insects are daily at work, to make people of merit suspicious of each other. Pope.

SUSPICIOUSLY. adv. [from suspicious.]

1. With suspicion.

2. So as to raise suspicion.

His guard entering the place, found Plangus with his sword in his hand, but not naked, but standing suspiciously enough, to one already suspicious. Sidney.

SUSPICIOUSNESS. † n. s. [from suspicious.] Tendency to suspicion.

To make my estate known seemed impossible, by reason of the suspiciousness of Miso, and my young mistress. Sidney.

Suspiciousness is as great an enemy to wisdom, as too much credulity; it doing oftentimes as hurtful wrongs to friends, as the other doth receive wrongful hurt from dissemblers.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 251.

SUSPIRAL.* n. s. [from suspire.] A spring of water passing under ground towards a conduit or cistern; also, a breathing-hole or ventiduct. Chambers.

SUSPIRATION. n. s. [suspiratio, from suspiro, Latin.]

Sigh; act of fetching the breath deep.

Not customary suits of solemn black,
Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath
That can denote me truly. Shakspeare.

In deep suspirations we take more large gulphs of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love or sorrow. More.

To SUSPIRE. † v. n. [suspiro, Lat.]

1. To sigh; to fetch the breath deep.

2. To breathe.

Since the birth of Cain, the first male child,
To him that did but yesterday suspire,
There was not such a gracious creature born.

Shakspeare, K. John.

By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather which stirs not:
Did he suspire, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

SUSPIRED.* part. adj. Wished for; desired earnestly: a latinism.

O glorious morning, wherein was born the expectation of nations; and wherein the long suspired Redeemer of the world did, as his prophets had cried, rent the heavens, and come down in the vesture of humanity! Wotton, Rem. p. 269.

To SUSTAIN. v. a. [soustenir, Fr. sustineo, Lat.]

1. To bear; to prop; to hold up.

The largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude. More.

Vain is the force of man,

To crush the pillars that the pile sustain. Dryden, Æn.

2. To support; to keep from sinking under evil.

The admirable curiosity and singular excellency of this design will sustain the patience, and animate the industry of him who shall undertake it. Holder.

If he have no comfortable expectations of another life to sustain him under the evils in this world, he is of all creatures the most miserable. Tillotson.

3. To maintain; to keep.

What food

Will he convey up thither to sustain
Himself and army?

Milton, P. L.

But it on her, not she on it depends;

For she the body doth sustain and cherish.

Davies.

My labour will sustain me.

Milton, P. L.

4. To help; to relieve; to assist.

They charged on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to entreat for him, or any way sustain him. Shakspeare.

His sons who seek the tyrant to sustain,

And long for arbitrary lords again,

He dooms to death, asserting publick right.

Dryden, Æn.

5. To bear; to endure.

Can Ceyx then sustain to leave his wife,
And unconcern'd forsake the sweets of life?

Dryden.

Shall Turnus then such endless toil sustain,
In fighting fields, and conquer towns in vain?

Dryden.

The mind stands collected within herself, and sustains the shock with all the force which is natural to her; but a heart in love has its foundations sapped. Addison.

6. To bear without yielding.

Sacharissa's beauty's wine,
Which to madness doth incline;

Such a liquor as no brain

That is mortal can sustain.

Waller.

7. To suffer; to bear as inflicted.

If you omit

The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustain more new disgraces,
With these you bear already. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Were it I thought death menac'd would ensue

This my attempt, I would sustain alone

The worst, and not persuade thee.

Milton, P. L.

SUSTAIN.* n. s. [from the verb.] What sustains or supports. Not used.

I lay and slept, I wak'd again,

For my sustain

Was the Lord.

Milton, Psalms.

SUSTAINABLE. adj. [soustenable, Fr. from sustain.]

That may be sustained.

SUSTAINER. † n. s. [from sustain.]

The first founder, sustainer, and continuer thereof, [the church.] More on the Sev. Churches, p. 170.

2. One that suffers; a sufferer.

Thyself hast a sustainer been

Of much affliction in my cause.

Chapman, Iliad.

SUSTENANCE. n. s. [soustenance, Fr.]

1. Support; maintenance.

Scarcely allowing himself fit sustenance of life, rather than he would spend those goods for whose sake only he seemed to joy in life. Sidney.

There are unto one end sundry means; as for the sustenance of our bodies many kinds of food, many sorts of raiment to clothe our nakedness. Hooker.

Is then the honour of your daughter of greater moment to her, than to my daughter her's, whose sustenance it was? Addison.

2. Necessaries of life; victuals.

The experiment cost him his life for want of sustenance.

L'Estrangé.

The ancients were inventors of all arts necessary to life and sustenance, as plowing and sowing. Temple.

SUSTENTACLE.* n. s. [sustentaculum, Lat.] Support. Not in use.

God's the sustentacle of all natures.

More, Immort. of the Soul, i. iii. 25.

SUSTENTA'TION. n. s. [sustentation, Fr. from sustento, Latin.]

1. Support; preservation from falling.

These steams once raised above the earth, have their ascent and sustentation aloft promoted by the air. Boyle.

2. Use of victuals.

A very abstemious animal by reason of its frigidity, and latancy in the winter, will long subsist without a visible sustentation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Maintenance; support of life.

When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation; it is of necessity that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon.

SUSURRA'TION. n. s. [from susurro, Lat.] Whisper; soft murmur.

SUTE. n. s. [for suite.] Sort. I believe only misprinted.

Touching matters belonging to the church of Christ, this we conceive that they are not of one sute. Hooker.

SU'TLER. n. s. [soeteler, Dutch; sudler, German.] A man that sells provisions and liquor in a camp.

I shall sutler be

Unto the camp, and profits will accrue. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Send to the sutler's; there you're sure to find

The bully match'd with rascals of his kind. Dryden.

SU'TILE.* adj. [sutilis, Lat.] Done by stitching.

The fame of her needle work, the "sutile pictures" mentioned by Johnson. Boswell, Life of Johnson.

SU'TURATED.* adj. [from sutura, Lat.] Stitched or knit together.

These are by oculists called "orbitæ," and are each of them compounded of six several bones, which, being most conveniently suturated among themselves, do make up those curious arched chambers in which these lookers or beholders dwell; in which, and from which, they may be haply said to perform their offices. Smith on Old Age, p. 93.

SU'TURE.† n. s. [suture, Fr. sutura, Lat.]

1. A manner of sewing or stitching, particularly of stitching wounds.

Wounds, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by inoculation: to maintain this situation, several sorts of sutures have been invented; those now chiefly described are the interrupted, the gloves, the quill'd, the twisted and the dry sutures, but the interrupted and twisted are almost the only useful ones. Sharp, Surgery.

2. A particular articulation: the bones of the cranium are joined to one another by four sutures.

Quincy.

Many of our vessels degenerate into ligaments, and the sutures of the skull are abolished in old age. Arbuthnot.

SWAB. n. s. [swabb, Swedish.] A kind of mop to clean floors.

To SWAB. v. a. [ſwēbban, Saxon.] To clean with a mop. It is now used chiefly at sea.

He made him swab the deck.

Shelcock's Voyage.

SWA'BBER. n. s. [swabber, Dutch.] A sweeper of the deck.

The master, the swabber, the boatswain and I, Lov'd Mall, Meg, and Marrian, and Margery. Shakespeare.

Was any thing wanting to the extravagance of this degenerate age, but the making a tarpawlin and a swabber the hero of a tragedy. Dennis.

SWAD.* n. s. [from ſwēðan, Sax. fasciare, quia scil. folliculis, tanquam fasciis, pisa obvolvuntur. Skinner.]

1. A peasecod. Still a northern word.

Take pulse out of the swads. Cotgrave, in V. Goussepiller.

2. A squab, or short fat person.

Now I remember me,

There was one busy fellow was the leader,
A blunt squat swad, but lower than yourself.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

To SWA'DDLE.† v. a. [ſwēðan, Saxon.]

1. To swathe; to bind in clothes, generally used of binding newborn children.

Invested by a veil of clouds,

And swaddled as new-born in sable shrouds;

For these a receptacle I design'd.

Sandys.

Where [in the heart] sin is, (as our Saviour tells us) first conceived and brought forth, before it is nourished, suckled, or swaddled, in the gifts of God, either natural or artificial.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 30.

How soon doth man decay!

When cloths are taken from a chest of sweets,

To swaddle infants, whose young breath

Scarce knows the way;

Those clouts are little winding sheets,

Which do consign and send them unto death.

Herbert.

They swaddled me up in my night-gown with long pieces of linen, till they had wrapt me in about an hundred yards of swathe.

Addison.

2. To beat; to cudgel. A low ludicrous word.

A carter had overthrown his cart, and sate in the way crying, Help, Hercules; at last, Hercules, or one in his likeness, came to him, and swaddled him thriftily with a good cudgel; and said, Thou very lazy silly fellow, callest thou to me for help, and dost nothing thyself? Arise, set to thy shoulder, and heave thy part, and then pray to me to help thee; and I will do the rest.

Sir J. Harington, Br. View of the Ch. of Eng. (1653) p. 70.

Great on the bench, great in the saddle,

That could as well bind o'er as swaddle.

Hudibras.

SWA'DDLE.† n. s. [Sax. ſwēðil.] Clothes bound round the body.

I begged them to uncane me: no, no, say they; and upon that carried me to one of their houses, and put me to bed in all my swaddles.

Addison.

SWA'DDLINGBAND. } n. s. [from swaddle.] Cloth
SWA'DDLINGCLOTH. } wrapped round a new-born
SWA'DDLINGCLOUT. } child.

From thence a fairy thee unweeting reft,
There as thou slept'st in tender swaddlingband,
And her base elfin brood, there for thee left,
Such men do changelings call, so chang'd by fairies theft.

Spenser.

That great baby you see there is not yet out of his swaddling-clouts.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The swaddlingbands were purple, wrought with gold.

Dryden.

To SWAG. v. n. [ſwagan, Sax. swægia, Icelandic.]

To sink down by its weight; to hang heavy. See To SAG.

They are more apt, in swagging down, to pierce with their points, that in the jacent posture, and crevice the wall.

Wotton.

Being a tall fish, and with his sides much compressed, he hath a long fin upon his back, and another answering to it on his belly; by which he is the better kept upright, or from swagging on his sides.

Grew.

SWA'GBELLIED.* adj. [swag and belly.] Having a large belly.

Your Dane, your German, and your swag-bellied Hollander are nothing to your English.

Shakespeare, Othello.

To SWAGE.† v. a. [from assuage; which see.] To ease; to soften; to mitigate; to appease; to quiet. Thei, seinge these things, unuethis swagiden the people that thei offriden not to them. Wicliffe, Acts, xiv.

Apt words have power to swage
The tumours of a troubled mind,
And are as balm to fester'd wounds. Milton, S. A.

Nor wanting power to mitigate and swage,
With solemn touches, troubled thoughts, and chase
Anguish, and doubt, and fear from mortal minds. Milton, P. L.

I will love thee,
Though my distracted senses should forsake me,
I'd find some intervals, when my poor heart
Should swage itself, and be let loose to thine. Otway.

To SWAGE.* v. n. To abate.

It swageth, or waxeth cold. Barret, Alv. 1580.
Where salt and fresh the pool renews,
As spring or drought increase or swage.
Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

To SWA'GGER. v. n. [swadder, Dutch, to make a noise; ſpezan, Saxon.] To bluster; to bully; to be turbulently and tumultuously proud and insolent.

Drunk? squabble? swagger? and discourse fustain with one's own shadow? Oh thou invincible spirit of wine!
Shakspeare.

'Tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive; a rascal that swagger'd with me last night. Shakspeare.
The lesser size of mortals love to swagger for opinions, and to boast infallibility of knowledge. Glanville, Scrpais.
Many such asses in the world huff, look big, stare, dress, cock, and swagger at the same noisy rate. L' Etrange.

He chuck'd,
And scarcely deign'd to set a foot to ground,
But swagger'd like a lord. Dryden.

Confidence how weakly soever founded, hath some effect upon the ignorant, who think there is something more than ordinary in a swaggering man, th. talks of nothing but demonstration. Tillotson.

To be great, is not to be starched, and formal, and supercilious; to swagger at our footmen, and browbeat our inferriors. Collier on Pride.

What a pleasure is it to be victorious in a cause? to swagger at the bar? for a lawyer I was born, and a lawyer I will be.
Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

SWA'GGERER. n. s. [from swagger.] A blusterer; a bully; a turbulent noisy fellow.

He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater: you may stroke him as gentle as a puppy greyhound. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

SWA'GGY. adj. [from swag.] Dependent by its weight.

The beaver is called animal ventricosum, from his swaggy and prominent belly. Brown, Vulg. Err.

SWAIN.† n. s. [ſpein, Saxon and Runick; swen, Su. Goth. puer, minister; swaina, Lappon. famulus; ſpan, Sax. bubulcus. See Lye, and Serenius.]

1. A young man.

That good knight would not so nigh repair,
Himself estranging from their joyance vain,
Whose fellowship seem'd far unfit for warlike swains. Spenser.

2. A country servant employed in husbandry.

It were a happy life
To be no better than a homely swain. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Let states, that aim at greatness, take heed how their nobility and gentlemen do multiply too fast. For that maketh the common subject grow to be a peasant and base swain, driven out of heart, and in effect but a gentleman's labourer.
Bacon, Est. 29.

3. A pastoral youth.

Blest swains! whose nymphs in every grace excel;
Blest nymphs! whose swains those graces sing so well. Pope.
Leave the meer country to meer country swains,
And dwell where life in all life's glory reigns. Harte.

SWA'INISH.* adj. [from swain.] Rustick; ignorant.

[It] argues both a gross and shallow judgement, and withal an ungentle and swainish breast. Milton, Apol. for Smeadymn.

SWA'INMOTE.† n. s. [swainmotus, law Lat. Dr. Johnson. — From ſpan, Sax. bubulcus; swainmote, curia quædam forestæ, ita dicta, quasi ministrorum forestæ, scil. agistatorum aliorumque conventus. Lye, edit. Manning, in V. Span.] A court touching matters of the forest, kept by the charter of the forest thrice in the year. This court of swainmote is as incident to a forest, as the court of piepowder is to a fair. The swainmote is a court of freeholders within the forest. Cowel.

A forest hath her court of attachments, swainmote-court, &c. Howell, Lett. iv. 16.

To SWAIP.* v. n. To walk proudly; our northern dialect for sweep.

To SWALE.† } v. n. [ſpelan, Saxon, to kindle; to
To SWEAL. } burn.] To waste or blaze away; to melt: as, the candle swales. Dr. Johnson. — This is a very old word; and is also still used in the north of England.

Men swaliden with greet heete. Wicliffe, Revel. xvi.
Into his face the brond he forst, his huge beard brent a light,
And swcaling made a stinke.

Phaer, Transl. of Virg. Æn. 12. (1584.)

To SWALE.* v. a. To consume; to waste.

Nor has our hymenical torch
Yet lighted up his last most grateful sacrifice,
But dash'd with rain from eyes, and swail'd with sighs, Burns dim. Congreve, Mourn. Bride.

SWA'LLET.† n. s. [swall, Swed. the swell of the sea. Serenius.] Among the tin-miners, water breaking in upon the miners at their work. Bailey.

SWA'LLOW.† n. s. [ſpalepe, Saxon; swala, Su. Goth. idem; sic dict. à Su. Goth. swale, porticus, subdiale, quippè ubi nidum struere solet hæc avis. Serenius.] A small bird of passage; or, as some say, a bird that lies hid and sleeps in the winter.

The swallow follows not summer more willingly than we your lordship. Shakspeare, Timon.

Daffodils,
That come before the swallow dares. Shakspeare.
The swallows make use of celendine, and the linnet of euphrasia. More.

When swallows fleet soar high and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear. Gay.

To SWA'LLOW. v. a. [ſpelzan, Saxon; swelgen, Dutch.]

1. To take down the throat.

If little faults
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
Whose capital crimes chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear before us? Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Men are, at a venture, of the religion of the country; and must therefore swallow down opinions, as silly people do empiricks pills, and have nothing to do but believe that they will do the cure. Locke.

2. To receive without examination.

Consider and judge of it as a matter of reason, and not swallow it without examination as a matter of faith. Locke.

3. To engross; to appropriate: often with up emphatical.

Far be it from me, that I should swallow up or destroy. Sam.

Homer excels all the inventors of other arts in this, that he has swallowed up the honour of those who succeeded him. Pope.

4. To absorb; to take in; to sink in any abyss; to engulph: with up.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches, though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakspeare.

I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb
Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave. Tit. Andron.

Death is swallowed up in victory. 1 Cor. xv. 54.
If the earth open her mouth and swallow them up; ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord. Num. xvi.

In bogs swallow'd up and lost. Milton.
He hid many things from us, not that they would swallow up our understanding, but divert our attention from what is more important. Dec. of Chr. Picty.

Nature would abhor
To be forced back again upon herself,
And like a whirlpool swallow her own streams. Dryden.

Should not the sad occasion swallow up
My other cares, and draw them all into it? Addison.

5. To occupy.
The necessary provision for life swallows the greatest part of their time. Locke.

6. To seize and waste.
Corruption swallow'd what the liberal hand
Of bounty scatter'd. Thomson, Autumn.

7. To engross; to engage completely.
The priest and the prophet are swallowed up of wine. Isaiah.

8. Swallow implies, in all its figurative senses, some nauseous or contemptuous idea, something of gross-ness or of folly.

SWALLOW.† n. s. [from the verb; swalg, Su. Goth.]

1. The throat; voracity.
Had this man of merit and mortification been called to account for his ungodly swallow, in gorging down the estates of helpless widows and orphans, he would have told them that it was all for charitable uses. South.

2. A gulf; a whirlpool.
This Æneas is come to paradise
Out of the swoloue of hell. Chaucer, Legend of Dido.

SWALLOWTAIL. n. s. A species of willow.
The shining willow they call swallowtail, because of the pleasure of the leaf. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

SWALLOWWORT. n. s. [asclepia.] A plant.

SWAM.† [ƿam, Sax.] The preterite of swim.

SWAMP.† n. s. [swamms, Gothick, a sponge; ƿam,
Saxon; suamm, Icelandick; swamme, Dutch; suomp, Danish; swamp, Swedish.] A marsh; a bog; a fen.

Behold the duteous son, the sire decay'd,
The modest matron, and the blushing maid,
Forc'd from their homes, a melancholy train,
To traverse climes beyond the western main;
Where wild Oswego spreads her swamps around,
And Niagara stuns with thundering sound.
Goldsmith, Traveller.

To SWAMP.* v. a. To overwhelm or sink as in a swamp.
A modern word.

SWAMPY. adj. [from swamp.] Boggy; fenny.
Swampy fens breathe destructive myriads. Thomson.

SWAN.† n. s. [ƿan, Saxon; swan, Danish; swaen,
Dutch; cynus, Lat. from the Celt. gwyn, white,
Wachter.]

The swan is a large water-fowl, that has a long neck, and is very white, excepting when it is young.
Its legs and feet are black, as is its bill, which is like that of a goose, but something rounder, and a little hooked at the lower end of it: the two sides below its eyes are black and shining like ebony.
Swans use wings like sails, which catch the wind, so that they are driven along in the water. They feed upon herbs and some sort of grain like a goose, and some are said to have lived three hundred years. There is a species of swans with the feathers of their heads, towards the breast, marked at the ends with a gold colour inclining to red. The swan is reckoned by Moses among the unclean creatures;

but it was consecrated to Apollo the god of musick, because it was said to sing melodiously when it was near expiring; a tradition, generally received, but fabulous. Calmet.

With untainted eye
Compare her face with some that I shall show,
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow. Shakspeare.

Let musick sound, while he doth make his choice;
Then if he lose, he makes a swan like end. Shakspeare.

The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky,
Like that of swans remurmuring to the floods. Dryden.

The idea, which an Englishman signifies by the name of swan, is a white colour, long neck, black beak, black legs, and whole feet, and all these of a certain size, with a power of swimming in the water, and making a certain kind of noise. Locke.

SWANSKIN. n. s. [swan and skin.] A kind of soft flannel, imitating for warmth the down of a swan.

To SWAP.* v. a. [swipa, Icel. to snatch; ƿapan, Sax. to sweep.] To strike with a long or sweeping stroke; to strike against; to throw violently.

His hed to the wall, his body to the ground,
Full oft he swapte. Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iv. 245.

Swap off his hed, this is my sentence here.
Chaucer, Sec. Nonnes Tale.

He straight
Swaps off the head with his presumptuous iron.
Grimoald, in Tottel's Songs, &c. (1557.)

To SWAP.* v. n.

1. To fall down.
Al sodenly she swapt adoun to ground. Chaucer, Cl. Tale.

2. To ply the wings with noise; to strike the air.
When fowls fly by, and with their swapping wings
Beat the inconstant air. Moré, Innmort. of the Soul, i. i. 11.

SWAP.* n. s. [from the verb.] A blow; a stroke.
Prompt. Parv.

If't be a thwack, I make account of that;
There's no new fashion'd swap that e'er came up yet,
But I've the first on 'em. Beaum. and Fl. Nice Valour.

SWAP.† adv. [from the verb.] Hastily; with hasty violence; as, he did it swap. It seems to be of the same original with sweep. A low word.

To SWAP.† v. a. To exchange. See To SWOP.

Thy works purchase thee more
Than they can swappe their heritages for.
Verses, Pref. to J. Hall's Poems, (1646.)

SWARD.† n. s. [sward, Swedish; ƿearp, Sax.
cutis.]

1. The skin of bacon.
Brandish no swords but sweards of bacon!
Brewer, Com. of Lingua, A. 2. S. 1.

2. The surface of the ground: whence green sward, or green sword.

Water, kept too long, loosens and softens the sward, makes it subject to rushes and coarse grass. Note on Tusser.

The noon of night was past, and then the foe
Came dreadless o'er the level swart, that lies Between the wood and the swift streaming Ouse. A. Philips.

To plant a vineyard in July, when the earth is very dry and combustible, plow up the swarth, and burn it. Mortimer.

To SWARD.† v. n. [from the noun.] To breed a green turf.

The clays that are long in swerding, and little subject to weeds, are the best land for clover. Mortimer.

SWARE. The preterite of swear.

SWARM.† n. s. [jreapm, Saxon; swerm, Dutch; swaerm, Swed. swaerma, tumultuari, ab antiq. hurra, in gyrum agitari. Stiernh. and Serenius.]

1. A great body or number of bees or other small animals, particularly those bees that migrate from the hive.

A swarm of bees that cut the liquid sky,
Upon the topmast branch in clouds alight. Dryden, Æn.

2. A multitude; a crowd.

From this swarm of fair advantages,
You grip'd the general way into your hand. Shakespeare.

If we could number up those prodigious swarms that had settled themselves in every part of it, they would amount to more than can be found. Addison on Italy.

This swarm of theenes that settles on my pen,
Which I, like summer-flies, shake off again,
Let others sing. Young.

To SWARM. v. n. [jreapman, Sax. swermen, Dutch.]

1. To rise as bees in a body and quit the hive.

All hands employ'd,
Like labouring bees on a long summer's day;
Some sound the trumpet for the rest to swarm. Dryden.

When bees hang in swarming time, they will presently rise,
if the weather hold. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To appear in multitudes; to crowd; to throng.

The merciless Macdonnel,
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Our superfluous lacqueys, and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

What a multitude of thoughts at once
Awaken'd in me swarm, while I consider
What from within I feel myself, and hear
What from without comes often to my ears. Milton, P. R.

Then mounts the throne, high plac'd before the shrine;
In crowds around the swarming people join. Dryden, Æn.

3. To be crowded; to be over-run; to be thronged.

These garrisons you have now planted throughout all Ireland, and every place swarms with soldiers. Spenser.

Her lower region swarms with all sort of fowl, her rivers with fish, and her seas with whole shoals. Houell.

Those days swarmed with fables, and from such grounds took hints for fictions, poisoning the world ever after. Brown.

Life swarms with ills, the boldest are afraid,
Where then is safety for a tender maid? Young.

4. To breed multitudes.

Not so thick swarm'd once the soil

5. It is used in conversation for climbing a tree, by embracing it with the arms and legs.

To SWARM.* v. a. To press close together, as bees in swarming; to throng.

Sorrow, in far more woeful wise,
Took on with plaint; upheaving to the skies
Her wretched hands, that with her cry the rout
Gan all in heaps to swarm us round about.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.
How did thy senses quail,
Seeing the shores so swarm'd!

Fanshau, Poems, (ed. 1676,) p. 288.
Gay.

SWART. } adj. [swarts, Gothick; jreapt, Saxon;
SWARTH. } swart, Dutch.]

1. Black; darkly brown; tawny.

A nation strange, with visage swart,
And courage fierce, that all men did affray,
Through the world then swarmed in every part. Spenser.

A man
Of swarth complexion, and of crabbed hue,
That him full of melancholy did shew. Spenser.

Whereas I was black and swart before;
With those clear rays which she infus'd on me;
That beauty am I blest with, which you see.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

No goblin, or swart fairy of the mine,
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity. Milton, Comus.

2. In Milton it seems to signify gloomy; malignant.

Ye valleys low,
On whose fresh lap the swart star sparsely looks.
Milton, Lycidas.

To SWART. v. a. [from the noun.] To blacken; to dusk.

The heat of the sun may swart a living part, or even black a dead or dissolving flesh. Brown, Vulg. Err.

SWARTH.* n. s. A row of grass or corn cut down by the mower; a different spelling of swath. See SWATH. Phillips.

Here stretch'd in ranks the levell'd swarths are found.
Pope, Iliad.

SWARTH, or Swairth.* n. s. [perhaps from jreapt, Sax. black, dark, pale, wan. Ray.] The apparition of a person about to die, as pretended in parts of the North.

There are the exact figures and resemblances of persons then living, often seen not only by their friends at a distance, but many times by themselves: of which there are several instances in Aubrey's Miscellanies. These apparitions are called fetches, and in Cumberland swarths; they most commonly appear to distant friends and relations, at the very instant preceding the death of the person, whose figure they put on. Sometimes there is a greater interval between the appearance and death.
Grose.

SWA'RTHILY. adv. [from swarthy.] Blackly; duskyly;
tawnily.

SWA'RTHINESS.† n. s. [from swarthy.] Darkness of complexion; tawinness.

Discontent disjoins mankind, and sends him, with beasts, to the loneliness of untrod deserts, who was by nature made a creature sociable. Nor is it the mind alone that is thus mudd-ed; but even the body suffers: it thickens the complexion, and dyes it into an unpleasant swarthisness: the eye is dim in the discoloured face; and the whole man becomes as if statued into stone and earth. Feltham, Res. i. 36.

SWA'RTHY. adj. [see SWART.] Dark of complexion;
black; dusky; tawny.

Set me where, on some pathless plain,
The swarthy Africans complain. Roscommon.

Though in the torrid climates the common colour is black or swarthy, yet the natural colour of the temperate climates is more transparent and beautiful. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Here swarthy Charles appears, and there
His brother with dejected air. Addison.

Did they know Cato, our remotest kings
Would pour embattled multitudes about him;
Their swarthy hosts would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death more grim. Addison.

To SWA'RTHY.* v. a. [from the adjective.] To blacken; to make swarthy or dusky.

Now will I and my man John swarthy our faces over as if that country's heat had made 'em so. Cowley.

SWA'RTISH.* adj. [from swart.] Somewhat dark or dusky; inclining to black.

Melancholy, that cold, dry, wretched saturnine humor, creepeth in with a leane, pale, or swartysh colour, which reigneth upon solitarye, carefull, musing men.

Bullein, Bulw. of Def. against Sickness, P. 4. (1579.)

SWA'RTINESS.* } n. s. [from swart.] Darkness of SWA'RTNESS. } colour, duskiness. The first is in Sherwood's Dict. The latter in the Prompt. Parv.

SWA'RTY.* adj. [from swart.] Swarthy: than which it is an older word.

From these first qualities arise many other second, as that of colour; black, swarty, pale, ruddy, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 179.

Divine Andate, thou who hold'st the reins
Of furious battles and disorder'd war,
And proudly roll'st thy swarty chariot-wheels
Over the heaps of wounds and carcasses, &c.

Beaum. and Fl. Bondaca.

To SWARVE.* v. n. To swerve; which see.

So all at once they on the prince did thunder,
Who from his saddle swarved not asyde. Spenser, F. Q.

SWASH. n. s. [a cant word.] A figure, whose circumference is not round, but oval; and whose mouldings lie not at right angles, but oblique to the axis of the work. Moxon.

To SWASH.† v. n. [perhaps from swetsen, Teut. to make a shrill noise. Our old lexicographers define swash, "to clash with words and armour," Sherwood; "to make a noise with swords against targets," Barret.] To make a great clatter or noise; to make a show of valour; to vapour; to bully: whence a swashbuckler. Not now in use.

We'll have a swashing and a martial outside,
As many other mannish cowards have,
That do outface it with their semblances. Shakespeare.

Draw, if you be men: Gregory, remember thy swashing blow.
Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

SWASH.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A blustering noise, in order to make a show of valour.

I will flaunt and brave it after the lusty swash.

The Three Ladies of London, (1584.)

2. Impulse of water flowing with violence. Dict.

SWASH.* } adj. Soft, like fruit too ripe. Derbyshire.

SWASHY. } Pegge.

SWASHBUCKLER.* n. s. [swash and buckler. See To SWASH.] A kind of swordplayer; a braggadochio; a bully.

A swashbuckler against the pope, and a dormouse against the devil. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.

SWASHER. n. s. [from swash.] One who makes a show of valour or force of arms. Obsolete.

I have observed these three swashers; three such anticks do not amount to a man. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

SWATCH. n. s. A swathe. Not in use.

One spreadeth those bands so in order to lie,
As barlie in swatches may fill it thereby. Tumer.

SWAT.* } pret. of To sweat.

SWATE. } His hakeney — so swatte. Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Prol.

That far sought wealth, for which the noxious gale
He drew, and swate beneath equator suns. Thomson, Britannia.

SWATH.† n. s. [swade, Dutch.]

1. A line of grass or corn cut down by the mower. Prompt. Parv.

With tossing and raking, and setting on cox,
Grasse, lately in swatches, is meat for an ox. Tumer.

The strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath. Shakespeare.

As soon as your grass is mown, if it lie thick in the swath, neither air nor sun can pass freely through it. Mortimer.

2. A continued quantity.

An affection'd ass, that cons state without book, and utters it by great swaths. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

3. [rueðe, ræðil, Sax. from rpeðan, to bind; so our old word was swathel; then, swaddle. See Huloet's Dict.] A band; a fillet.

An Indian comb, a stick whereof is cut into three sharp and round teeth four inches long: the other part is left for the handle, adorned with fine straws laid along the sides, and lapped round about it in several distinct swaths. Grew.

Long pieces of linen, they folded about me, till they had wrapped me in above an hundred yards of swathe. Guardian.

To SWATHE. v. a. [rpeðan, Saxon.] To bind, as a child with bands and rollers.

He had two sons: the eldest of them at three years old,
I' the swathing clothes the other, from their nursery
Were stol'n. Shakespeare, Cymb.

Their children are never swathed, or bound about with any thing, when they are first born; but are put naked into the bed with their parents to lie. Abbot, Descr. of the World.

Swath'd in her lap the bold nurse bore him out,
With olive branches cover'd round about. Dryden.

Master's feet are swath'd no longer,
If in the night too oft he kicks,
Or shows his loco-motive tricks. Prior.

To SWAY.† v. a. [schweben, German, to move; swæigia, Icel. to bend; swiga, Su. Goth. the same; which Serenius deduces, prefixing s, from the ancient word vega, to move.]

1. To wave in the hand; to move or wield any thing massy: as, to sway the sceptre.

Glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil rise,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd. Spenser.

2. To bias; to direct to either side.

Heav'n forgive them, that so much have sway'd
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me. Shakespeare.
I took your hands; but was, indeed,
Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Cæsar. Shakespeare.

The only way t' improve our own,
By dealing faithfully with none;
As bowls run true by being made
On purpose false, and to be sway'd. Hudibras.

When examining these matters, let not temporal and little advantages sway you against a more durable interest. Tillotson.

3. To govern; to rule; to overpower; to influence.

The lady's mad; yet if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,
With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing. Shakespeare.

The will of man is by his reason sway'd;
And reason says, you are the worthier maid. Shakespeare.

On Europe thence, and where Rome was to sway
The world. Milton, P. L.

A gentle nymph, not far from hence,
That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn stream, Sabrina is her name. Milton, Comm.

Take heed lest passion sway
Thy judgement to do ought, which else free will
Would not admit. Milton, P. L.

The judgment is swayed by passion; and stored with lubricous opinions, instead of clearly conceived truths. Glanville.

This was the race
To sway the world, and land and sea subdue. Dryden.

With these I went,
Nor idle stood with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdu'd; yet those I sway'd
With pow'rful speech: I spoke, and they obey'd. Dryden.

They will do their best to persuade the world that no man acts upon principle, that all is swayed by particular malice. Davenant.

To SWAY.† v. n.

1. To hang heavy; to be drawn by weight.
In these personal respects, the balance sways on our part. Bacon.

2. To have weight; to have influence.
The example of sundry churches, for approbation of one thing, doth sway much; but yet still as having the force of an example only, and not of a law. Hooker.

3. To bear rule; to govern.
The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear,
Shall never sag with doubt, nor shake with fear. Shakespeare.
Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,
They never then had sprung like summer flies. Shakespeare.
Aged tyranny sways not as it hath power, but as it is suffered. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Here thou shalt monarch reign;
There did'st not: there let him still victor sway. Milton, P. L.

4. To incline to one side.
This battle fares like to the morning's war,
When dying clouds contend with growing light: —

Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea,
Forc'd by the tide to combat with the wind;
Now sways it that way, like the self-same sea
Forc'd to retire by fury of the wind.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

SWAY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The swing or sweep of a weapon.
To strike with huge two-handed sway. Milton, P. L.
2. Any thing moving with bulk and power.
Are not you mov'd, when all the sway of earth
Shakes like a thing unfirm? Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
3. Weight; preponderation; cast of the balance.
Expert
When to advance, or stand, or turn the sway
Of battle. Milton, P. L.
4. Power; rule: dominion.
This sort had some fear that the filling up the seats in the consistory, with so great number of laymen, was but to please the minds of the people, to the end they might think their own sway somewhat. Hooker.
Only retain
The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution of th' hest,
Beloved sons, be yours. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Her father counts it dangerous
That she should give her sorrow so much sway,
And in his wisdom hastes our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakespeare.
Too truly Tamerlane's successors they;
Each thinks a world too little for his sway. Dryden, Aureng.
When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honour is a private station. Addison, Cato.
5. Influence; direction; weight on one side.
An evil mind in authority doth not only follow the sway of the desires already within it, but frames to itself new desires, not before thought of. Sidney.
In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time: other odds there was none, saving that some fell sooner, and some later, from the soundness of belief. Hooker.
They rush along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dryden.

To SWEAL.† See To SWALE.

To SWEAR. v. n. preter. swore or sware; part. pass.
sworn. [swaran, Gothick; ȝȝepian, Saxon; sweeren, Dutch.]

1. To obtest some superiour power; to utter an oath.
If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Numbers.
Thee, thee an hundred languages shall claim,
And savage Indians swear by Anna's name. Tickell.
2. To declare or promise upon oath.
We shall have old swearing
That they did give the rings away to men:
But we'll outface them, and outswear them too. Shakespeare.
I gave my love a ring, and made him swear
Never to part with it; and here he stands,
I dare be sworn for him, he would not leave it,
Nor pluck it from his finger. Shakespeare.
I would have kept my word;
But, when I swear, it is irrevocable. Shakespeare.
Jacob said, swear to me; and he sware unto him. Genesis.
Bacchus taken at Rhodes by Demetrius Poliorcetes, which he so esteemed, that, as Plutarch reports, he sware he had rather lose all his father's images than that table. Peacham.
3. To give evidence upon oath.
At what ease
Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt
To swear against you? Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
4. To obtest the great name profanely.
Obey thy parents, keep thy word justly;
Swear not. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
None so nearly disposed to scoffing at religion as those who have accustomed themselves to swear on trifling occasions.
Tillotson.
Hark! the shrill notes transpierce the yielding air,
And teach the neighb'ring ecchos how to swear. Young.

To SWEAR. v. a.

1. To put to an oath; to bind by an oath administered.
Moses took the bones of Joseph; for he had straitly sworn the children of Israel. Ex. xiii. 19.
Sworn ashore, man, like a duck; I can swim like a duck,
I'll be sworn. Shakespeare, Tempest.
Let me swear you all to secrecy;
And, to conceal my shame, conceal my life. Dryden.
2. To declare upon oath: as, He swore treason against his friend.
3. To obtest by an oath.
Now by Apollo, king, thou swear'st thy gods in vain.
— O vassal! miscreant! Shakespeare.

SWE'ARER. n. s. [from swear.] A wretch who obtests
the great name wantonly and profanely.

And must they all be hang'd that swear and lie?
— Every one.
— Who must hang them?
— Why, the honest men.
— Then the liars and swearers are fools; for there are liars and swearers enow to beat the honest men and hang them up.
Shakespeare.

Take not his name, who made thy mouth, in vain;
It gets thee nothing, and hath no excuse:
Lust and wine plead a pleasure, avarice a gain;
But the cheap swearer through his open sluice
Lets his soul run for nought. Herbert.
Of all men a philosopher should be no swearer; for an oath, which is the end of controversies in law, cannot determine any here, where reason only must induce. Brown.
It is the opinion of our most refined swearers, that the same oath or curse cannot, consistently with true politeness, be repeated above nine times in the same company by the same person. Swift, Polite Conversation.

SWE'ARING.* n. s. [from To Swear.] The act of declaring upon oath; the act or practice of using profane oaths.

All those sayings will I over-swear,
And all those swearings keep as true in soul,
As doth that orb'd continent the fire
That severs day from night. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
Because of swearing the land mourneth. Jer. xxiii. 10.

SWEAT.† n. s. [ȝpeat, Saxon; swett, Su. Goth.
zet, Hebrew.]

1. The matter evacuated at the pores by heat or labour.
Sweat is salt in taste; for that part of the nourishment which is fresh and sweet, turneth into blood and flesh; and the sweet is that part which is excerned. Bacon.
Some insensible effluvium, exhaling out of the stone, comes to be checked and condensed by the air on the superficies of it, as it happens to sweat on the skins of animals. Boyle.
Soft on the flowery herb I found me laid
In balmy sweat. Milton, P. L.
When Lucilius brandishes his pen,
And flashes in the face of guilty men,
A cold sweat stands in drops on every part,
And rage succeeds to tears, revenge to smart. Dryden.
Sweat is produced by changing the balance between the fluids and solids, in which health consists, so as that projectile motion of the fluids overcome the resistance of the solids.
Arbuthnot.
2. Labour; toil; drudgery.
This painful labour of abridging was not easy, but a matter of sweat and watching. 2 Mac. ii. 26.
The field
To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd. Milton, P. L.
What from Johnson's oil and sweat did flow,
Or what more easy nature did bestow
On Shakespeare's gentler muse, in thee full grown
Their graces both appear. Denham.
3. Evaporation of moisture.
Beans give in the mow; and therefore those that are to be kept are not to be thrashed 'till March, that they have had a thorough sweat in the mow. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To SWEAT.† v. n. pret. sweat or swate, swet, sweated ;
particip. pass. sweaten ; [ʃpætan, Saxon.]

1. To be moist on the body with heat or labour.

Let them be free, marry them to your heirs,
Why sweat they under burdens? Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
Mistress Page at the door, sweating and blowing, and looking wildly, would needs speak with you. Shakspeare.

When he was brought again to the bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stir'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

About this time in autumn, there reigned in the city and other parts of the kingdom a disease then new ; which, of the accidents and manner thereof they called the sweating sickness.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

A young tall squire

Did from the camp at first before him go ;
At first he did, but scarce could follow strait,
Sweating beneath a shield's unruly weight.

Cowley.

2. To toil ; to labour ; to drudge.

How the drudging goblin sweat
To earn his cream bowl duly set ;
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn.

Milton, L'All.

Our author, not content to see
That others write as carelessly as he ;
Though he pretends not to make things complete,
Yet, to please you, he'd have the poets sweat.

Waller.

3. To emit moisture.

Wainscots will sweat so that they run with water. Bacon.

To SWEAT. v. a.

1. To emit as sweat.

Grease that's sweaten

From the murderer's gibbet, throw
Into the flame.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

For him the rich Arabia sweats her gum.

Dryden.

2. To make to sweat.

SWE'ATER.† n. s. [from sweat.] One who sweats, or makes to sweat.

These sweaters — seem to me to have at present but a rude kind of discipline amongst them. Spectator, No. 332.

SWE'ATILY.* adv. [from sweaty.] So as to be moist with sweat ; in a sweaty state.

SWE'ATINESS.* n. s. [from sweaty.] The state of being sweaty.

Ash.

SWE'ATING.* n. s. [ʃpætunȝ, Saxon.]

1. The act of making to sweat.

2. Moisture emitted.

In cold evenings there will be a moisture or sweating upon the stool. Mortimer.

SWE'ATY.† adj. [from sweat ; ʃpætiz, Saxon.]

1. Covered with sweat ; moist with sweat.

The rabblement hooted and clapped their chopp'd hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
First-fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf. Milton, P. L.

2. Consisting of sweat.

And then, so nice, and so genteel,
Such cleanliness from head to heel ;
No humours gross, or frowsy steams,
No noisome whiffs, or sweaty streams.

Swift.

3. Laborious ; toilsome.

Those who labour
The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleening armour,
Acknowledge Vulcan's aid.

Prior.

SWEDE.* n. s. A native of Sweden.

What the Swede intends, and what the French.

Milton, Sonnet.

SWE'DISH.* adj. Respecting the Swedes.

The Icelandic is the mother of the modern Swedish and Danish tongues. Percy, Pref. to Runic Poetry.

To SWEEP.† v. a. pret. and part. pass. swept.
[ʃpapan, ʃpeopan, Saxon.]

1. To drive away with a besom.

2. To clean with a besom.

What woman, having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one, doth not sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it?
St. Luke, xv. 8.

3. To carry with pomp.

Let frantick Talbot triumph for a while,
And, like a peacock, sweep along his tail.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

4. To drive or carry off with celerity and violence.

Though I could,

With barefac'd power, sweep him from my sight,

And bid my will avouch it ; yet I must not.

Shakspeare.

The river of Kishon swept them away.

Judges, v.

The blustering winds striving for victory, swept the snow from off the tops of those high mountains, and cast it down unto the plains in such abundance, that the Turks lay as men buried alive.

Knolles, Hist.

Flying bullets now

To execute his rage appear too slow ;
They miss or sweep but common souls away ;
For such a loss Opdam his life must pay.

Waller.

My looking is the fire of pestilence,
That sweeps at once the people and the prince.

Dryden.

I have already swept the stakes, and with the common good fortune of prosperous gamblers can be content to sit.

Dryden.

Is this the man who drives me before him
To the world's ridge, and sweeps me off like rubbish?

Dryden.

Fool ! time no change of motion knows ;

With equal speed the torrent flows

To sweep fame, power, and wealth away :

The past is all by death possess'd,

And frugal fate that guards the rest,

By giving, bids them live, to-day.

Fenton.

A duke holding in a great many hands, drew a huge heap of gold ; but never observed a sharper, who under his arm
swept a great deal of it into his hat.

Swift.

5. To pass over with celerity and force.

Then sweep they the blue waves.

May, Luc. B. 3.

6. To rub over.

Their long descending train

With rubies edg'd, and sapphires swept the plain.

Dryden

7. To strike with a long stroke.

Descend, ye nine ; descend and sing ;

The breathing instruments inspire,

Wake into voice each silent string,

And sweep the sounding lyre.

Pope.

To SWEEP. v. n.

1. To pass with violence, tumult, or swiftness. Perhaps in the first quotation we should read swoop.

Haste me to know it, that I with wings as swift

As meditation or the thoughts of love

May sweep to my revenge.

Shakspeare.

A poor man that oppresseth the poor, is like a sweeping rain which leaveth no food.

Prov. xxviii. 3.

Cowen in her course

Tow'rs the Sabrianian shores, as sweeping from her source, Takes Tow'ra.

Drayton.

Before tempestuous winds arise,

Stars shooting through the darkness gild the night

With sweeping glories and long trails of light.

Dryden.

2. To pass with pomp ; to pass with an equal motion.

She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,

More like an empress than duke Humphrey's wife. Shakspeare.

In gentle dreams I often will be by,

And sweep along before your closing eye.

Dryden.

3. To move with a long reach.

Nor always errs ; for oft the gauntlet draws

A sweeping stroke along the crackling jaws.

Dryden.

SWEEP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of sweeping.

2. The compass of any violent or continued motion.

A door drags when by its ill hanging on its hinges, or by the ill boarding of the room, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

A torrent swell'd

With wintry tempests, that disdains all mounds,
Breaking away impetuous, and involves
Within its sweep, trees, houses, men.

Philips.

3. Violent and general destruction.

In countries subject to great epidemical sweeps, men may live very long; but where the proportion of the chronical distemper is great, it is not likely to be so. Graunt.

4. Direction of any motion not rectilinear.

Having made one incision a little circularly, begin a second, bringing it with an opposite sweep to meet the other. Sharp.

SWE'PER. † n. s. [from sweep.] One that sweeps. Barret.

SWE'PINGS. n. s. [from sweep.] That which is swept away.

Should this one broomstick enter the scene, covered with dust, though the sweepings of the finest lady's chamber, we should despise its vanity. Swift.

SWE'PNET. n. s. [sweep and net.] A net that takes in a great compass.

She was a sweepnet for the Spanish ships, which happily fell into her net. Camden.

SWE'PSTAKE. † n. s. [sweep and stake.] Originally perhaps a game at cards: it is now applied to the winner of the whole that is staked or wagered, and is a common phrase at horse-races, usually called sweepstakes.

Here are the cards, what shall we play at? — At trumps? — Let that be for old men. — Less will the play of chilindron like you. — That is for women by the fire side. — It is not, but that you will not have any game of vertue but sweep-stake play. Minsheu, Span. Dict. Dial. (1599), p. 25.

Is't writ in your revenge,
That sweepstake you will draw both friend and foe,
Winner and loser? Shakspeare.

The House of Commons were resolved to practise on the church by little and little, and at the last to play at sweep-stake, and take all together. Heylin, Hist. of the Presbyterians, p. 439.

SWE'PY. † adj. [from sweep.]

1. Passing with great speed and violence over a great compass at once.

They rush along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dryden.

2. Wavy.

Behind
The sweepy crest hung floating in the wind. Pope, Iliad.

3. Strutting; drawn out.

Behold their swelling dugs; the sweepy weight
Of ewes, that sink beneath their milky freight. Dryden, Ov.
Or spread his sweepy train. Watts on Job's Peacock, Posth. Works.

SWEET. † adj. [ypete, Sax. soet, Dutch. Our old word was sute, sote, or soote. "My prechyng was not in sutely styryng wordis of mannys wisdom." Wicliffe, 1 Cor. ii. "On the sote grasse I sate me down." Chaucer, FL and Leaf. "They dauncen deffly, and singen soote." Spenser, Shep. Cal.]

1. Pleasing to any sense.

Sweet expresses the pleasant perceptions of almost every sense: sugar is sweet, but it hath not the same sweetness as musick; nor hath musick the sweetness of a rose, and a sweet prospect differs from them all: nor yet have any of these the same sweetness as discourse, counsel, or meditation hath; yet the royal Psalmist saith of a man, we took sweet counsel together; and of God, my meditation of him shall be sweet. Watts.

2. Luscious to the taste.

This honey tasted still is ever sweet. Davies.

3. Fragrant to the smell.

Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet wood to make the lodging sweet. Shakspeare.

Where a rainbow hangeth over or toucheth, there breatheth a sweet smell; for that this happeneth but in certain matters which have some sweetness which the dew of the rainbow draweth forth. Bacon.

Shred very small with thyme, sweet-marjoram, and a little winter savoury. Walton, Angler.

The balmy zephyrs, silent since her death,
Lament the ceasing of a sweeter breath. Pope.

The streets with treble voices ring,
To sell the bounteous product of the spring;
Sweet-smelling flowers, and elders early bud. Gay.

4. Melodious to the ear.

The dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton, P. L.
Her speech is grac'd with sweeter sound
Than in another's song is found. Waller.

No more the streams their murmurs shall forbear
A sweeter musick than their own to hear;
But tell the reeds, and tell the vocal shore,
Fair Daphne's dead, and musick is no more. Pope.

5. Beautiful to the eye.

Heav'n bless thee!
Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on. Shakspeare.

6. Not salt.

The white of an egg, or blood mingled with salt water, gathers the saltness, and maketh the water sweeter; this may be by adhesion. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The sails drop with rain,
Sweet waters mingle with the briny main. Dryden.

7. Not sour.

Time changeth fruits from more sour to more sweet; but contrariwise liquors, even those that are of the juice of fruit, from more sweet to more sour. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Trees whose fruit is acid last longer than those whose fruit is sweet. Bacon.

When metals are dissolved in acid menstrua, and the acids in conjunction with the metal act after a different manner, so that the compound has a different taste, much milder than before, and sometimes a sweet one; is it not because the acids adhere to the metallick particles, and thereby lose much of their activity. Newton, Opt.

8. Mild; soft; gentle.

Let me report to him
Your sweet dependency, and you shall find
A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness. Shakspeare.

The Pleiades before him dauc'd,
Shedding sweet influence. Milton, P. L.

Mercy has, could mercy's self be seen,
No sweeter look than this propitious queen. Waller.

9. Grateful; pleasing.

Nothing so sweete is as our countrie's earth,
And joy of those, from whom we claime our birth. Chapman.
Sweet interchange of hill and valley. Milton, P. L.

Euryalus,
Than whom the Trojan host
No fairer face or sweeter air could boast. Dryden, Æn.

10. Not stale; not stinking: as, that meat is sweet.

SWEET. n. s.

1. Sweetness; something pleasing.

Pluck out
The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison. Shakspeare, Coriol.

What softer sounds are these salute the ear,
From the large circle of the hemisphere,
As if the center of all sweets met here! B. Jonson.

If every sweet and every grace
Must fly from that forsaken face. Carew.

Hail! wedded love,
Perpetual fountain of domestick sweets! Milton, P. I.

Taught to live
The easiest way; nor with perplexing thoughts
To interrupt the sweet of life. Milton, P. L.

Now since the Latian and the Trojan brood
Have tasted vengeance, and the sweets of blood, Speak. Dryden, Æn.

Can Ceyx then sustain to leave his wife,
And unconcern'd forsake the sweets of life? Dryden.

We have so great an abhorrence of pain, that a little of it extinguishes all our pleasures; a little bitter mingled in our cup leaves no relish of the sweet. Locke.

Love had ordain'd that it was Abra's turn
To mix the sweets, and minister the urn. Prior.

2. A word of endearment.

Sweet! leave me here a while,
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Shakspeare.

Wherefore frowns my sweet?
Have I too long been absent from these lips? B. Jonson.

3. A perfume.

As in perfumes,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost;
Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all:
So she was all a sweet. Dryden.

Flowers
Innumerable, by the soft south-west
Open'd, and gather'd by religious hands,
Rebound their sweets from th' odoriferous pavement. Prior.

SWEETBREAD. n. s. The pancreas of the calf.

Never tie yourself always to eat meats of easy digesture, as veal, pullets, or sweetbreads. Harvey on Consumpt.

Sweetbread and collops were with skewers prick'd
About the sides; imbibing what they deck'd. Dryden.

When you roast a breast of veal, remember your sweetheart
the butler loves a sweetbread. Swift.

SWEETBRIAR. n. s. [sweet and briar.] A fragrant shrub.

For March come violets and peach-tree in blossom, the cornelian-tree in blossom, and sweetbriar. Bacon.

Ainsworth.

SWEETC'CELY. n. s. [myrrhus, Latin.] A plant.

Miller.

SWEETC'ISTUS.* n. s. A shrub, called also gum-cistus.

Mason.

A better claim sweet-cistus may pretend,
Whose sweating leaves a fragrant balsam send. Tate's Cowley.

To SWEETEN. v. a. [from sweet.]

1. To make sweet.

The world the garden is, she is the flower
That sweetens all the place; she is the guest
Of rarest price. Sidney.

Here is the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Shakspeare.

Give me an ounce of civet to sweeten my imagination.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

With fairest flowers, Fidele,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Be humbly minded, know your post;
Sweeten your tea, and watch your toast. Swift.

2. To make mild or kind.

All kindnesses descend upon such a temper, as rivers of fresh waters falling into the main sea; the sea swallows them all, but is not changed or sweetened by them. South.

Devotion softens his heart, enlightens his mind, sweetens his temper, and makes every thing that comes from him instructive, amiable, and affecting. Law.

3. To make less painful.

She the sweetness of my heart, even sweetens the death
which her sweetness brought upon me. Sidney.

Thou shalt secure her helpless sex from harms,
And she thy cares will sweeten with her charms. Dryden.

Interest of state and change of circumstances may have sweetened these reflections to the politer sort, but impressions are not so easily worn out of the minds of the vulgar. Addison.

Thy mercy sweeten'd every soil,
Made every region please;
The hoary Alpine hills it warm'd,
And smooth'd the Tyrrhene seas. Addison.

4. To palliate; to reconcile.

These lessons may be gilt and sweetened as we order pills and potions, so as to take off the disgust of the remedy. L'Estrange.

5. To make grateful or pleasing.

I would have my love
Angry sometimes, to sweeten off the rest
Of her behaviour. B. Jonson, Catiline.

6. To soften; to make delicate.

Corregio has made his memory immortal, by the strength he has given to his figures, and by sweetening his lights and shadows, and melting them into each other so happily, that they are even imperceptible. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

To SWEETEN. v. n. To grow sweet.

Where a wasp hath bitten in a grape, or any fruit, it will sweeten hastily. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

SWEETENER. n. s. [from sweeten.]

1. One that palliates; one that represents things tenderly.

But you who, till your fortune's made,
Must be a sweetener by your trade,
Must swear he never meant us ill. Swift.

Those softeners, sweeteners, and compounders, shake their heads so strongly, that we can hear their pockets jingle. Swift.

2. That which contemperates acrimony.

Powder of crabs' eyes and claws, and burnt egg-shells, are prescribed as sweeteners of any sharp humours. Temple.

SWEETHEART. n. s. [sweet and heart.] A lover or mistress.

Mistress, retire yourself
Into some covert; take your sweethearts
And pluck o'er your brows. Shakspeare.
Sweetheart, your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose. Shakspeare

One thing, sweetheart, I will ask,
Take me for a new-fashion'd mask. Cleveland.
A wench was wringing her hands and crying; she had newly parted with her sweetheart. L'Estrange.

She interprets all your dreams for these,
Foretells the estate, when the rich uncle dies,
And sees a sweetheart in the sacrifice. Dryden, Juv.

SWEETING. n. s. [from sweet.]

1. A sweet luscious apple.

A child will chuse a sweeting because it is presently fair and pleasant, and refuse a runnet, because it is then green, hard, and sour. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

2. A word of endearment.

Trip no further, pretty sweeting;
Journeys end in lovers meeting. Shakspeare.

SWEETISH. adj. [from sweet.] Somewhat sweet.

They esteem'd that blood pituitous naturally, which abounded with an exceeding quantity of sweetish chyle. Floyer.

SWEETISHNESS.* n. s. [from sweetish.] Quality of being somewhat sweet.

offensive to the palate. Bp. Berkeley, Farther Th. on Tar-Water.

SWEETLY.† adv. [from sweet; Sax. ƿæclice.] In a sweet manner; with sweetness.

The best wine for my beloved goeth down sweetly. Canticles.

He bore his great commission in his look;
But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke. Dryden.

No poet ever sweetly sung,
Unless he were like Phœbus young;
Nor ever nymph inspir'd to rhyme,
Unless like Venus in her prime. Swift.

SWEETMA'RJORAM.* See MARJORAM.

SWEETMEAT. n. s. [sweet and meat.] Delicacies made of fruits preserved with sugar.

Mopsa, as glad as of sweetmeats to go of such an errand, quickly returned. Sidney.

Why all the charges of the nuptial feast,
Wine and deserts, and sweetmeats to digest.
There was plenty, but the dishes were ill sorted; whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women, but little solid meat for men. Dryden.

Make your transparent sweetmeats truly nice,
With Indian sugar and Arabian spice. King, Cookery.

If a child cries for any unwholesome fruit, you purchase his quiet by giving him a less hurtful sweetmeat: this may preserve his health, but spoils his mind. Locke.

At a lord-mayor's feast, the sweetmeats do not make appearance till people are cloyed with beef and mutton. Addison.

They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting;
but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to bring any presents of toys or sweetmeats. Swift.

SWEETNESS. † n. s. [from sweet; Sax. pyetnerpe.

Not often found in the plural; nor has Dr. Johnson given a single example of it in that number.
The eloquent Jeremy Taylor now supplies one.]
The quality of being sweet in any of its senses;
fragrance; melody; lusciousness; deliciousness;
agreeableness; delightfulness; gentleness of manners; mildness of aspect.

She the sweetness of my heart, even sweetening the death
which her sweetness brought upon me. Sidney.

The right form, the true figure, the natural colour that is fit and due to the dignity of a man, to the beauty of a woman, to the sweetness of a young babe. Ascham.

O our lives' sweetness!

That we the pain of death would hourly bear,
Rather than die at once. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Where a rainbow toucheth, there breatheth forth a sweet smell: for this happeneth but in certain matters, which have in themselves some sweetness, which the gentle dew of the rainbow draweth forth. Bacon.

Whosoever obeys the laws of Jesus, bears with the infirmities of his relatives and society, seeks with sweetnesses to remedy what is ill, and to prevent what it may produce, and throws water upon a spark.

Bp. Taylor, Gr. Exempl. P. iii. Disc. 15.

His sweetness of carriage is very particularly remembered by his contemporaries. Fell.

Serene and clear harmonious Horace flows,
With sweetness not to be exprest in prose. Roscommon.

Suppose two authors equally sweet, there is a great distinction to be made in sweetness; as in that of sugar and that of honey. Dryden.

This old man's talk, though honey flow'd
In every word, would now lose all its sweetness. Addison.

Praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join. Pope.

A man of good education, excellent understanding, and exact taste; these qualities are adorned with great modesty and a most amiable sweetness of temper. Swift.

To SWELL. v. n. part. pass. swollen. [ypellan, Sax.
swellen, Dutch.]

1. To grow bigger; to grow turgid; to extend the parts.

Propitious Tyber smooth'd his watery way,
He roll'd his river back, and pois'd he stood,
A gentle swelling and a peaceful flood. Dryden, Æn.

2. To tumify by obstruction.

Strangely visited people,
All swoll'n and ulcerous; pitiful to the eye,
The mere despair of surgery he cures. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Swoll'n is his breast; his inward pains encrease,
All means are us'd, and all without success. Dryden.

3. To be exasperated.

My pity hath been balm to heal their wounds,
My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs. Shakspeare.

4. To look big.

Here he comes, swelling like a Turkey-cock. Shakspeare.

5. To be turgid. Used of style.

Peleus and Telephus exil'd and poor,
Forget their swelling and gigantick words. Roscommon.

6. To protuberate.

This iniquity shall be as a breach ready to fall, swelling out in a high wall. Isa. xxx. 13.

7. To rise into arrogance; to be elated.

In all things else above our humble fate,
Your equal mind yet swells not into state. Dryden.

8. To be inflated with anger.

I will help every one from him that swelleth against him, and will set him at rest. Ps. xii. 6.

We have made peace of enmity
Between these swelling wrong-incensed peers. Shakspeare.

The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shakspeare.

9. To grow upon the view.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention!
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene. Shakspeare.

10. It implies commonly a notion of something wrong.

Immoderate valour swells into a fault. Addison.

To SWELL. v. a.

1. To cause to rise or encrease; to make tumid.

Wind, blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main. Shakspeare.
You who supply the ground with seeds of grain,
And you who swell those seeds with kindly rain. Dryden.

2. To aggravate; to heighten.

It is low ebb with his accuser, when such peccadillos are put to swell the charge. Atterbury.

3. To raise to arrogance.

All these miseries proceed from the same natural causes, which have usually attended kingdoms swollen with long plenty,
pride, and excess. Clarendon.

The king of men, who swoln with pride,
Refus'd his presents, and his prayers deny'd. Dryden.

SWELL. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Extension of bulk.

The swan's down feather,
That stands upon the swell at full of tide,
And neither way inclines. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. The fluctuating motion of the sea, after the expiration of a storm; also, the surf.

SWELLING. n. s. [from swell.]

1. Morbid tumour.

There is not a chonical disease that more frequently introduces the distemper I am discoursing of, than strumous or scro-phulous swellings or ulcers. Blackmore.

2. Protuberance; prominence.

The superficies of such plates are not even, but have many cavities and swellings, which, how shallow soever, do a little vary the thickness of the plate. Newton, Opt.

3. Effort for a vent.

My heart was torn in pieces to see the husband suppressing and keeping down the swellings of his grief. Tatler.

To SWELL. † v. n. To break out in sweat, if that be the meaning. Dr. Johnson. — I rather take it for a poetical variation of swelled. Mason.

With huge impatience he inly swelt. Spenser, F. Q.
Chearful blood in faintness chill did melt,
Which, like a fever fit, through all his body swelt. Spenser, F. Q.

To SWELT. * v. n. [ypellan, Sax. to die; swiltan, Goth.] To faint; to swoon. Still a northern expression.

Woe that made his heart to swell.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iii. 348.
The knights swell for lack of shade.

Chaucer, Fl. and Leaf, ver. 360.

Her dear heart high swell : —

Then when she look'd about, —

She almost fell again into a swoon. Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 9.

TO SWELL.* v. a. To overpower as with heat ; to cause to faint. This, according to Mr. Pegge, is at present a Derbyshire term.

Is the sun to be blamed that the traveller's cloak swells him with heat ? Bp. Hall, Soliloq. 74.

TO SWE'LTR.† v. n. [This is supposed to be corrupted from sultry. Dr. Johnson. — It may rather be deduced from swelt. Our old lexicography defines it "to swoon for heat or other causes." Prompt. Parv.] To be pained with heat.

If the sun's excessive heat

Makes our bodies sweller,

To an osier hedge we get

For a friendly shelter ;

There we may

Think and pray,

Before death

Stops our breath. Chalkhill.

TO SWE'LTR. v. a. To parch, or dry up with heat.

Some would always have long nights and short days ; others again long days and short nights ; one climate would be scorched and swellered with everlasting dog-days, while an eternal December blasted another. Bentley, Serm.

SWE'LTRY. adj. [from sweller.] Suffocating with heat.

SWEPT. The participle and preterite of sweep.

SWERD.† n. s. See SWARD.

TO SWERD.† v. n. See TO SWARD.

TO SWERVE. v. n. [swerven, Saxon and Dutch.]

1. To wander ; to rove.

A maid thitherward did run,

To catch her sparrow which from her did swerve. Sidney.

The swerving vines on the tall elms prevail,

Unhurt by southern showers or northern hail. Dryden.

2. To deviate ; to depart from rule, custom, or duty.

That which angels do clearly behold, and without any swerving observe, is a law celestial and heavenly. Hooker.

The ungodly have laid a snare for me ; but yet I swerve not from thy commandments. Comm. Prayer.

Were I the fairest youth

That ever made the eye swerve. Shakespeare.

There is a protection very just which princes owe to their servants, when, in obedience to their just commands, upon extraordinary occasions, in the execution of their trusts, they swerve from the strict letter of the law. Clarendon.

Till then his majesty had not in the least swerved from that act of parliament. Clarendon.

Firm we subsist, yet possible to swerve. Milton, P. L.

Many who, through the contagion of ill example, swerve exceedingly from the rules of their holy faith, yet would upon such an extraordinary warning be brought to comply with them. Atterbury, Serm.

3. To ply ; to bend.

Now their mightiest quell'd, the battle swerv'd

With many an inroad gor'd. Milton, P. L.

4. [I know not whence derived.] To climb on a narrow body.

Ten wildings have I gather'd for my dear,

Upon the topmost branch, the tree was high,

Yet nimbly up from bough to bough I swerv'd. Dryden.

She fled, returning by the way she went,

And swerv'd along her bow with swift ascent. Dryden.

SWERVING.* n. s. [from swerve.] The act of departing from rule, custom, or duty.

VOL. IV.

However swervings are now and then incident into the course of nature, nevertheless so constantly the laws of nature are by natural agents observed, that no man denieth, but those things which nature worketh are wrought always, or for the most part, after one and the same manner. Hooker.

Annihilation in the course of nature, defect, and swerving in the creature, would immediately follow. Hakewill.

SWE'VEN.* n. s. [ʃpepen, Saxon.] A dream. Obsolete.

Your eldris schulen dreme swevenys. Wicliffe, Acts, ii.

Nothing but vanitee in sweven is. Chaucer, Non. Pr. Tale.

SWIFT.† adj. [ʃpift, Saxon ; swipan, Icel. citò agere. Serenius. The Sax. ʃpipan means the same ; and hence certainly the old word for swift or nimble ; viz. swipper ; which see.]

1. Moving far in a short time ; quick ; fleet ; speedy ; nimble ; rapid.

Thou art so far before,

That swiftest wing of recompence is slow

To overtake thee. Shakespeare.

Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb,

Unable to support this lump of clay,

Swift-winged with desire to get a grave. Shakespeare.

Men of war, whose faces were like the faces of lions, and as swift as the roes upon the mountains. 1 Chron. xii. 8.

We imitate and practise to make swifter motions than any out of other muskets. Bacon.

To him with swift ascent he up return'd. Milton, P. L.

Things that move so swift as not to affect the senses distinctly, with several distinguishable distances of their motion, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move. Locke.

It preserves the ends of the bones from incalcescency, which they, being solid bodies, would contract from any swift motion. Ray.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high

As any other Pegasus can fly ;

So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,

Than all the swift fin'd racers of the flood. Dorset.

Clouded in a deep abyss of light,

While present, too severe for human sight,

Nor staying longer than one swift-wing'd night. Prior.

Mantiger made a circle round the chamber, and the swift-footed martin pursued him. Arbuthnot.

There too, my son, — ah once my best delight,

Once swift of foot, and terrible in fight. Pope, Odys.

Swift they descend, with wing to wing conjoin'd,

Stretch their broad plumes, and float upon the wind. Pope.

2. Ready ; prompt.

Let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak. Ja. i. 19.

To mischief swift. Milton.

SWIFT. n. s. The current of a stream.

He can live in the strongest swifts of the water. Walton.

SWIFT. n. s. [from the quickness of their flight ; apus.]

A bird like a swallow ; a martin.

Swifts and swallows have remarkably short legs, and their toes grasp any thing very strongly. Derham.

SWIFTFOOT.* adj. [swift and foot.] Nimble.

Where now the valley greene, and mountaine bare,

The river, forrest, wood, and crystall springs,

The hauke, the hound, the hinde, the swift-foot hare ?

Mir. for Mag. p. 655.

SWIFTHEELED.* adj. [swift and heel.] Swiftfoot ; rapid ; quick.

Vows are vain : no suppliant breath

Stays the speed of swift-heel'd death.

Habington, Castara, p. 47.

Varying anon her theme, she takes delight

The swift-heel'd horse to praise, and sing his rapid flight.

Congreve, Ode to Ld. Godolphin.

SWIFTLY.† adv. [from swift ; Saxon ʃpift-lice.]

Fleetly ; rapidly ; nimbly ; with celerity ; with velocity.

These move swiftly, and at great distance; but then they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Pleas'd with the passage, we slide swiftly on,
And see the dangers which we cannot shun. Dryden.

In decent order they advance to light;
Yet then too swiftly fleet by human sight,
And meditate too soon their everlasting flight. Prior.

SWIFTNESS.† n. s. [from swift; Sax. ƿiſtneſſe.]
Speed; nimbleness; rapidity; quickness; velocity;
celerity.

Let our proportions for these wars
Be soon collected, and all things thought upon,
That may with reasonable swiftness add
More feathers to our wings. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

We may outrun
By violent swiftness that which we run at;
And lose by over-running. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
Speed to describe whose swiftness number fails. Milton, P. L.

Exulting, till he finds their nobler sense
Their disproportion'd speed does recompense;
Then curses his conspiring feet, whose scent
Betrays that safety which their swiftness lent. Denham.

Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves our sense behind. Dryden.

To SWIG.† v. n. [swiga, Icelandick. Serenius and Lye refer to this Icel. word; the latter to the Sax. ƿilgan, also, to swill.] To drink by large draughts.

To SWIG.* v. a. To suck greedily.
The flock is drain'd, the lambskins swig the teat,
But find no moisture, and then idly bleat.
Creech, Transl. of Virg. Ecl. 3.

SWIG.* n. s. [from the verb.] A large draught: as, he took a good swig. A low expression.

To SWILL. v. a. [ƿilgan, Saxon.]
1. To drink luxuriously and grossly.
The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar,
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines,
Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough
In your embowell'd bosom. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
The most common of these causes are an hereditary disposition, and swilling down great quantities of cold liquors. Arbuthnot.

Such is the poet, fresh in pay,
The third night's profits of his play;
His morning draughts till noon can swill,
Among his brethren of the quill. Swift.

2. To wash; to drench.
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Shakespeare.

With that a German oft has swill'd his throat,
Deluded, that imperial Rhine bestow'd
The generous rummer. Philips.

3. To inebriate; to swell with plenitude.
I should be loth
To meet the rudeness and swill'd insolence
Of such late wassailers. Milton, Comus.
He drinks a swilling draught; and lin'd within,
Will supple in the bath his outward skin. Dryden.

To SWILL.* v. n. To be intoxicated.
As though he were delighted with drinking, and swilling, and gaming. Whately, Redempt. of Time, p. 50.
So unfit a match is a soaking, swilling swine to encounter this roaring lion. South, Sermon vi. 376.

SWILL.† n. s. [from the verb.] Drink, grossly poured down; hogwash.

To be fed with the swyl and draffe.
Wood, Tr. of Bp. Gardiner's De Ver. Ob. (1553), a. 4.
Give swine such swill as you have. Mortimer.

Thus as they swim in mutual swill, the talk
Reels fast from theme to theme. Thomson.

SWILLER.† n. s. [from will.] A notorious drunkard; called also, in our old lexicography, a swil-bowl and a swilpot. Barret, Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

SWILLINGS.* n. s. [from swill.] Hogwash. Cotgrave and Sherwood. A northern term. Grose.

To SWIM. v. n. preterite swam, swom, or swum.
[ƿimman, Saxon; swemmen, Dutch.]

1. To float on the water; not to sink.

I will scarce think you have swam in a gondola. Shakespeare.
We have ships and boats for going under water, and brooking of seas; also swimming-girdles and supporters. Bacon.

2. To move progressively in the water by the motion of the limbs.

Leap in with me into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many summers in a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out and escape. Acts, xxvii. 42.

The rest driven into the lake, where seeking to save their lives by swimming, they were slain in coming to land by the Spanish horsemen, or else in their swimming shot by the har-quebusiers. Knolles.

Animals swim in the same manner as they go, and need no other way of motion for natation in the water, than for progression upon the land. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The frightened wolf now swims among the sheep,
The yellow lion wanders in the deep:
The stag swims faster than he ran before. Dryden.

Blue Triton gave the signal from the shore,
The ready Nereids heard and swam before,
To smooth the seas. Dryden.

3. To be conveyed by the stream.
With tenders of our protection of them from the fury of those who would soon drown them, if they refused to swim down the popular stream with them. King Charles.
I swam with the tide, and the water under me was buoyant.
Dryden.

4. To glide along with a smooth or dizzy motion.
She with pretty and with swimming gait
Following. Shakespeare.

A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night. Dryden.

My slack hand dropt, and all the idle pomp,
Priests, altars, victims swam before my sight! Smith.

The fainting soul stood ready wing'd for flight,
And o'er his eye-balls swum the shades of night. Pope.

5. To be dizzy; to be vertiginous. See SWIMMING.
6. To be floated.

When the heavens are filled with clouds, when the earth swims in rain, and all nature wears a lowering countenance, I withdraw myself from these uncomfortable scenes into the visionary worlds of art. Addison, Spect.

Sudden the ditches swell, the meadows swim!
Thomson.

7. To have abundance of any quality; to flow in any thing.
They now swim in joy,
Ere long to swim at large, and laugh; for which
The world a world of tears must weep. Milton, P. L.

To SWIM. v. a. To pass by swimming.
Sometimes he thought to swim the stormy main,
By stretch of arms the distant shore to gain. Dryden.

SWIM.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of smoothly sliding motion.
Both the swim and the trip are properly mine; every body will affirm it that has any judgement in dancing, I assure you.
B. Jonson, Cynthia Revels.

2. The bladder of fishes by which they are supported in the water.

The braces have the nature and use of tendons, in contracting the swim, and thereby transfusing the air out of one bladder into another, or discharging it from them both. Grew.

SWIMMER. n. s. [from swim.]

1. One who swims.

Birds find ease in the depth of the air, as swimmers do in a deep water. Bacon.

Latirostrous and flat billed birds, being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived for action. Brown.

Life is oft preserv'd

By the bold swimmer, in the swift illapse
Of accident disastrous. Thomson.

2. A protuberance in the leg of a horse.

The swimmer is situated in the fore legs of a horse, above the knees, and upon the inside, and almost upon the back parts of the hind legs, a little below the ham: this part is without hair, and resembles a piece of hard dry horn. Farrier's Dict.

SWIMMING.* n. s. [from swim.]

1. The act of floating on the water, or of moving progressively in the water by the motion of the limbs.

2. Dizziness.

SWIMMINGLY. adv. [from swimming.] Smoothly; without obstruction. A low word.

John got on the battlements, and called to Nick, I hope the cause goes on swimmingly. Arbuthnot.

To SWINDLE.* v. a. To cheat; to impose upon the credulity of mankind, and thereby to defraud the unwary by false pretences and fictitious assumptions. A cant word. James, Milit. Dict.

SWINDLER.* n. s. [evidently taken from the Germ. schwindler, which perhaps comes from schwindel, giddiness of thought. See Echenburg's Eng. and Germ. Dict. P. ii. p. 197. James.] A sharper; a cheat. Ash, Suppl.

With us, it signifies a person who is more than thoughtless or giddy. We affix to the term the character of premeditated imposition; so that a swindler comes under the criminal code, and may be prosecuted accordingly. James, Milit. Dict.

SWINE.† n. s. [ȝpin, Saxon; swijn, Dutch. It is probably the plural of some old word, and is now the same in both numbers. Dr. Johnson. — Swein, M. Goth. a pig; plur. sweina, pigs. From the Gothick, therefore, the word is derived.] A hog; a pig. A creature remarkable for stupidity and nastiness.

O monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies! Shakespeare.

He will be swine-drunk; and in his sleep he does little harm, save to his bedcloaths. Shakespeare, All's Well.

Now I fat his swine, for others cheere. Chapman.

Who knows not Circe,

The daughter of the sun? whose charmed cup

Whoever tasted, lost his upright shape,

And downward fell into a groveling swine. Milton, Comus.

Had the upper part, to the middle, been of human shape, and all below swine, had it been murder to destroy it? Locke.

How instinct varies in the grov'ling swine,

Compar'd, half rear'ning elephant, with thine! Pope.

SWINEBREAD. n. s. [cyclaminus.] A kind of plant; truffles. Bailey.

SWINEGRASS. n. s. [centinodir, Lat.] An herb.

Swinging a red-hot iron about, or fastening it unto a wheel under that motion, it will sooner grow cold. Brown.

Swing thee in the air, then dash thee down,
To the hazard of thy brains and shatter'd sides. Milton, S. A.

3. To wave loosely.

If one approach to dare his force,

He swings his tail, and swiftly turns him round. Dryden.

SWING. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Motion of any thing hanging loosely.

In casting of any thing, the arms, to make a greater swing, are first cast backward. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Men use a pendulum, as a more steady and regular motion than that of the earth; yet if any one should ask how he certainly knows that the two successive swings of a pendulum are equal, it would be very hard to satisfy him. Locke.

2. A line on which any thing hangs loose.

3. Influence or power of a body put in motion.

The ram that batters down the wall,

For the great swing and rudeness of his poize,

They place before his hand that made the engine. Shakespeare.

In this encyclopædia, and round of knowledge, like the great wheels of heaven, we are to observe two circles, that, while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural and proper course in the sober wheel of the other. Brown.

The descending of the earth to this orbit is not upon that mechanical account Cartesius pretends, namely, the strong swing of the more solid globuli that overflow it. More.

4. Course; unrestrained liberty; abandonment to any motive.

Facts unjust

Commit, even to the full swing of his lust. Chapman.

Take thy swing;

For not to take, is but the self-same thing. Dryden.

These exuberant productions only excited and fomented his lusts; so that his whole time lay upon his hands, and gave him leisure to contrive and with full swing pursue his follies. Woodward.

Let them all take their swing

To pillage the king,

And get a blue ribband instead of a string. Swift.

5. Unrestrained tendency.

Where the swing goeth, there follow, fawn, flatter, laugh, and lie lustily at other men's liking. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Those that are so persuaded, desire to be wise in a way that will gratify their appetites, and so give up themselves to the swing of their unbounded propensions. Glanville.

Were it not for these, civil government were not able to stand before the prevailing swing of corrupt nature, which would know no honesty but advantage. South.

To SWINGE. v. a. [ȝwengan, Saxon. The g in this word, and all its derivatives, sounds as in gem, giant.]

1. To whip; to bastinado; to punish.

Sir, I was in love with my bed: I thank you, you swing'd me for my love, which makes me the bolder to chide you for your's. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

This very reverend letcher, quite worn out
With rheumatisms, and crippled with his gout,
Forgets what he in youthful times has done,
And swinges his own vices in his son. Dryden, jun. Juv.

The printer brought along with him a bundle of those papers, which, in the phrase of the whig-coffeehouses, have swinged off the Examiner. Swift.

SWISS.* } n. s. A native of Switzerland.

SWITZER. }

Spinola hath corrupted many among the Switzers.

Abp. Usher, Lett. p. 71.

Lawyers have more sober sense,
Than to argue at their own expence,
But make their best advantages
Of others' quarrels, like the Swiss.

Hudibras, iii. 3.

SWISS.* adj. Of or belonging to Switzerland.

A gentleman, hearing him talk of his Swiss compositions, cried out with a kind of laugh, Is our musick then to receive further improvements from Switzerland?

Addison, Spect. No. 31.

SWITCH.† n. s. [swaig, swæg, Su. Goth. surculus, baculus flexilis. Serenius.] A small flexible twig.

Fetch me a dozen crabtree staves, and strong ones; these are but switches. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

When a circle 'bout the wrist

Is made by beadle exorcist,

The body feels the spur and switch.

Hudibras.

Mauritania, on the fifth medal, leads a horse with something like a thread; in her other hand she holds a switch.

Addison.

To SWITCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To lash; to jerk.

Lay thy bridle's weight

Most of thy left side; thy right horse then switching, all thy throat

Spent in encouragements, give him; and all the rein let float.

Chapman, Iliad.

To SWITCH.* v. n. To walk with a kind of jerk:
used in some parts of the north.

SWITHE.* adv. [ƿiðe, Sax. valdē, promptē.] Hastily.

On a brown george with lousy swobbers fed.

Dryden.

2. Four privileged cards that are only incidentally used in betting at the game of whist.

The clergyman used to play at whist and swobbers: playing now and then a sober game at whist for pastime, it might be pardoned; but he could not digest those wicked swobbers.

Swift.

SWOLLEN.† } The participle passive of swell. [Sax.
SWOLN. } ƿpollen.]

Unto his aid she hastily did draw

Her dreadful beast, who, swoln with blood of late,

Came ramping forth with proud presumptuous gait.

Spenser.

When thus the gather'd storms of wretched love

In my swoln bosom with long war had strove,

At length they broke their bounds: at length their force

Bore down whatever met its stronger course;

Laid all the civil bonds of manhood waste,

And scatter'd ruin as the torrent past.

Prior.

Whereas at first we had only three of these principles, their number is already swoln to five.

Baker on Learning.

SWOM.† The preterite of swim.

You never swom the Hellespont.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

To SWOON. v. n. [apynan, Saxon.] To suffer a suspension of thought and sensation; to faint.

So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons;

Come all to help him, and so stop the air

By which he should revive.

Shakspeare.

If thou stand'st not i' th' state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueler in suffering, behold now presently, and swoon for what's to come upon thee.

Shakspeare.

We see the great and sudden effect of smells in fetching men again, when they swoon.

Bacon.

The most in years swoon'd first away for pain;

Then, scarce recover'd, spoke.

Dryden.

The woman finds it all a trick,

That he could swoon when she was sick;

And knows that in that grief he reckon'd

On black-ey'd Susan for his second.

Prior.

There appeared such an ecstasy in his action, that he seemed ready to swoon away in the surprize of joy.

Tatler.

SWOON. n. s. [from the verb.] A lipothymy; a fainting fit.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Faintings, swoonings of despair.

Milton, S. A.

To SWOOP. † v. a. [I suppose formed from the sound. Dr. Johnson. — It is evidently the same as sweep, as Mr. H. Tooke has observed.]

1. To seize by falling at once as a hawk upon his prey.

A fowl in Madagascar, called a ruck, the feathers of whose wings are twelve paces, can with as much ease swoop up an elephant as our kites do a mouse.

Wilkins.

This mouldering piecemeal in your hands did fall,

And now at last you came to swoop it all.

Dryden.

2. To prey upon; to catch up.

The physician looks with another eye on the medicinal herb than the grazing ox, which swoops it in with the common grass.

Glanville, Scops.

To SWOOP. † v. n. To pass with pomp. Not used.

The nine-ston'd trophy thus whilst she doth entertain,

Proud Tamer swoops along with such a lusty train,

As fits so brave a flood.

Drayton.

SWOOP. n. s. [from the verb.] Fall of a bird of prey upon his quarry.

All my pretty ones?

Did you say all? What, all? O hellkite! all!

What, all my pretty chickens and their dam,

At one fell swoop?

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The eagle fell into the fox's quarters, and carried away a whole litter of cubs at a swoop.

L' Estrange.

To SWOP. † v. a. [Of uncertain derivation. Dr.

Johnson. — A swop between two persons, is where,

by the consent of the parties, without any delay, any reckoning or counting, or other adjustment of proportion, something is swept off at once by each of them. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 263.]

To change; to exchange one thing for another.

A low word.

When I drove a thrust home, he put it by,

And cried, as in derision, spare the stripling;

Oh that insulting word! I would have swopp'd

Youth for old age, and all my life behind,

To have been then a momentary man.

Dryden, Cleom.

SWOP. \ n. s.* An exchange. See the verb.

These had made a foolish swop between a couple of thick bandy legs, and two long trapsticks.

Spect. No. 559.

SWORD. n. s. [pæonb, Sax. sweerd, Dutch.]

1. A weapon used either in cutting or thrusting; the usual weapon of fights hand to hand.

Old unhappy traitor, the sword is out

That must destroy thee.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Each man took his sword, and slew all the males.

Genesis.

But the sword

Of Michael from the armoury of God

Was giv'n him temper'd so, that neither keen

Nor solid might resist that edge: it met

The sword of Satan with steep force to smite

Descending, and in half cut sheer; nor stay'd,

But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering shar'd

All his right side: then Satan first knew pain,

And writh'd him to and fro convolv'd; so sore

The griding sword with discontinuous wound

Pass'd through him.

Milton, P. L.

2. Destruction by war: as, fire and sword.

The sword without, and terrour within.

Deut. xxxii. 25.

3. Vengeance of justice.

Justice to Merit does weak aid afford,

She quits the balance, and resigns the sword.

Dryden.

4. Emblem of authority.

This I, her sword-bearer, do carry,

For civil deed and military.

Hudibras.

SWO'RDED. adj. [from sword.] Girt with a sword.

The sworded seraphim

Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd.

Milton, Ode.

Cæsar will

Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to th' shew

Against a sworder.

Shakspeare.

SWO'RDFISH. n. s. [xiphias.] A fish with a long sharp bone issuing from his head.

A swordfish small him from the rest did sunder,

That in his throat him pricking softly under,

His wide abyss him forced forth to spew.

Spenser.

Malpighi observed the middle of the optick nerve of the swordfish to be a large membrane, folded, according to its length, in many doubles, like a fan.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

Our little fleet was now engag'd so far,

That, like the swordfish in the whale, they fought;

The combat only seem'd a civil war,

Till through their bowels we our passage wrought.

Dryden.

SWO'RDGRASS. n. s. [gladiolus.] A kind of sedge; glader.

Ainsworth.

SWO'RDKNOT. n. s. [sword and knot.] Ribband tied to the hilt of the sword.

Wigs with wigs, swordknots with swordknots strive,

Beaus banish beaus, and coaches coaches drive.

Pope.

SWO'RDRAW. n. s. Violence; the law by which all is yielded to the stronger.

So violence

Proceeded, and oppression, and swordlaw,

Through all the plain, and refuge none was found.

Milton, P. L.

SWO'RDMAN. n. s. [sword and man.] Soldier; fighting man.

Worthy fellows, and like to prove most sinewy swordmen.

Shakspeare, All's Well.

At Lecca's house,

Among your swordmen, where so many associates

Both of thy mischief and thy madness met.

B. Jonson.

Essex was made lieutenant-general of the army, the darling of the swordmen.

Clarendon.

SWO'RDPLAYER. n. s. [sword and play.] Gladiator; fencer; one who exhibits in publick his skill at the weapons by fighting prizes.

These they called swordplayers, and this spectacle a sword-fight.

Hakewill on Providence.

How soon unsay

What feign'd submission swore.

Milton, P. L.

SWORN. The participle passive of swear.

What does else want credit, come to me,

And I'll be sworn 'tis true.

Shakspeare.

I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grim necessity; and he and I
Will keep a league till death. Shakespeare, Rich. II.
They that are mad against me, are sworn against me. Ps.
He refused not the civil offer of a pharisee, though his sworn enemy; and would eat at the table of those who sought his ruin. Calamy, Serm.

To shelter innocence,
The nation all elects some patron-knight,
Sworn to be true to love, and slave to fame,
And many a valiant chief enrolls his name. Granville.

To SWOUND.* v. n. To swoon. Formerly swoon was so written; and it is still sometimes vulgarly so spoken.

All in gore blood; I swounded at the sight.
Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

SWUM. Preterite and participle passive of swim.
Air, water, earth,
By fowl, fish, beast, was flown, was swum, was walk'd Frequent. Milton, P. L.

SWUNG. Preterite and participle passive of swing.
Her hand within her hair she wound,
Swung her to earth, and dragg'd her on the ground. Addison.

SYB.*† adj. Properly sib, which see.
SYBARI'TICAL.*† adj. [from the Sybarite, Latin, SYBARI'TICK. } inhabitants of Sybaris, so given to voluptuousness, that their luxury became proverbial.] Luxurious; wanton.

He should have hoped to match him in their sybaritical cloysters, where they abound with meat, and drink, and ease.

Dine with me on a single dish, to atone to philosophy for the sybaritic dinners of Prior-Park.

Warburton, Lett. to Hurd, L. 125.

SYCAMINE.*† n. s. [συκάμιος, Gr. πικωμορ, Sax.
SYCAMORE. } The sycamore of Scripture is not the same with ours. Wicliffe calls it the more-tree.
So συκάμιον, proprie album morum. Critop.
Emend. in Meursii Gloss. p. 85.] A tree.

Sycamore is our acer majus; one of the kinds of maples: it is a quick grower. Mortimer.

If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, Be thou plucked up, and it should obey you.
St. Luke, xvii. 6.

I was no prophet, but an herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. Amos, vii. 14.

Go to yonder sycamore-tree, and hide your bottle of drink under its hollow root. Walton, Angler.

Sycamores with eglantine were spread;
A hedge about the sides, a covering over head. Dryden.

SY'COPIANCY.* n. s. [from sycophant.]

1. The practice of an informer.

One that best knew it [the condition of the collectors or farmers of taxes] branded it with poling and sycophancy.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. Matthew called,

2. The practice of a flatterer.

The sycophancy of A. Philips had prejudiced Mr. Addison against Pope. Warburton, Note on Pope's 4th Pastoral.

SYCOPHANT.*† n. s. [sycophanta, Lat. συκοφαντης,
Gr. from συκον, a fig, and φαίω, to shew, to denounce. To export figs from Athens was forbidden by law; and they, who informed against persons disregarding this law, were called sycophants.] A talebearer; a makebate; a malicious parasite.

Accusing sycophants, of all men, did best sort to his nature;
but therefore not seeming sycophants, because of no evil they said, they could bring any new or doubtful thing unto him, but such as already he had been apt to determine; so as they came but as proofs of his wisdom, fearful and more secure, while the fear he had figured in his mind had any possibility of event. Sidney.

Men know themselves void of those qualities which the impudent sycophant, at the same time, both ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing. South.

To SY'COPHANT. v. n. [συκοφανέω; from the noun.]

To play the sycophant. A low bad word.

His sycophanting arts being detected, that game is not to be played the second time; whereas a man of clear reputation, though his barque be split, has something left towards setting up again. Gov. of the Tongue.

To SY'COPHANT.* v. a. To calumniate. Not in use.

He makes it his first business to tamper with his reader by sycophanting and misnaming the work of his adversary.

Milton, Apol. for Smectynna.

SYCOPHA'NTICAL.* adj. [from sycophant.] Meanly officious; basely parasitical.

Henry the eighth of England [was] led by the advice of some of his sycophantical popish prelates.

Sir Simonds D'Ewes, Pr. Pract. (1645,) p. 62.

They — suffered themselves to be cheated and ruined by a sycophantical parasite. South, Serm. viii. 192.

SY'COPHANTICK.*† adj. [from sycophant.]

1. Talebearing; mischievously officious.

2. Fawning.

Mason.

'Tis well known, that in these times the illiberal sycophantick manner of devotion was by the wiser sort contemned.

Ld. Shaftesbury.

To SY'COPHANTISE. v. n. [from sycophant.] To play the talebearer. Dict.

SY'COPHANTRY.* n. s. [from sycophant.] A malignant tale-bearing.

It is fit that the accused should be acquainted with this, that competent time and means may be allowed for his defence, that his plea should receive, if not a favorable, yet a free audience;
the contrary practice is indeed rather backbiting, whispering, supplanting or sycophantry than fair and lawful judging.

Barrow, vol. i. S. 20.

SYLLA'BICAL.*† adj. [from syllable.] Relating to syllables; consisting of syllables.

The Christians have marked every the least various lection, even syllabical. Leslie, Truth of Christianity Demonstr.

SYLLA'BICALLY.*† adv. [from syllabical.] In a syllabical manner.

These and many like places, well considered, (upon which no brand of lie or falsity may be fixed,) though they do not literally and syllabically agree with the quotation, (but are verified either in a partial or concurrent sense,) may sufficiently justify that place in the first front of the Liturgy to be no lie, but a divine scriptural truth.

Bp. Gauden, Consid. on the Lit. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 25.

SYLLA'BICK.*† adj. [syllabique, Fr. from syllable.]
Relating to syllables.

In the responses also, which are noted for various voices, this syllabic distinction is sufficiently attended to.

Mason, on Ch. Musick, p. 95.

SYLLABLE. n. s. [συλλαβή; syllabe, Fr.]

1. As much of a word as is uttered by the help of one vowel, or one articulation.

I heard

Each syllable that breath made up between them. Shakespeare.

There is that property in all letters of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

2. Any thing proverbially concise.

Abraham, Job, and the rest that lived before any syllable of the law of God was written, did they not sin as much as we do in every action not commanded? Hooker.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

SYL

He hath told so many melancholy stories, without one syllable of truth, that he hath blunted the edge of my fears.

Swift.

TO SYLLABLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To utter; to pronounce; to articulate. Not in use.

Airy tongues that syllable men's names

On sands, and shores, and desert wildernesses. Milton, Comus.

SYLLABUB. n. s. [Rightly sillabub, which see.] Milk and acids.

No syllabubs made at the milking pail,

But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale. Beaumont.

Two lines would express all they say in two pages: 'tis nothing but whipt syllabub and froth, without solidity. Felton.

SYLLABUS. n. s. [συλλαβὴς.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse.

SYLLOGISM. n. s. [συλλογισμὸς; syllogisme, Fr.] An argument composed of three propositions: as, every man thinks; Peter is a man; therefore Peter thinks.

A piece of rhetorick is a sufficient argument of logick, an apologue of Æsop beyond a syllogism in Barbara. Brown.

What a miraculous thing should we count it, if the flint and the steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and syllogisms? Bentley.

SYLLOGISTICAL. } adj. [συλλογιστικός; from syllogism.]

SYLLOGISTICK. } Relating to a syllogism; consisting of a syllogism.

Though we suppose subject and predicate, and copula, and propositions and syllogistical connexions in their reasoning, there is no such matter: but the intire business is at the same moment present with them, without deducing one thing from another. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism, since the complexion does not belong to the syllogistick form of it. Watts, Logick.

SYLLOGISTICALLY. adv. [from syllogistical.] In the form of a syllogism.

A man knows first, and then he is able to prove syllogistically; so that syllogism comes after knowledge, when a man has no need of it. Locke.

SYLLOGIZATION.* n. s. [from syllogize.] The act of reasoning by syllogism.

From mathematical bodies, and the truths resulting from them, they passed to the contemplation of truth in general; to the soul, and its powers both of intuition and syllogization. Harris, Three Treat. Notes, p. 265.

TO SYLLOGIZE. v. n. [syllogizer, Fr. συλλογίζων.] To reason by syllogism.

Logick is, in effect, an art of syllogizing. Baker.

Men have endeavoured to transform logick into a kind of mechanism, and to teach boys to syllogize, or frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge. Watts.

SYLLOGIZER.* n. s. [from syllogize.] One who reasons by syllogism.

Every syllogizer is not presently a match to cope with Bellarmine, Baronius, Stapleton. Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 150.

SYLPH.* } n. s. [sylyph, sylyphide, Fr. "nom que les cabalistes donnent aux prétendus génies élémentaires de l'air. Ce mot peut venir du Gr. σίλφ, (silphé), nom d'une espèce d'insecte qui ne veillit jamais." Morin.] A fabled being of the air.

I should as soon expect to meet a nymph or a sylyph for a wife or a mistress. Temple, Ess.

The light coquettes in sylyphs aloft repair, And sport and flutter in the fields of air.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

Ye sylyphs and sylyphids, to your chief give ear, Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and demons, hear. Ibid.

SYLVAN. adj. [Better silvan.] Woody; shady; relating to woods.

SYM

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm, A sylovan scene! and as the ranks ascend, Shade above shade, a woody theatre Of stateliest view. Milton, P. L.

Eternal greens the mossy margin grace, Watch'd by the sylovan genius of the place. Pope.

SYLVAN. n. s. [sylovan, Fr.] A wood-god, or satyr; perhaps sometimes a rustic.

Her private orchards wall'd on ev'ry side;

To lawless syloans all access deny'd. Pope.

SYMBOLE. } n. s. [symbole, Fr. σύμβολον; symbolum, Latin.]

1. An abstract; a compendium; a comprehensive form.

Beginning with the symbol of our faith, upon that the author of the gloss enquires into the nature of faith. Baker.

2. A type; that which comprehends in its figure a representation of something else.

Salt, as incorruptible, was the symbol of friendship; which, if it casually fell, was accounted ominous, and their amity of no duration. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Words are the signs and symbols of things; and as, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so words and names pass for things themselves. South, Sermon.

The heathens made choice of these lights as apt symbols of eternity, because, contrary to all sublunary beings, though they seem to perish every night, they renew themselves every morning. Addison on Medals.

3. A sign or badge to know one by; a memorial.

That as a sacred symbol it may dwell In her sonne's flesh to mind revengement.

Spenser, F. Q.

This reckoning I will pay

Without conferring symbols.

B. Jonson, Epigr.

4. Lot; sentence of adjudication.

The persons who are to be judged; even you and I and all the world; kings and priests, nobles and learned, the crafty and the easy, the wise and the foolish, the rich and the poor, the prevailing tyrant and the oppressed party shall all appear to receive their symbol. Bp. Taylor, Sermon (ed. 1665), p. 3.

SYMBOLICAL. adj. [symbolique, Fr. συμβολικός; from symbol.] Representative; typical; expressing by signs; comprehending something more than itself.

By this inroad idolatry first crept in, men converting the symbolical use of idols into their proper worship, and receiving the representation of things unto them as the substance and thing itself. Brown.

The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as himself appointed. Bp. Taylor.

SYMBOLICALLY. adv. [from symbolical.] Typically; by representation.

This distinction of animals was hieroglyphical, in the inward sense implying an abstinence from certain vices, symbolically intimated from the nature of those animals. Brown.

It symbolically teaches our duty, and promotes charity by a real signature and a sensible sermon. Bp. Taylor.

SYMBOLIZATION. n. s. [from symbolize.] The act of symbolizing; representation; resemblance.

The hieroglyphical symbols of Scripture, excellently intended in the species of things sacrificed in the dreams of Pharaoh, are oftentimes racked beyond their symbolizations. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO SYMBOLIZE. v. n. [symboliser, Fr. from symbol.] To have something in common with another by representative qualities.

Our king finding himself to symbolize in many things with that king of the Hebrews, honoured him with the title of this foundation. Bacon.

The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with the pleasing of any single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Aristotle and the schools have taught, that air and water, being symbolizing elements, in the quality of moisture, are easily transmutable into one another. Boyle.

They both symbolize in this, that they love to look upon themselves through multiplying glasses. Howell.

I affectedly symbolized in careless mirth and freedom with the libertines, to circumvent libertinism. More.

The soul is such, that it strangely symbolizes with the thing it mightily desires. South, Serm.

TO SYMBOLIZE. v. a. To make representative of something.

Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours.

SYMMETRICAL.* adj. [from symmetry.] Commensurable. Phillips.

It was both the doctrine of the apostles, and the practice of the church, while it was symmetrual, to obey the magistrate.

More, Myst. of God. (1660,) p. 204.

SYMMETRIAN. n. s. [from symmetry.] One eminently studious of proportion.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrians would allow. Sidney.

SYMMETRICAL.† adj. [from symmetry.] Proportionate; having parts well adapted to each other.

I have known many a woman with an exact shape, and a symmetrical assemblage of beautiful features, please nobody.

Ld. Chesterfield.

SYMMETRIST. n. s. [from symmetry.] One very studious or observant of proportion.

Some exact symmetrists have been blamed for being too true.

Wotton, Architecture.

TO SYMMETRIZE.* v. a. [from symmetry.] To make proportionate.

He would soon have supplied every deficiency, and symmetrized every disproportion. Burke.

SYMMETRY. n. s. [symmetrie, French; συμμετρία, Greek.] Adaptation of parts to each other; proportion; harmony; agreement of one part to another.

She by whose lines proportion should be Examined, measure of all symmetry;

Whom had that ancient seen, who thought souls made

Of harmony, he would at next have said

That harmony was she. Donne.

And in the symmetry of her parts is found

A pow'r, like that of harmony in sound. Waller.

Symmetry, equality, and correspondence of parts, is the discernment of reason, not the object of sense. More.

Nor were they only animated by him, but their measure and symmetry were owing to him. Dryden.

SYMPATHE'TICAL. } adj. [sympathetique, Fr. from sympathy.]
SYMPATHE'TICK. } pathy. Having mutual sensation; being affected either by what happens to the other; feeling in consequence of what another feels.

Hereupon are grounded the gross mistakes, in the cure of diseases, not only from sympathetick receipts, but amulets, charms, and all incantatory applications. Brown.

United by this sympathetick bond,

You grow familiar, intimate, and fond. Roscommon.

To confer at the distance of the Indies by sympathetick conveyances, may be as usual to future times as to us in a literary correspondence. Glanville, Scpps.

To you our author makes her soft request,

Who speak the kindest, and who write the best:

Your sympathetick hearts she hopes to move,

From tender friendship and endearing love. Prior.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves, and sympathetical and vital passions produced within ourselves. Bentley.

SYMPATHE'TICALLY.† adv. [from sympathetick.] With sympathy; in consequence of sympathy.

He seems to have caught sympathetically Sandys's sudden impulse to break forth into a devout song at the awful and inspiring spectacle. Warton, Notes on Milton's Sm. Poems.

TO SYMPATHIZE. v. n. [sympatiser, Fr. from sympathy.]

1. To feel with another; to feel in consequence of what another feels; to feel mutually.

The men sympathize with the mastiffs in robustious and rough coming on. Shakspeare.

The thing of courage,

As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize. Shakspeare.

Nature, in awe to him,

Hath doff'd her gaudy trim,

With her great master so to sympathize. Milton, Ode.

The limbs of his body is to every one a part of himself: he sympathizes, and is concerned for them. Locke.

Their countrymen were particularly attentive to all their story, and sympathized with their heroes in all their adventures. Addison, Spect.

Though the greatness of their mind exempts them from fear, yet none condole and sympathize more heartily. Collier.

2. To agree; to fit. Not proper.

Green is a pleasing colour, from a blue and a yellow mixed together, and by consequence blue and yellow are two colours which sympathize. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

SYMPATHY. n. s. [sympathie, Fr. συμπάθεια.]

Fellow-feeling; mutual sensibility; the quality of being affected by the affection of another.

A world of earthly blessings to my soul,

If sympathy of love unite our thoughts. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

You are not young; no more am I: go to, then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; ha! ha! then there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

But what it is,

The action of my life is like it, which I'll keep,

If but for sympathy. Shakspeare, Cymb.

I started back;

It started back: but pleas'd I soon return'd;

Pleas'd it return'd as soon, with answering looks

Of sympathy and love. Milton, P. L.

They saw, but other sight instead, a crowd

Of ugly serpents: horror on them fell,

And horrid sympathy. Milton, P. L.

Or sympathy, or some connatural force,

Powerful at greatest distance to unite,

With secret amity, things of like kind,

By secretest conveyance. Milton, P. L.

There never was any heart truly great and generous, that was not also tender and compassionate: it is this noble quality that makes all men to be of one kind; for every man would be a distinct species to himself, were there no sympathy among individuals. South, Serm.

Can kindness to desert, like your's, be strange?

Kindness by secret sympathy is ty'd;

For noble souls in nature are ally'd. Dryden.

There are such associations made in the minds of most men, and to this might be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in them. Locke.

SYMPHO'NIOUS. adj. [from symphony.] Harmonious; agreeing in sound.

Up he rode,

Follow'd with acclamation and the sound

Symphonious of ten thousand harps, that tun'd

SYMPHONY.† n. s. [symphonie, Fr. συμφωνία and φωνή.]

Gr. The word was formerly in use for a kind of musical instrument. "Symphonia non significat hic concertum, sed instrumentum musicum, confectum è conjunctis fistulis, &c." Poli Synops. Crit. in Dan. iii. 5. where other accounts are given of it. Our translation of dulcimer is in the margin explained by Chald. symphony. See Daniel, iii. 5.]

Concert of instruments; harmony of mingled sounds.

His eldre sone was in the feeld, and whanne he came, and neighede to the hous, he herde a symfonye and a croude. Wicliffe, St. Luke, xv.

A learned searcher from Pythagoras's school, where it was a maxim that the images of all things are latent in numbers, determines the comeliest proportion between breadths and heights, reducing symmetry to symphony, and the harmony of sound to a kind of harmony in sight. Wotton.

Speak ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
Angels! for ye behold him, and with songs
And choral symphonies, day without night,
Circle his throne rejoicing.

Milton, P. L.

The trumpets sound,
And warlike symphony is heard around;
The marching troops through Athens take their way;
The great earl-marshal orders their array.

Dryden.

SYMPHYSIS. n. s. [συν and φύω.]

Symphysis, in its original signification, denotes a connascency, or growing together; and perhaps is meant of those bones which in young children are distinct, but after some years unite and consolidate into one bone.

Wiseman.

SYMPO'SIACK. adj. [symposiack, Fr. συμποσιακός, Gr.]

Relating to merry makings; happening where company is drinking together.

By desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we only mean in society and comotation, from the ancient custom of symposiack meetings to wear chaplets of roses about their heads.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

In some of those symposiack disputations amongst my acquaintance, I affirmed that the dietetick part of medicine depended upon scientifick principles.

Arbuthnot.

SYMPO'SIUM.* n. s. [Latin.] A feast; a merry making; a drinking together.

It appears that the company dined so very late, (in 1609,) as at half an hour after eleven in the morning; and that it was the fashion to ride to this polite symposium on a Spanish jennet, a servant running before with his master's cloak.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iv. 18.

SYMPTOM. n. s. [symptome, French; σύμπτωμα, Greek.]

1. Something that happens concurrently with something else, not as the original cause, nor as the necessary or constant effect.

The symptoms, as Dr. Sydenham remarks, which are commonly scorbutick, are often nothing but the principles or seeds of a growing, but unripe gout.

Blackmore.

2. A sign; a token.

Ten glorious campaigns are passed, and now, like the sick man, we are expiring with all sorts of good symptoms.

Swift.

SYMPTOMA'TICAL. } adj. [symptomatique, French; from SYMPTOMA'TICK. } symptom.] Happening concurrently, or occasionally.

Symptomatical is often used to denote the difference between the primary and secondary causes in diseases; as a fever from pain is said to be symptomatical, because it arises from pain only; and therefore the ordinary means in fevers are not in such cases to be had recourse to, but to what will remove the pain; for when that ceases, the fever will cease, without any direct means taken for that.

Quincy.

By fomentation and a cataplasm the swelling was discussed; and the fever, then appearing but symptomatical, lessened as the heat and pain mitigated.

Wiseman, Surgery.

SYMPTOMA'TICALLY. adv. [from symptomatical.] In the nature of a symptom.

The causes of a bubo are vicious humours abounding in the blood, or in the nerves, excreted sometimes critically, sometimes symptomatically.

Wiseman.

SYNAGO'GICAL. adj. [from synagogue.] Pertaining to a synagogue.

SYNAGOGUE. n. s. [synagogue, Fr. συναγωγή, Gr.] An assembly of the Jews to worship.

Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue.
As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath-day.

Shakspeare.

St. Luke, iv. 16.

VOL. IV.

SYNALE'PHA. n. s. [συναλοιφή, Gr.] A contraction or excision of a syllable in a Latin verse, by joining together two vowels in the scanning or cutting off the ending vowel; as, ill' ego.

Virgil, though smooth, is far from affecting it: he frequently uses synalephas, and concludes his sense in the middle of his verse.

Dryden.

SY'NARCHY.* n. s. [συναρχία, Gr.] Joint sovereignty.

The synarchies or joint reigns of father and son have rendered the chronology a little difficult.

Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bible.

SYNARTHRO'SIS. n. s. [σύν and ἄρθρον.] A close conjunction of two bones.

There is a conspicuous motion where the conjunction is called diarthrosis, as in the elbow; an obscure one, where the conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus.

Wiseman, Surgery.

SYNA'XIS.* n. s. [σύναξις, Gr.] A meeting of persons; a congregation.

They celebrated their synases and communions in grots and retirements.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon. (1651,) p. 260.

SYNCHONDRO'SIS. n. s. [σύν and χόνδρος.]

Synchondrosis is an union by gristles of the sternon to the ribs.

Wiseman.

SY'NCHRONAL.* adj. [σύν and χρονός, Gr.] Happening at the same time; belonging to the same time.

That glorious estate of the church, which is synchroanal to the second and third thunder.

More on the Sev. Churches, p. 141.

The things, that are found to be synchroanal, have also a natural connexion and complication one with another.

More, Myst. of God. p. 182.

SY'NCHRONAL.* n. s. That which happens at the same time, or belongs to the same time, with another thing.

The near cognation and colligation of those seven synchroanal that are contemporary to the six first trumpets.

More, Myst. of God. p. 182.

SYNCHRO'NICAL. adj. [σύν and χρονός.] Happening together at the same time.

It is difficult to make out how the air is conveyed into the left ventricle of the heart, the systole and diastole of the heart and lungs being far from synchroanal.

Boyle.

SY'NCHRONISM. n. s. [σύν and χρονός.] Concurrence of events happening at the same time.

The coherence and synchroism of all the parts of the Mosaisal chronology, after the Flood, bear a most regular testimony to the truth of his history.

Hale.

To SY'NCHRONIZE.* v. n. [from synchroism.] To concur at the same time; to agree in regard to the same time.

The most genuine sense to me, is to synchroism with the history of that time wherein John lived.

Dr. Robinson, Endora, (1658,) p. 104.

All these synchroism with the six first trumpets.

More, Myst. of God. (1660,) p. 191.

SY'NCHRONOUS. adj. [σύν and χρονός.] Happening at the same time.

The variations of the gravity of the air keep both the solids and fluids in an oscillatory motion, synchroanal and proportional to their changes.

Arbuthnot on Air.

SY'NCHYSIS.* n. s. [σύν and χυσις.] A confusion; a confused arrangement of words in a sentence.

The English translator hath expressed the sense, but not translated strictly to the words, by reason of the synchysis and involved and perplexed trajection being not well distinguished.

Knatchbull, Annot. N. Test. p. 133.

To SY'NCOPATE.* v. a. [from syncope.]

1. To contract; to abbreviate, by taking from the middle of a word.

The tyrant time, which hath swallowed many names, hath also in use of speech changed more by contracting, syncope, curtailing, and mollifying them.

Camden, Rem. in Surnames.

2. [In musick.] To divide a note. See SYNCOPE.

SY'NCOPE.† n. s. [syncope, Fr. συνκοπή, Gr.]

1. Fainting fit.

The symptoms attending gunshot wounds are pain, fever, delirium, and syncope.

Wiseman.

2. Contraction of a word by cutting off a part in the middle.

3. The division of a note, used when two or more notes of one part answer to a single one of the other.

Mus. Dict.

SY'NCOPIST. n. s. [from syncope.] Contractor of words.

To outshine all the modern syncopists, and thoroughly content my English readers, I intend to publish a Spectator that shall not have a single vowel in it.

Spectator.

To SY'NCOPIZE.* v. a. [from syncope.] To contract; to abridge.

Whether to ascribe this to some modish affectation of times and humours, or more particularly to a poetical humour of syncoptizing and contracting their words.

Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tut. (1680), p. 114.

To SY'NDICATE.† v. a. [syndiquer, French; σύν and δική, Gr.] To judge; to pass judgement on; to censure. An unusual word, as Dr. Johnson observes, citing the passage from Hakewill: to whom, however, it is not peculiar. It is now perhaps obsolete.

Some men must be intimidated and syndicated with commissions, before they will deliver the fruits of justice.

Donne, Devot. p. 475.

Aristotle undertook to censure and syndicate his master, and all law-makers before him.

Hakewill on Providence.

SY'NDICK.* n. s. [syndic, Fr. σύν and δική.] A kind of chief magistrate; a curator.

May it please you, that Dr. Gunning and Dr. Pearson may be your legal syndicks for you, and in your name, to treat and conclude with the said archbishop concerning his and your right and interest in the said books.

Grace in the Senate, Univ. Cambr. July 22. 1662.

They have two or three Greek syndics on the part of the people, to take care that the ancient laws of the island are observed.

Pococke, Observ. on Greece.

SY'NDROME. n. s. [συνδρομή, Gr.] Concurrent action; concurrence.

All things being linked together by an uninterrupted chain of causes, every single motion owns a dependance on such a syndrome of prerequisite motors.

Glanville, Scepis.

SYNECDOCHE. n. s. [synecdoche, Fr. συνεκδοχή, Gr.] A figure by which part is taken for the whole, or the whole for part.

Because they are instruments of grace in the hand of God, and by these his holy spirit changes our hearts: therefore the whole work is attributed to them by a synecdoche; that is, they do in this manner the work for which God ordained them.

Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

SYNECDO'CHICAL. adj. [from synecdoche.] Expressed by a synecdoche; implying a synecdoche.

Should I, Lindamer, bring you into hospitals, and shew you there how many souls, narrowly lodged in synecdochical bodies, see their earthen cottages moulder away to dust, those miserable persons, by the loss of one limb after another, surviving but part of themselves, and living to see themselves dead and buried by piecemeal?

Boyle, Scraph. Love.

SYNECDO'CHICALLY.* adv. [from synecdochical.] According to a synecdochical way of speaking.

Thus did our Saviour rise from the dead on the third day properly; and was three days and three nights in the earth synecdochically.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

SYNERGI'STICK.* adj. [from συνεργάζουαι, Gr.] Co-operating.

Luther's notions of the irresistible decrees, which he afterwards published in his book De servo arbitrio, shocked both parties, and caused a kind of revolution on all sides. The papists raised an outcry against their own doctrine, when expressed in so ungarded a manner: and the Saxon divines, with Melancthon at their head, silently withdrew themselves from their master Luther in this point; and struck out, or rather adopted, another system, viz. the synergistical. On this system of the co-operation of grace and free-will, the Augustan Confession is wholly built.

Dean Tucker, Apol. for the Ch. of Eng. 1772, p. 60.

SYNNEURO'SIS. n. s. [σύν and νεῦρον.]

Synneurosis is when the connexion is made by a ligament. Of this in symphysis we find instances, in the connexion of the ossa pubis together, especially in women, by a ligamentous substance. In articulation, it is either round, as that which unites the head of the os femoris to the coxa; or broad, as the tendon of the patella, which unites it to the os tibiae.

Wiseman, Surgery.

SYNOD.† n. s. [jeonob, Saxon; synode, French; σύνδος, Gr.]

1. An assembly called for consultation: it is used particularly of ecclesiasticks. A provincial synod is commonly used, and a general council.

The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Since the mortal and intestine jars

'Twixt thy seditious contrymen and us,

It hath in solemn synod been decreed,

To admit no traffick to our adverse towns.

Shakspeare.

The opinion was not only condemned by the synod, but imputed to the emperor as extreme madness.

Bacon.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd

Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude

Chaos of presby'try, where laymen guide

With the tame woolpack clergy by their side.

Cleveland.

His royal majesty, according to these Presbyterian rules, shall have no power to command his clergy to keep a national synod.

White.

Well have ye judg'd, well ended long debate,

Synod of gods! and, like to what ye are,

Great things resolv'd.

Milton, P. L.

Let us call to synod all the blest,

Through heaven's wide bounds.

Milton, P. L.

The second council of Nice, he saith, I most irreverently call that wise synod; upon which he falls into a very tragical exclamation, that I should dare to reflect so much dishonour on a council.

Stillingfleet.

Parent of gods and men, propitious Jove!

And you bright synod of the powers above,

On this my son your gracious gifts bestow.

Dryden.

2. Conjunction of the heavenly bodies.

Howe'er love's native hours are set,

Whatever starry synod met,

'Tis in the mercy of her eye,

If poor love shall live or die.

Crashaw.

Their planetary motions and aspects

Of noxious efficacy, and when to join

In synod unbenign.

Milton, P. L.

As the planets and stars have, according to astrologers, in their great synods, or conjunctions, much more powerful influences on the air than are ascribed to one or two of them out of that aspect; so divers particulars, which, whilst they lay scattered among the writings of several authors were inconsiderable, when they come to be laid together, may oftentimes prove highly useful to physiology in their conjunctions.

Boyle.

SY'NODAL. † n. s. [from synod.] Money paid anciently to the bishop, &c. at Easter visitation.

Synodals were [anciently] the publication or recital of the provincial constitutions in the parish churches.

Wheatly on the Comm. Pr. ch. iii. § 10.

The synodals to the bishop at Easter, is two shillings.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 8.

SY'NODAL. † } adj. [synodique, synodal, French; from
SYNO'DICAL. } synod.
SYNO'DICK. }

1. Relating to a synod; transacted in a synod.

The various dignity of their several churches, and of their many functions, rules, and orders in them, by reason of the frequency of their synodical and processional meetings, have necessarily raised many questions of place among them.

Selden.

St. Athanasius writes a synodical epistle to those of Antioch, to compose the differences among them upon the ordination of Paulinus.

Stillington fleet.

The authority of some synodal canons.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.

2. [synodique, French.] Reckoned from one conjunction with the sun to another.

The diurnal and annual revolutions of the sun, to us are the measures of day and year; and the synodick revolution of the moon measures the month.

Holder.

The moon makes its synodical motion about the earth in twenty-nine days twelve hours and about forty-four minutes.

Locke, Elem. of Nat. Philosophy.

SYNO'DICALLY. adv. [from synodical.] By the authority of a synod or publick assembly.

It shall be needful for those churches synodically to determine something in those points.

Sanderson.

The alterations made by the commissioners were brought to the convocation, then sitting, where they were synodically agreed upon.

Nelson.

SYNONYMA. † n. s. [Latin; συνώνυμα;] Names which signify the same thing.

Every tinker for his chink may cry,
Rogue, bawd, and cheater, call you by the surnames
And known synonyma of your profession.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

SYNO'NYMAL. * adj. [συνώνυμος;] Synonymous.

Repetitions here, and doubled sentences, and enlargements by synonymal words, &c. before the shutting up of the period, are but necessary.

Instruct. for Orat. (1682), p. 95.

SYNO'NYMALLY. * adv. [from synonymal.] Synonymously.

The fifth canon uses synonymally.

Spelman.

SY'NONYME. * n. s. [synonyme, Fr. from the Gr. σύν, with, and ὄνυμα, name. Eol. ὄνυμα;] A word of the same meaning as some other word.

Mason.

Most synonymes have some minute distinction.

Reid.

To SYNO'NYMISE. v. a. [from synonyma.] To express the same thing in different words.

This word fortis we may synonymize after all these fashions, stout, hardy, valiant, doughty, courageous, adventurous, brave, bold, daring, intrepid.

Camden, Rem.

SYNO'NYMOUS. † adj. [synonyme, Fr. συνώνυμος;] Expressing the same thing by different words; having the same signification; univocal.

When two or more words signify the same thing, as wave and billow, mead and meadow. they are usually called synonymous words.

Watts, Logick.

These words consist of two propositions, which are not distinct in sense, but one and the same thing variously expressed; for wisdom and understanding are synonymous words here.

Tillotson.

Fortune is but a synonymous word for nature and necessity.

Bentley, Serm.

SYNO'NYMOUSLY. * adv. [from synonymous.] In a synonymous manner.

It is often used synonymously with words which signify any kind of production or formation. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

SYNO'NYMY. † n. s. [συνώνυμια;] The quality of expressing by different words the same thing.

We having three rivers of note, synonymies with her.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 2.

SYNO'PSIS. † n. s. [σύνopsis;] A general view; all the parts brought under one view.

Breviaries, synopses, and other loitering gear.

Milton, Arcopagitica.

SYNO'PTICAL. adj. [from synopsis.] Affording a view of many parts at once.

We have collected so many synoptical tables, calculated for his monthly use.

Evelyn, Kalendar.

SYNO'PTICALLY. * adv. [from synoptical.] In a synoptical manner.

I shall more synoptically here insert a catalogue of all dying materials.

Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 295.

SYNTA'CTICAL. † adj. [from syntaxis, Latin.]

1. Conjoined; fitted to each other.

2. Relating to the construction of speech.

A figure is divided into tropes, &c. grammatical, orthographical, syntactical.

Peachum, Garden of Eloquence, (1577,) sign. B. i.

SYNTAX. † } n. s. [σύνταξις;]
SYNTA'XIS. }

1. A system; a number of things joined together.

They owe no other dependance to the first than what is common to the whole syntax of beings.

Glanville.

2. That part of grammar which teaches the construction of words.

Words — have no power, save with dull grammarians, Whose souls are nought but a syntaxis of them.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

To make the word gift, like the river Mole in Surrey, to run under the bottom of a long line, and so start up to govern the word presbytery, as in immediate syntaxis.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Def. § 5.

I can produce a hundred instances to convince any reasonable man, that they do not so much as understand common grammar and syntax.

Swift.

SYNTERE'SIS. * n. s. [σύν and τήρεω, Gr.] A remorse of conscience.

Though the principles of synteresis, the seeds of piety, and virtue, scattered and disseminated in the soul, to bring forth the fruit of virtue and felicity, may be trampled on and kept under, cropped and snibbed, by the bestial part; yet they will sometimes be starting out, sprouting, and putting forth themselves.

Bp. Ward, Serm. 30th Jan. 1674, p. 13.

SY'NTHESIS. n. s. [σύνθεσις;] The act of joining: opposed to analysis.

The synthesis consists in assuming the causes discovered and established as principles, and by them explaining the phenomena proceeding from them, and proving the explanations.

Newton, Opt.

SYNTHE'TICAL. † } adj. [συνθετικός;, Gr. synthetique, SYNTHE'TICK. } Fr.] Conjoining; compounding; forming composition: opposed to analytick.

Synthetick method is that which begins with the parts, and leads onward to the knowledge of the whole; it begins with the most simple principles and general truths, and proceeds by degrees to that which is drawn from them or compounded of them; and therefore it is called the method of composition.

Watts, Logick.

SYNTHE'TICALLY. * adv. [from synthetical.] By synthesis.

The plan proceeds synthetically from parts to the whole.

Walker.

SY'PHON. n. s. [This should be written siphon; σίφων.]

The sweet syringa, yielding but in scent

To the rich orange.

Mason, Eng. Garden.

SY'RINGE. n. s. [συγγύξ.] A pipe through which any liquor is squirted.

The heart seems not designed to be the fountain or conservatory of the vital flame, but as a machine to receive the blood from the veins, and force it out by the arteries through the whole body as a syringe doth any liquor, though not by the same artifice.

Ray.

To SY'RINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To spout by a syringe.

A flux of blood from the nose, mouth, and eye, was stopt by the syringing up of oxycrate.

Wiseman, Surgery.

A boggy syrtis, — neither sea, nor good dry land.

Milton, P. L.

SY'STASIS.* n. s. [σύστασις, Gr.] The consistence of any thing; a constitution.

It is a worse preservative of a general constitution, than the syrtasis of Crete, or the confederation of Poland, or any other ill-devised corrective which has yet been imagined in the necessities produced by an ill-constructed system of government.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

SY'STEM. n. s. [systeme, Fr. σύστημα.]

1. Any complexure or combination of many things acting together.

2. A scheme which reduces many things to regular dependence or co-operation.

3. A scheme which unites many things in order.

He presently bought a system of divinity, with design to apply himself straightway to that study.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

Aristotle brings morality into system, by treating of happiness under heads, and ranges it in classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into their several kinds, which had not been handled systematically before.

Baker.

The best way to learn any science is to begin with a regular system, or a short and plain scheme of that science well drawn up into a narrow compass.

Watts.

SYSTEMA'TICAL. adj. [systematique, Fr. συστηματικός; from system.] Methodical; written or formed with regular subordination of one part to another.

It will be necessary, in a discourse about the formation of the world, to give you a brief account of some of the most principal and systematical phenomena that occur in it.

Bentley.

Now we deal much in essays, and unreasonably despise systematical learning; whereas our fathers had a just value for regularity and systems.

Watts.

SYSTEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from systematical.] In form of a system.

I treat of the usefulness of writing books of essay, in comparison of that of writing systematically.

Boyle.

Aristotle brings morality into system, and ranges it into classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into their several kinds, which had not been handled systematically before.

Baker.

SY'STEMATIST.* } n. s. [from systematize.] One who
SY'STEMATIZER. } reduces things to any kind of system.

Aristotle may be called the systematizer of his master's doctrines.

Harris, Phil. Inq.

To SY'STEMATIZE.* v. a. [from system.] To reduce to a system.

Diseases were healed, and buildings erected, before medicine and architecture were systematized into arts.

Harris, Philolog. Inq.

Systematized regicide.

Burke, Lett. on a Regicide Peace.

SY'STEM-MAKER.* n. s. [system and maker.] One who forms systems.

Mason.

We system-makers can sustain

The thesis, which you grant was plain.

Prior, Alma.

SY'STEM-MONGER.* n. s. [system and monger.] One fond of framing systems.

Mason.

A system-monger, who, without knowing any thing of the world by experience, has formed a system of it in his dusty cell, lays it down, that flattery is pleasing.

Ld. Chesterfield.

SY'STOLE. n. s. [systole, Fr. συστολή.]

1. [In anatomy.] The contraction of the heart.

The systole resembles the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural site.

Ray.

Harvey on Consumptions.

TA'BERD.† n. s. See TABARD.

TA'BERNACLE. n. s. [tabernacle, Fr. tabernaculum, Latin.]

1. A temporary habitation; a casual dwelling.

They sudden rear'd

Celestial tabernacles, where they slept

Fann'd with cool winds.

Milton, P. L.

2. A sacred place; a place of worship.

The greatest conqueror did not only compose his divine odes, but set them to music: his works, though consecrated to the tabernacle, became the national entertainment, as well as the devotion of his people.

Addison.

To TA'BERNACLE.† v. n. [from the noun.] To enshrine; to house. Wesley has used tabernacled for dwelt, St. John, i. 14. But the author of the Christian Life had applied it before him. A Latin translation of the 14th century also uses tabernaculavit in the sacred passage mentioned.

He assumed our nature, and tabernacled among us in the flesh.

Scott, Works, (ed. 1718,) ii. 467.

TABERNA'CLAR.* adj. [from tabernacle.] Latticed.

The sides of every street were covered with cloisters, crowned with rich and lofty pinnacles, and fronted with tabernacular or open work.

Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 93.

TA'BID. adj. [tabide, Fr. tabidus, Lat.] Wasted by disease; consumptive.

The tabid disposition, or the ulcer or ulcers of the lungs, which are the foundation of this disease, is very different from a diminution of the body, and decay of strength from a mere relaxation.

Blackmore.

In tabid persons milk is the best restorative, being chyle already prepared. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

TA'BIDNESS. n. s. [from tabid.] Consumptiveness; state of being wasted by disease.

TA'BLATURE. † n. s. [from table.]

1. A way of expressing musical sounds by letters or cyphers; a piece of musick for the lute. This is the old sense of the word, but is overpassed by Dr. Johnson.

No such plain-songs are set out in the books of divine tablature. Proceed. against Garnet, (1606.) l. i. b.

What means this stately tablature,

The balance of thy strains?

Which seems, instead of sifting pure,

To extend and rack thy veins:

Thy odes first their own harmony did break,

For singing troth is but in tune to speak.

Lovelace, Luc. P. p. 70.

2. [In anatomy.] A division or parting of the skull into two tables. Chambers.
3. [In painting.] By the word tablature we denote (according to the original word tabula) a work not only different from a mere portraiture, but from all those wilder sorts of painting, which are in a manner absolute and independent: such as painting in fresco upon the walls, the cielings, the stair cases, the cupolas, and other remarkable places either of churches or palaces. — It is not merely the dimension of a cloth or board, which denominates a piece or tablature. — 'Tis then, that in painting we may give to any particular work the name of tablature, when the work is in reality a single piece, comprehended in one view, and formed according to one single intelligence, meaning, or design.

Lord Shaftesbury, Introd. to his Judg. of Hercules.

TABLE. † n. s. [table, Fr. tabula, Lat.]

1. Any flat or level surface.

Upon the castle hill there is a bagnio paved with fair tables of marble. Sandys.

2. A horizontal surface raised above the ground, used for meals and other purposes.

We may again

Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights. Shakspeare.

Help to search my house; if I find not what I seek, let me for ever be your table sport. Shakspeare.

Children at a table never asked for any thing, but contentedly took what was given them. Locke on Education.

This shuts them out from all table conversation, and the most agreeable intercourses. Addison, Spect.

If there is nothing else to discourage us, we may safely come to the Lord's table, and expect to be kindly entertained by him when we do. Kettlewell.

Nor hath the fruit in it any core or kernel; and differing from other apples, yet is a good table fruit. Mortimer.

The nymph the table spread,
Ambrosial cates, and nectar, rosy red. Pope.

3. The persons sitting at table, or partaking of entertainment.

Give me some wine, fill full,
I drink to th' general joy of the whole table. Shakspeare.

4. The fare or entertainment itself: as, he keeps a good table.

When a man keeps a constant table, he may be allowed some times to serve up a cold dish of meat. Tatler, No. 258.

5. A tablet; a surface on which any thing is written or engraved.

He was the writer of them in the tables of their hearts.

Hooker.

'Twas pretty, though a plague
To see him every hour; to sit and draw
His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curls,
In our heart's table.

Shakspeare.

All these true notes of immortality
In our heart's table we shall written find.

Davies.

I prepar'd to pay in verses rude

A most detested act of gratitude:

Ev'n this had been your elegy which now

Is offer'd for your health, the table of my vow.

Dryden.

There are books extant which the Atheist must allow of as proper evidence: even the mighty volumes of visible nature, and the everlasting tables of right reason; wherein if they do not wilfully shut their eyes, they may read their own folly written by the finger of God in a much plainer and more terrible sentence, than Belshazzar's was by the hand upon the wall.

Bentley, Serm.

Among the Romans, the judge or prætor granted administration, not only according to the tables of the testament, but even contrary to those tables.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

By the twelve tables, only those were called into succession of their parents that were in the parent's power.

Ayliffe.

6. [Tableau, Fr.] A picture, or any thing that exhibits a view of any thing upon a flat surface.

I never lov'd myself,

Till now, infixed, I beheld myself

Drawn in the flatt'ring table of her eye.

Shakspeare.

His Jalyus or Bacchus he so esteemed, that he had rather lose all his father's images than that table.

Peacham.

Saint Anthony has a table that hangs up to him from a poor peasant, who fancied the saint had saved his neck.

Addison.

7. An index; a collection of heads; a catalogue; a syllabus.

It might seem impertinent to have added a table to a book of so small a volume, and which seems to be itself but a table: but it may prove advantageous at once to learn the whole culture of any plant.

Evelyn, Calendar.

Their learning reaches no farther than the tables of contents.

Watts.

8. A synopsis; many particulars brought into one view.

I have no images of ancestors,

Wanting an ear, or nose; no forged tables

Of long descents, to boast false honours from.

B. Jonson.

9. The palm of the hand.

Mistress of a fairer table

Hath not history nor fable.

B. Jonson.

10. Draughts; small pieces of wood shifted on squares [table, old French; which Roquefort explains by "jeu de trictrac et des échecs." So also the Saxon tæpþan, tesseris sive alcæ ludere.]

Monsieur the nice,

When he plays at tables, chides the dice.

Shakspeare.

We are in the world like men playing at tables; the chance is not in our power, but to play it, is; and when it is fallen, we must manage it as we can.

Bp. Taylor.

11. To turn the TABLES. To change the condition or fortune of two contending parties: a metaphor taken from the vicissitude of fortune at gaming-tables.

They that are honest would be arrant knaves, if the tables were turned.

L' Estrange.

If it be thus, the tables would be turned upon me; but I should only fail in my vain attempt.

Dryden.

TO TABLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To board; to live at the table of another.

He lost his kingdom, was driven from the society of men to table with the beasts, and to graze with oxen.

South.

T A B

- You will have no notion of delicacies if you table with them ; they are all for rank and foul feeding. Felton.
- To TA'BLE.† v. a.
1. To make into a catalogue; to set down.
I could have looked on him without admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
  2. To represent as in painting.
I entreat you much to meditate sometimes upon the effect of superstition in this last powder-treason, fit to be tabled and pictured in the chambers of meditation as another hell above the ground. Bacon, Suppl. to Cabala, p. 68.
  3. To supply with a table or food. This and the preceding sense are not noticed by Dr. Johnson.
When he himself tabled the Jews from heaven, that omer, which was every man's daily portion of manna, is computed to have been more than might have well sufficed the heartiest feeder thrice as many meals. Milton, Areopagitica.
- TA'BLEBED. n. s. [from table and bed.] A bed of the figure of a table.
- TA'BLEBEER. n. s. [table and beer.] Beer used at victuals; small beer.
- TA'BLEBOOK. n. s. [table and book.] A book on which any thing is graved or written without ink.
What might you think,
If I had play'd the desk or table-book? Shakspeare, Hamlet.
Nature wipes clean the table-book first, and then pourtrays upon it what she pleaseth. More against Atheism.
Put into your table-book whatsoever you judge worthy. Dryden.
Nature's fair table-book, our tender souls,
We scrawl all o'er with old and empty rules,
Stale memorandums of the schools. Swift, Miscel.
- TA'BLECLOTH. n. s. [table and cloth.] Linen spread on a table.
I will end with Odo holding master doctor's mule, and Anne with her tablecloth. Camden, Rem.
- TA'BLEMAN. n. s. A man at draughts.
In clericals the keys are lined, and in colleges they use to line the tablemen. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

- TA'BLETALK. n. s. [table and talk.] Conversation at meals or entertainments; table discourse.
Let me praise you while I have a stomach.
— No, let it serve for tabletalk. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
His fate makes tabletalk, divulg'd with scorn,
And he a jest into his grave is born. Dryden, Juv.
He improves by the tabletalk, and repeats in the kitchen what he learns in the parlour. Guardian.
No fair adversary would urge loose tabletalk in controversy, and build serious inferences upon what was spoken but in jest. Atterbury.
- TA'BLET. n. s. [from table.]
1. A small level surface.
  2. A medicine in a square form.
It hath been anciently in use to wear tablets of arsenick, or preservatives, against the plague; as they draw the venom to them from the spirits. Bacon.
  3. A surface written on or painted.
It was by the authority of Alexander, that through all Greece the young gentlemen learned, before all other things, to design upon tablets of boxen wood. Dryden.
The pillar'd marble, and the tablet brass, Mould'ring, drop the victor's praise. Prior.
- TA'BOUR.† n. s. [tabourin, tabour, old French. "Tabourin de Basque, a kind of small and shallow drum or tabor, open at the one end, and having the barrel stuck full of small bells, and other ginging knacks of latten." Cotgrave.] A small drum; a drum beaten with one stick to accompany a pipe.
If you did but hear the pedlar at door, you would never dance again after a tabour and pipe. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

T A C

- The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabour,
More than I know the sound of Marc'us' tongue
From every meaner man. Shakspeare, Coriol.
Some blow the bagpipe up, that plays the country round :
The tabour and the pipe some take delight to sound. Drayton.
Morrice-dancers danced, a maid marian, and a tabour and pipe. Temple.
- To TA'BOUR.† v. n. [tabourer, old French, from the noun.]

They shall depart the manor before him with trumpets, tabourets, and other minstrelsy. Spectator.
- TABOURINE. n. s. [French.] A tabour; a small drum.
Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines,
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds together,
Applauding our approach. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
- TABRE'RE. n. s. Tabourer. Obsolete.
I saw a shole of shepherds outgo,
Before them yode a lusty tabre're,
That to the meynie a hornpipe plaid,
Whereto they dauncen. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
- TA'BRET. n. s. A tabour.
Wherefore didst thou steal away, that I might have sent thee away with mirth and with tabret? Gen. xxxi. 27.
- TA'BULAR. adj. [tabularis, Lat.]
1. Set down in the form of tables or synopses.
  2. Formed in laminæ.
All the nodules that consist of one uniform substance were formed from a point, as the crusted ones, nay, and most of the spotted ones, and indeed all whatever, except those that are tabular and plated. Woodward on Fossils.
  3. Set in squares.
- To TA'BULATE.† v. a. [tabula, Lat.]
1. To reduce to tables or synopses.
His [Maittaire's] book of the dialects is a sad heap of confusion : the only way to write on them is to tabulate them with notes, added at the bottom of the page, and references. Dr. Johnson, in Boswell's Life of him.
  2. To shape with a flat surface.
- TA'BULATED. adj. [tabula, Lat.] Having a flat surface.
Many of the best diamonds are pointed with six angles, and some tabulated or plain, and square. Grew, Mus.
- TACHE.† n. s. [from tack; which was the old word: "tak, or button." Prompt. Parv.] Any thing taken hold of; a catch; a loop; a button.
Make fifty taches of gold, and couple the curtains together with the taches. Exod. xxvi. 6.
They made several curtains with loops and taches, and so coupled them to one another that they became one tabernacle. Bp. Reynolds, Sermon. (1668), p. 11.
- TACHY'GRAPHY. n. s. [ταχύς; and γραφία.] The art or practice of quick writing.
- TA'CIT. adj. [tacite, Fr. tacitus, Latin.] Silent; implied; not expressed by words.
As there are formal and written leagues respective to certain enemies, so is there a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men, against the common enemy of human society, pirates. Bacon, Holy War.

In elective governments there is a tacit covenant, that the king of their own making shall make his makers princes.

L'Estrange.

Captiousness not only produces misbecoming expressions and carriage, but is a tacit reproach of some incivility.

Locke.

TACITLY. adv. [from tacit.] Silently; without oral expression.

While they are exposing another's weaknesses, they are tacitly aiming at their own commendations.

Addison.

Indulgence to the vices of men can never be tacitly implied, since they are plainly forbidden in Scripture.

Rogers, Sermon.

TACITURN. \ adj.* [taciturne, Fr. taciturnus, Lat.] Silent; uttering little.

Grieve was very submissive, respectful, and remarkably taciturn.

Smollett.

TACITURNITY. n. s. [taciturnité, French; taciturnitas, Lat.] Habitual silence.

The secretest of natures

Have not more gift in taciturnity.

Shakspeare.

Some women have some taciturnity,

Some nunneries some grains of chastity.

Donne.

Too great loquacity, and too great taciturnity by fits.

Arbuthnot.

To TACK. v. a. [tacher, Breton.]

1. To fasten to any thing. It has now a sense approaching to contempt.

Of what supreme almighty pow'r
Is thy great arm, which spans the East and West,
And tacks the centre to the sphere!

Herbert.

True freedom you have well defin'd:
But living as you list, and to your mind,
And loosely tack'd, all must be left behind.

Dryden.

The symmetry of cloaths fancy appropriates to the wearer,
tacking them to the body as if they belonged to it.

Grew.

Frame so as to be covered with the hair-cloth, or a blanket tacked about the edges.

Mortimer.

They serve every turn that shall be demanded, in hopes of getting some commendam tacked to their sees, to the great discouragement of the inferior clergy.

Swift.

2. To join; to unite; to stitch together.

There's but a shirt and an half in all my company; and the half shirt is two napkins tack'd together, and thrown over the shoulders like a herald's coat without sleeves.

Shakspeare.

I tack'd two plays together for the pleasure of variety.

Dryden.

To TACK. v. n. [probably from tackle.] To turn a ship.

This verseriam they construe to be the compass, which is better interpreted the rope that turns the ship; as we say, makes it tack about.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Seeing Holland fall into closer measures with us and Sweden, upon the triple alliance, they have tacked some points nearer France.

Temple.

On either side they nimbly tack,
Both strive to intercept and guide the wind.

Dryden.

They give me signs

To tack about, and steer another way.

Addison.

TACK. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A small nail.

2. The act of turning ships at sea.

At each tack our little fleet grows less,
And, like maim'd fowl, swim lagging on the main.

Dryden.

3. Addition; supplement.

Some tacks had been made to money-bills in King Charles's time.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, in 1705.

4. [tache, Fr.] A spot; a stain.

You do not the thing that you would; that is perhaps perfectly,
purely without some tack or mixture.

Hammond, Works, iv. 512.

5. To hold TACK. To last; to hold out. Tack is still retained in Scotland, and denotes hold or persevering cohesion.

Martilmas beefe doth bear good tacke,
When country folke do dainties lacke.

Tusser.

If this twig be made of wood
That will hold tack, I'll make the fur
Fly 'bout the ears of that old cur.

Hudibras.

TACKET. \ n. s.* [from tack.] A small nail. Barret, Alv. 1580. Used in Scotland. See Jamieson.

TACKLE. † n. s. [taccl, Welsh, an arrow; tacclau, armour or accoutrements, arrows; tacle, old Fr.
any headed shaft or bolt, whose feathers are not waxed, but glued on. Cotgrave.]

1. An arrow.

The takil smote, and in it went.

Chaucer.

2. Weapons; instruments of action.

She to her tackle fell,
And on the knight let fall a peal
Of blows so fierce, and press'd so home,
That he retir'd.

Hudibras.

Being at work without catching any thing, he resolved to take up his tackle and be gone.

L'Estrange.

3. [tacclau, Welsh; tackel, Su. Goth. ornamenta navis, rudentes, Ihre; tackel, Dutch.] The ropes of a ship: in a looser sense, all the instruments of sailing.

After at sea a tall ship did appear,
Made all of Heben and white ivory,
The sails of gold, of silk the tackle were,
Mild was the wind, calm seem'd the sea to be.

Spenser.

At the helm

A seeming mermaid steers; the silken tackles
Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands
That yarely frame the office.

Shakspeare.

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't; though thy tackle's torn,
Thou shew'st a noble vessel.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

A stately ship

With all her bravery on, and tackle trim,
Sails fill'd, and streamers waving,
Court'd by all the winds that hold them play.

Milton, S. A.

As for tackle, the Æolians invented the oar, Dædalus and his son Icarus, the masts and sails.

Heylin.

Ere yet the tempest roars

Stand to your tackle, mates, and stretch your oars. Dryden.
If he drew the figure of a ship, there was not a rope among the tackle that escaped him.

Addison, Spect.

To TACKLE. \ v. a.* [from the noun.] To supply with tackle.

My ships ride in the bay,
Ready to disembogue, tackled and mann'd,
Ev'n to my wishes.

Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

The moralist tells us, that a quadrate solid wise man should involve and tackle himself within his own virtue.

Howell, Lett. i. vi. 58.

TACKLED. adj. [from tackle.] Made of ropes tacked together.

My man shall

Bring thee cords, made like a tackled stair,
Which to the high top-gallant of my joy
Must be my convoy in the secret night.

Shakspeare.

TACKLING. n. s. [from tackle.]

1. Furniture of the mast.

They wondered at their ships and their tacklings. Abbot.
Tackling, as sails and cordage, must be foreseen, and laid up in store.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

Red sheets of lightning o'er the seas are spread,
Our tackling yield, and wrecks at last succeed.

Garth.

2. Instruments of action: as, fishing tackling, kitchen tackling.

I will furnish him with a rod, if you will furnish him with the rest of the tackling, and make him a fisher.

Walton.

TACTICAL. } adj. [τακτικὸς, táctw; tactique, Fr.]

Ld. Chesterfield.
TA'DPOLE. n. s. [tað, toad, and pola, a young one, Saxon.] A young shapeless frog or toad, consisting only of a body and a tail; a porwiggle.

I'll broach the tadpole on my rapier's point. Shakspeare.
Poor Tom eats the toad and the tadpole. Shakspeare.

The result is not a perfect frog but a tadpole, without any feet, and having a long tail to swim with. Ray.

A black and round substance began to dilate, and after awhile the head, the eyes, the tail to be discernable, and at last become what the ancients called gyrinus, we a porwiggle or tadpole. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TA'EN. † the poetical contraction of taken.

The chewing flocks
Had ta'en their supper on the savoury herb
Of knot-grass dew-besprent Milton, Comus.
The object of desire once ta'en away,
'Tis then not love, but pity, which we pay. Dryden.

TA'FFATA. † n. s. [taffetas, Fr. taffetar, Spanish; taffeta, Græco-barb. V. Critop. Emend. in Meursii Gloss. p. 88.] A thin silk.

All hail, the richest beauties on the earth!
— Beauties no richer than rich taffata. Shakspeare.

Never will I trust to speeches penn'd;
Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
Three pil'd hyperboles. Shakspeare, L. Lab. Lost.

Some think that a considerable diversity of colours argues an equal diversity of nature, but I am not of their mind, for not to mention the changeable taffety, whose colours the philosophers call not real, but apparent. Boyle on Colours.

TA'FFEREL. \ n. s.* The upper part of the stern of a ship. Scott.

TAG. † n. s. [tag, Icel. tagg, Su. Goth. cuspis, aculeus, a point.]

1. A point of metal put to the end of a string.
A poor man finding the tag of a point, and putting it into his pocket, one asked him, What he would do with it? He answered, What I find all the year, be it never so little, I lay it up at home till the year's end; and then, with all together, I every new year's day add a dish to my cupboard.

Ward, Theol. Treat. (1673.) p. 36.
It was the fashion, in those days, to wear much ribbon; which some adorned with tags of metal at the end.

Richardson, Life of Milton, p. cxx.
2. Any thing paltry and mean.

If tag and rag be admitted, learned and unlearned, it is the fault of some, not of the law. Whitgift.

Will you hence
Before the tag return, whose rage doth rend
Like interrupted waters. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The tag-rag people did not clap him and hiss him. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

He invited tag, rag, and bob-tail, to the wedding. L'Estrange.

3. A young sheep.

T A I

TA'GTAIL. n. s. [tag and tail.] A worm which has the tail of another colour.

They feed on tag worms and lugges. Carew.
There are other worms; as the marsh and tagtail. Walton.

To TAG. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fit any thing with an end, or point of metal; as, to tag a lace.

There was hardly a thread of the original coat to be seen, but an infinite quantity of lace, and ribands, and fringe, and embroidery, and points; I mean only those tagged with silver; for the rest fell off. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 6.

2. To fit one thing with another, appended.

His courteous host
Tags every sentence with some fawning word,
Such as my king, my prince, at least my lord. Dryden.
'Tis tagg'd with rhyme, like Berecynthian Atys,
The mid-part chimes with art, which never flat is. Dryden.

3. The word is here improperly used.
Compell'd by you to tag in rhimes
The common slanderers of the times. Swift.

4. To join. This is properly to tack.
Resistance, and the succession of the house of Hanover, the whig writers perpetually tag together. Swift, Miscell.

TAIL. † n. s. [Goth. and Icel. tagl; tæg, Saxon.]

1. That which terminates the animal behind; the continuation of the vertebræ of the back hanging loose behind.

Oft have I seen a hot o'er-weening cur,
Run back and bite because he was with-held,
Who, having suffer'd with the bear's fell paw,
Hath clapt his tail betwixt his legs and cry'd. Shakspeare.

This sees the cub, and does himself oppose,
And men and boats his active tail confounds. Waller.

The lion will not kick, but will strike such a stroke with his tail, that will break the back of his encounterer. More.

Rouz'd by the lash of his own stubborn tail,
Our lion now will foreign foes assail. Dryden.

The tail fin is half a foot high, but underneath level with the tail. Grew.

2. The lower part.
The Lord shall make thee the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above, and not beneath. Deut. xxviii. 13.

3. Any thing hanging long; a catkin.
Duretus writes a great praise of the distilled water of those tails that hang upon willow trees. Harvey on Consumptions.

To TAIL. v. n. To pull by the tail.
The conquering foe they soon assail'd,
First Trulla stav'd and Cerdon tail'd. Hudibras.

TA'ILED. adj. [from tail.] Furnished with a tail.
Snouted and tailed like a boar, footed like a goat. Grew.

TA'ILLAGE. n. s. [tailler, Fr.]
Taillage originally signifies a piece cut out of the whole; and, metaphorically, a share of a man's substance paid by way of tribute. In law, it signifies a toll or tax. Cowel.

TAILLE. n. s.
Taille, the fee which is opposite to fee-simple, because it is so minced or pared, that it is not in his free power to be disposed of who owns it; but is, by the first giver, cut or divided from all other, and tied to the issue of the donee. This limitation, or taille, is either general or special. Taille general is that whereby lands or tenements are limited to a man, and to the heirs of his body begotten; and the reason of this term is, because how many soever women the tenant, holding by this title, shall take to his wives, one after another, in lawful matrimony, his issue by them all have a possibility to inherit one after the other. Taille special is that whereby lands or tenements be limited unto a man and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies begotten. Cowel.

T A I

TAILOR.† n. s. [tailleur, from tailler, French, to cut; old Engl. talyowre, Prompt. Parv. and to this day taylior, in three syllables, is common in the north.] One whose business is to make clothes.

I'll entertain a score or two of tailors,
To study fashions to adorn my body. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Here's an English tailor come for stealing out of a French hose: come, tailor, you may roast your goose. Shakespeare.

The world is come now to that pass, that the tailor and shoemaker may cut out what religion they please. Howell.
It was prettily said by Seneca, that friendship should not be unript, but unsticht, though somewhat in the phrase of a tailor. Collier.

In Covent-Garden did a tailor dwell,
That sure a place deserv'd in his own hell. King.
TO TAILOR.* v. n. [from the noun.] To perform the business of a tailor.

These tailoring artists for our lays Invent cramp'd rules; and, with strait stays
Striving free nature's shape to hit,
Emaciate sense before they fit.
Green, Poem of the Spleen, (1754,) ver. 520.

TO TAINT. v. a. [teindre, Fr.]

1. To imbue or impregnate with any thing.
The spaniel struck
Stiff by the tainted gale, with open nose
Draws full upon the latent prey. Thomson.

2. To stain; to sully.
We come not by the way of accusation
To taint that honour every good tongue blesses. Shakespeare.
Sirens taint

The parliament took upon them to call an assembly of divines, to settle some church controversies, of which many were unfit to judge. Sanderson.

119. This verb, like prendre in French, is used with endless multiplicity of relations. Its uses are so numerous, that they cannot easily be exemplified; and its references to the words governed by it so general and lax, that they can hardly be explained by any succedaneous terms. But commonly that is hardest to explain which least wants explication. I have expanded this word to a wide diffusion, which, I think, is all that could be done.

To TAKE. v. n.

1. To direct the course; to have a tendency to.

The inclination to goodness, if it issue not towards men, it will take unto other things. Bacon.

THA'LMUD. } taining the Jewish traditions, the rabbinical constitutions, and explications of the law.

They have this tradition in their talmud.

Lightfoot, Miscell. p. 166.

TALMU'DICAL.* } adj. [from talmud.] Belonging to TA'LMUDICK. } the talmud.

Talmudical sentences and phrases.

Skinner to Abp. Usher, Lett. p. 347.

These phrases are by the great Broughton called talmudick

Greek, when Jewish and talmudical phrases are used in holy writ. Lightfoot, Miscell. p. 68.

TA'LMUDIST.* n. s. [from talmud.] One well versed in the talmud.

T A M

The Jewish talmudists take upon them to determine how God spends his whole time. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 256.
Ask a talmudist what ails the modesty of his marginal Keri, that Moses and all the prophets cannot persuade him to pronounce the textual Chetiv. Milton, Arcopagitica.

TALMUDISTICK.* adj. [from talmudist.] Talmudical.

The name Ariel came from the talmudistic mysteries, with which the learned Jews had infected this science.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 478.

TA'LNES. n. s. [from tall.] Height of stature; procerity.

An hideous giant, horrible and high,
That with his talness seem'd to threaten the sky. Spenser.

The eyes behold so many naked bodies, as for talness of stature could hardly be equalled in any country. Hayward.

TA'LO. n. s. [talon, Fr.] The claw of a bird of prey.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer talons. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Upward the noble bird directs his wing,
And towering round his master's earth-born foes,
Swift he collects his fatal stock of ire,
Lifts his fierce talon high, and darts the forked fire. Prior.

TA'MARIND-Tree. n. s. [tamarindus, Lat.]

The flower of the tamarind-tree consists of several leaves, which are so placed as to resemble a papilionaceous one in some measure; but these expand circularly, from whose many leaved flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a flat pod, containing many flat angular seeds surrounded with an acid blackish pulp. Miller.

Lenitives are cassia, tamarinds, manna. Wiseman.

Lay me reclin'd
Beneath the spreading tamarind that shakes,
Fan'd by the breeze its fever-cooling fruit. Thomson.

TA'MARISK. n. s. [tamarice, Lat.] A tree.

The flowers of the tamarisk are rosaceous.

Miller.

Tamarisk is a tree that grows tall, and its wood is medicinal. Mortimer.

TAMBO'UR.* n. s. [old Fr. tambour, a small drum; tambur, Arab. the same.]

1. A tambourine; which see.
2. A frame resembling a drum, on which a kind of embroidery is worked; the embroidery so made.
3. [In architecture.] A member of the Corinthian and composite capital, somewhat resembling a drum; a kind of porch; a round stone, or course of stones.

TAMBOURI'NE.† n. s. [tamborin, Spanish; from the Arab. tambur.] A kind of drum. What we now call the tambourin, is different from the tabor; as it is played on with the hand or fingers, not with a stick. Spenser writes this word tamburin, and B. Jonson timburine.

Calliope with Muses moe,
Soon as thy oaten pipe began to sound,
Their ivory lutes and tamburines forego. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
The bells, pipes, tabours, timburines ring.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

TAME. adj. [tame, Saxon; taem, Dutch; tam, Danish.]

1. Not wild; domestick.
Thales the Milesian said, That of all wild beasts a tyrant is the worst, and of all tame beasts a flatterer. Addison.
2. Crushed; subdued; depressed; dejected; spiritless; heartless.

T A M

If you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it. Shakspeare.

And now their pride and mettle is asleep,
Their courage with hard labour tame and dull. Shakspeare.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Praise him each savage furious beast,
That on his stores do daily feast;
And you tame slaves of the laborious plough,
Your weary knees to your Creator bow. Roscommon.

3. Spiritless; unanimated: as, a tame poem. A low phrase.

TO TAME. v. a. [gatamjan, Gothick; tamian, Saxon; tammen, Dutch.]

1. To reduce from wildness; to reclaim; to make gentle.

Those that tame wild horses,
Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;
But stop their mouths with stubborn bits. Shakspeare.

2. To subdue; to crush; to depress; to conquer.

If the Heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame the offences,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

A puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece. Shakspeare.

They cannot tame
Or overcome their riches! not by making
Baths, orchards, fish-pools, letting in of seas
Here, and then there forcing them out again. B. Jonson.

A race unconquer'd, by their clime made bold,
The Caledonians arm'd with want and cold,
Have been for ages kept for you to tame. Waller.

TA'MEABLE. adj. [from tame.] Susceptive of taming.
Ganzas are supposed to be great fowls, of a strong flight, and easily tameable; divers of which may be so brought up as to join together in carrying the weight of a man. Wilkins.

TA'MELESS.* adj. [tame and less.] Wild; untamed.
The tameless steed could well his waggon wield. Bp. Hall, Sat. ii. 1.

TA'MELY. adv. [from tame.] Not wildly; meanly; spiritlessly.

True obedience, of this madness cur'd,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

What courage tamely could to death consent,
And not by striking first the blow prevent. Dryden.

Once a champion of renown,
So tamely can you bear the ravish'd crown?
Has he given way? Dryden.

Did he look tamely on and let them pass?
Can you love and reverence your prelate, whom you tamely suffer to be abused. Addison. Swift.

TA'MENESS. n. s. [from tame.]

1. The quality of being tame; not wildness.

2. Want of spirits; timidity.

Such a conduct must appear rather like tameness than beauty, and expose his authority to insults. Rogers.

TA'MER. n. s. [from tame.] Conqueror; subduer.

He, great tamer of all human art,
Dulness! whose good old cause I yet defend. Pope.

TA'MINY.† n. s. [estamine, Fr. whence our old word stamin, which see.] A kind of woollen stuff: called also tammin, and tammy.

"Estamine" is the stuff tamine. Cotgrave, in V. Estamine.

TA'MKIN. n. s. The stopple of the mouth of a great gun.

TO TA'MPER. v. n. [of uncertain derivation, derived by Skinner from tempera, Lat.]

1. To be busy with physick.

'Tis in vain
To tamper with your crazy brain,
Without trepanning of your skull
As often as the moon's at full. Hadibras.

T A N

He tried washes to bring him to a better complexion, but there was no good to be done; the very tampering cast him into a disease. L'Étrange.

2. To meddle; to have to do without fitness or necessity.

That key of knowledge, which should give us entrance into the recesses of religion, is by so much tampering and wrenching made useless. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

'Tis dang'rous tampering with a muse,
The profit's small, and you have much to lose:
For though true wit adorns your birth or place,
Degenerate lines degrade the attained race. Roscommon.

Earl Waltheof being overtaken with wine, engaged in a conspiracy; but repenting next morning, repaired to the king, and discovered the whole matter: notwithstanding which he was beheaded upon the defeat of the conspiracy, for having but thus far tampered in it. Addison, Freeholder.

3. To deal; to practise secretly.

Others tamper'd
For Fleetwood, Desborough, and Lambert. Hudibras.

To TAN. v. a. [tannen, Dutch; tanner, Fr.]

1. To impregnate or imbue with bark.

A human skull covered with the skin, having been buried in some limy soil, was tanned or turned into a kind of leather. Grew, Mus.

Black cattle produce tallow, hides, and beef; but the greatest part of the hides are exported raw for want of bark to tan them. Swift.

They sell us their bark at a good price for tanning our hides into leather. Swift, Miscell.

2. To imbrown by the sun.

His face all tann'd with scorching sunny ray,
As he had travell'd many a Summer's day
Through boiling sands of Araby and Ind. Spenser.

Like sun parch'd quarters on the city gates,
Such is thy tann'd skin's lamentable state. Donne.

A brown for which Heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Cleaveland.

TAN.* n. s. The bark of the oak; the ooze with which tanners prepare their leather. Ash.

TANE for taken, ta'en. Ill spelt.

Two trophies tane from th' East and Western shore,
And both those nations twice triumphed o'er. May, Virg.

TANG.† n. s. [tanghe, Dutch, acrid.]

1. A strong taste; a taste left in the mouth.

Seasoning matters otherwise distasteful and insipid with an unusual and thence grateful tang. Barrow, vol. i. S. 14.

Sin taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills, it also seasons:—so that although the body of the liquor should be poured out again, yet still it leaves that tang behind it. South, Serm. ii. 368.

It is strange that the soul should never once recal over any of its pure native thoughts, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never bring into the waking man's view any other ideas but what have a tang of the cask, and derive their original from that union. Locke.

2. Relish; taste. A low word.

There was not the least tang of religion, which is indeed the worst affectation in any thing he said or did. Atterbury.

3. Something that leaves a sting or pain behind it.

She had a tongue with a tang,
Would cry to a sailor, go hang. Shakspeare, Tempest.
It hath not the least tang of misery in it, no bitter farewell nor appendant sting to it. Scott, Disc. (1673.)

4. Sound; tone; this is mistaken for tone or twang.

There is a pretty affectation in the Allemain, which gives their speech a different tang from ours. Holder, Elem. of Sp. p. 78.

To TANG. v. n. [This is, I think, mistaken for twang.]

To ring with.

Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with thy servants; let thy tongue tang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

VOL. V.

T A N

TANG.* n. s. [tang, Su. Goth.] A kind of sea-weed: called in some places tangle.

Calling it the sea of weeds, of flag, or rush, or tange.

Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. (1655,) p. 11.

TA'NGENT. n. s. [tangent, Fr. tangens, Lat.]

Tangent, in trigonometry, is a right line perpendicularly raised on the extremity of a radius, and which touches a circle so as not to cut it; but yet intersects another line without the circle called a secant that is drawn from the centre, and which cuts the arc to which it is a tangent.

Trevoux.

Nothing in this hypothesis can retain the planets in their orbs, but they would immediately desert them and the neighbourhood of the sun, and vanish away in tangents to their several circles into the mundane space. Bentley, Serm.

TANGIB'ILITY. n. s. [from tangible.] The quality of being perceived by the touch.

TANGIBLE.† adj. [tangible, French; from tango, Lat.] Perceptible by the touch.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the consort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

There needs no confutation of it; the impiety is visible and tangible. Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 2. § 10.

By the touch, the tangible qualities of bodies are discerned, as hard, soft, smooth. Locke.

To T'ANGLE.† v. a. [See To ENTANGLE.]

1. To implicate; to knit together.

The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

The blind mazes of this tangled wood.

Milton, Comus.

2. To ensnare; to entrap.

She means to tangle mine eyes too.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream. Shakspeare.

I do, quoth he, perceive

My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen. Shakspeare.

You must lay lime to tangle her desires

By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
Shall be full fraught with serviceable vows. Shakspeare.

If thou retire, the dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee. Shakspeare.

Now ly'st victorious

Among thy slain, self-kill'd,
Not willingly, but tangled in the fold
Of dire necessity. Milton, S. A.

Skill'd to retire, and in retiring draw Hearts after them, tangled in amorous nets. Milton, P. R.

With subtle cobweb cheats,

They're catch'd in knotted law-like nets;
In which when once they are entangled,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled. Hudibras.

3. To embroil; to embarrass.

The greater it is, and the more things it is tangled withal, the harder it will be to do it so well.

Wood, Tr. of Bp. Gardiner's De. Ver. Ob. (1553,) fol. xliii. b.

When my simple weakness strays,

Tangled in forbidden ways:
He, my shepherd! is my guide,
He's before me, on my side. Crashaw.

To TA'NGLE. v. n. To be entangled.

Shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd

All path of man or beast. Anon.

TA'NGLE.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A knot of things interwoven in one another, or different parts of the same thing perplexed.

He leading swiftly roll'd

In tangles, and made intricate seem strait.

To mischief swift. Milton, P. L.

Sport with Amaryllis in the shade,

Or with the tangles of Neera's hair. Milton, Lycidas.

D

2. [from tang.] A kind of sea-weed.

TA'NIST.† n. s. [an Irish word; an taanister, Erse. Dr. Johnson. — See whether this word may not be derived from thane, which was commonly used among the Danes, and also among the Saxons in England, for a noble man and a principal officer. Sir James Ware.] A kind of captain or governor.

Presently after the death of any of their captains, they assemble themselves to chuse another in his stead, and nominate commonly the next brother, and then next to him do they chuse next of the blood to be tanist, who shall next succeed him in the said captainry. Spenser on Ireland.

TA'NISTRY.† n. s. [from tanist.] A succession made up of inheritance and election. Burke.

The Irish hold their lands by tanistry, which is no more than a personal estate for his life-time that is tanist, by reason he is admitted thereunto by election. Spenser on Ireland.

If the Irish be not permitted to purchase estates of freeholds, which might descend to their children, must they not continue their custom of tanistry? which makes all their possessions uncertain. Davies on Ireland.

By the Irish custom of tanistry, the chieftains of every country, and the chief of every sept, had no longer estate than for life in their chiefties; and when their chieftains were dead, their sons, or next heirs, did not succeed them, but their tanists, who were elective, and purchased their elections by strong hand. Davies on Ireland.

TANK.† n. s. [tanque, Fr.] A large cistern or basin.

I saw a tank or magazine of water, a very stately work indeed. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 43.

Handle your pruning knife with dexterity; go tightly to your business: you have cost me much, and must earn it: here's plentiful provision, rascal; sallading in the garden and water in the tank; and in holy days, the licking of a platter of rice when you deserve it. Dryden, Don Sebast.

TA'NKARD.† n. s. [tanguerd, Fr. tankaerd, Dutch; tancaird, Irish; probably, by a metathesis, from the Lat. cantharus.] A large vessel with a cover, for strong drink.

Hath his tankard touch'd your brain?

Sure they're fall'n asleep again. B. Jonson.

Marius was the first who drank out of a silver tankard, after the manner of Bacchus. Arbutnot on Coins.

When any calls for ale, fill the largest tankard cup top full. Swift.

TA'NLING.* n. s. [from tan.] One scorched by the heat of summer. This seems to be the meaning of the word in the following passage, as opposed to those who shiver in winter. Nevertheless Dr. Johnson has printed it tanling; and, deriving it from Tantalus, has defined it "one seized with hopes of pleasure unattainable." Dr. Scott and Dr. Ash have hence adopted tanling. But, in the correct edition of Shakspeare printed in 1803, tanling is the word, though no note of any various reading, nor any explanation, accompanies it.

The king

Hath not deserv'd my service, nor your loves;
Who find in my exile the want of breeding,
The certainty of this hard life; aye hopeless
To have the courtesy your cradle promis'd,
But to be still hot summer's tanlings, and
The shrinking slaves of winter. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

TA'NNER. n. s. [from tan.] One whose trade is to tan leather.

Tanners use that lime which is newly drawn out of the kiln, and not slacked with water or air. Moxon.

TA'NNING.* n. s. [from To tan.]

1. The process of preparing leather with tan or bark.

2. The appearance or stain of a brown colour.

Diseases and distempers, incident to our faces, are industriously to be cured without any thought or blame of pride; as flushings, redness, inflammations, pimples, freckles, ruggedness, tanning, and the like.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 105.

TA'NPIT. n. s. [from tan and pit.] A pit where leather is impregnated with bark.

TA'NSY.† n. s. [tanacetum, Lat.]

1. An odoriferous plant.

Strong tansy, fennel cool.

Miller.
Drayton, Polyobl. S. 15.

2. A kind of cake, of which tansy forms a principal part.

In the spring time are made with the leaves hereof, (tansy), newly sprung up, and with eggs, cakes or tansies.

Johnson, Gerarde's Herb. (1633,) p. 651.

Our tansies at Easter have reference to the bitter herbs.

TANT.* n. s. A kind of small field-spider. Ray.

TA'NTALISM.† n. s. [from tantalize.] A punishment like that of Tantalus.

Let his banquetings be tantalism;

Let thy disdain spurn the dissembler out.

Beaum. and Fl. Wit at Sev. Weapons.

A lively representation of a person lying under the torments of such a tantalism, or platonick hell. Addison, Spect.

TANTALIZA'TION.* n. s. [from tantalize.] Act of tantalizing; state of being tantalized.

Rozinante's pains and tantalizations, in this night's round, were more irksome to the beast than all his other outridings; which were ever, though somewhat long first, gratified with the welcome rest of an inn.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. (1653,) p. 253.

To TA'NTALIZE. v. a. [from Tantalus, whose punishment was to starve among fruits and water which he could not touch.] To torment by the shew of pleasures which cannot be reached.

Thy vain desires, at strife

Within themselves, have tantaliz'd thy life.

Dryden.

The maid once sped was not suffered to tantalize the male part of the commonwealth.

Addison.

TA'NTALIZER.* n. s. [from tantalize.] One who tantalizes.

I made, however, no discovery of my determination to this fair tantalizer; willing to allow her all the merit of so generous an interference with her great friends on my behalf.

Wakefield, Mem. 227.

TANTAMOUNT.† adj. [French.] Equivalent.

God hath inserted it into our reasonable natures; or by his providence hath conveyed it into the minds of all men, which is tantamount unto it.

Glanville, Serm. p. 286.

If one third of our coin were gone, and men had equally one third less money than they have, it must be tantamount; what I 'scape of one third less, another must make up. Locke.

TANT'VY.† adv. [from the note of a hunting horn, so expressed in articulate sounds. From tantá vi, says Skinner. Dr. Johnson. — The old French language has tentiveux, to denote an eager person; "homme qui est tenté par tout ce qu'il voit; avide, &c." Roq.] To ride tantivy is to ride at great speed.

TA'NTLING.† n. s. [from Tantalus.] One seized with hopes of pleasure unattainable. Dr. Johnson. — But see TANLING.

To TAP.† v. a. [tapper, Fr.]

1. To touch lightly; to strike gently.

2. [tæppan, Saxon; tappen, Dutch.] To pierce a vessel; to broach a vessel. It is used likewise of the liquor.

That blood, already like the pelican,
Hast thou tapt out, and drunkenly caroused.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

He has been tapping his liquors, while I have been spilling my blood.

Addison.

Wait with patience till the tumour becomes troublesome, and then tap it with a lancet.

Sharp, Surgery.

- To TAP.* v. n. To strike a gentle blow: as, he tapped at the door.

TAP.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A gentle blow.

This is the right fencing grace, tap for tap, and so part fair.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Each shakes her fan with a smile, then gives her right-hand woman a tap upon the shoulder.

Addison, Spect.

As at hot cockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown,
Buxoma gave a gentle tap.

Gay, Pastorals.

So Huron-leeches, when their patient lies
In feverish restlessness with unclos'd eyes,
Apply with gentle strokes their osier rod,
And tap by tap invite the sleepy god.

Harte.

2. [tæppe, Saxon.] A pipe at which the liquor of a vessel is let out.

Ever sith hath so the tappe yronne,
Til that almost all empty is the tonne.

Chaucer, Reve's Prol.

A gentleman was inclined to the knight of Gascoigne's distemper, upon hearing the noise of a tap running.

Derham.

TAPE. n. s. [tæppe, Saxon.] A narrow fillet or band of linen.

Will you buy any tape, or lace for your cap,
My dainty duck, my dear-a?

Shakspeare.

This pouch that's ty'd with tape
I'll wager, that the prize shall be my due.

Gay.

On once a flock bed, but repair'd with straw,
With tape-ty'd curtains never meant to draw.

Pope.

TA'PER. n. s. [tapej, Saxon.] A wax candle; a light.

Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:
When it is lighted come and call me.

Shakspeare.

My daughter and little son we'll dress
With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands.

Shakspeare.

If any snatch the pure taper from my hand, and hold it to the devil, he will only burn his own fingers, but shall not rob me of the reward of my good intention.

Bp. Taylor.

There the fair light,
Like hero's taper in the window plac'd,
Such fate from the malignant air did find,
As that expos'd to the boist'rous wind.

Waller.

To see this fleet
Heaven, as if there wanted lights above,
For tapers made two glaring comets rise.

Dryden.

TA'PER. adj. [from the form of a taper.] Regularly narrowed from the bottom to the top; pyramidal; conical.

Her taper fingers, and her panting breast,
He praises.

Dryden.

From the beaver the otter differs in his teeth, which are canine; and in his tail, which is feline, or a long taper.

Grew.

To TA'PER. v. n. To grow gradually smaller.

The back is made tapering in form of a pillar, the lower vertebres being the broadest and largest; the superior lesser and lesser, for the greater stability of the trunk.

Ray.

Such be the dog,
With tapering tail, that nimbly cuts the wind.

Tickell.

To TA'PER.* v. a.

1. To make gradually smaller.

2. To light with tapers.

The taper'd choir, at the late hour of prayer,
Oft let me visit.

Warton, Pleas. of Melancholy.

TA'PERNESS.* n. s. [from taper.] The state of being taper.

A Corinthian pillar has a relative beauty, dependent on its
taperness and foliage.

Shenstone on Taste.

TA'PESTRY. n. s. [tapesterie, tapisserie, tapis, Fr. tapetum, Lat.] Cloth woven in regular figures.

In the desk

That's covered o'er with Turkish tapestry,
There is a purse of ducats.

Shakspeare.

The casements are with golden tissue spread,
And horses' hoofs, for earth, on silken tapestry tread.

Dryden.

One room is hung with tapestry, in which are wrought the figures of the great persons of the family.

Addison.

To TA'PESTRY.* v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with tapestry.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 97.

TAPIS.* n. s. [French.] Literally tapestry, which formerly covered tables; whence matters laid upon the table for discussion.

The house of lords sate till past five at night. Lord Churchill and lord Godolphin went away, and gave no votes in the matter which was upon the tapis.

Henry, Ld. Clarendon, Diary, in 1690.

TA'FLASH.* n. s. [from tap, and perhaps lasche, Fr. slack, slow.] Poor beer; the last running of small beer; dregs. Still used in the north of England.

Banded up and down by the schoolmen in their taplash-disputes.

Bp. Parker, Repr. of Reh. Transpr. (1673,) p. 197.

TA'PROOT. n. s. [tap and root.] The principal stem of the root.

Some put under the trees raised of seed, about four inches below the place where they sow their seeds, a small piece of tile to stop the running down of the taproot, which occasions it to branch when it comes to the tile.

Mortimer.

TA'PSTER.† n. s. [tæppepe, Saxon; and tæppeptre, she who had the care of the tap in a publick-house. Chaucer's tapster is stated by Mr. Tyrwhitt to be a woman.] One whose business is to draw beer in an alehouse.

The oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster;
they are both the confirmers of false reckonings.

Shakspeare.

Though you change your place, you need not change your trade: I'll be your tapster still.

Shakspeare.

The world is come now to that pass, that the vintner and
tapster may broach what religion they please; and the apothecary may mingle her as he pleases.

Howell.

Though the painting grows decay'd,
The house will never lose its trade;
Nay, though the treacherous tapster Thomas
Hangs a new angel two doors from us.

Swift.

TAR.† n. s. [tape, Saxon; terre, Teut. tiere, Danish; from toere, tyre, Swed. tæda, lignum pingue, ex quo hoc liquamen coquitur. Serenius.] Liquid pitch; the turpentine of the pine or fir drained out by fire.

Then, foaming tar, their bridles they would champ,
And trampling the fine element would fiercely ramp.

Spenser.

A man will not lose a hog for a halfpenny worth of tar.

Camden, Rem.

TAR.† n. s. [from tar, used in ships.] A sailor; a seaman, in colloquial language.

In senates bold, and fierce in war,
A land commander, and a tar.

Swift, Miscell.

To TAR.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smear over with tar.

I have nointed ye, and tarr'd ye with my doctrine,
And yet the murrain sticks to ye.

Beaum. and Fl. Span. Curate.

2. [more properly to ter or terre, as Wicliffe uses it; not only to distinguish it from tar, but as it is nearer to the etymon; for it is not from the Greek ταράσσω, as Dr. Johnson would have it to be, but from the Sax. tyrjan, to irritate, as Serenius, and after him Mr. H. Tooke, has observed.] To tease; to provoke.

There has been much to do on both sides; and the nation holds it no sin to tar them on to controversy

Shakspeare.

Two curs shall tame each other; pride alone

Must tar the mastiffs on, as 'twere the bone.

Shakspeare.

TARANTULA.† n. s. [Italian; tarentule, French.]

The tarantula in all likelihood derives its name from Tarentum, in Calabria. See Drummond's Trav. p. 161.] An insect whose bite is said to be only cured by musick.

This word, lover, did no less pierce poor Pyrocles than the right tune of musick toucheth him that is sick of the tarantula.

Sidney.

He that uses the word tarantula, without having any idea of what it stands for, means nothing at all by it.

Locke.

TARDA'TION. n. s. [tardo, Lat.] The act of hindering or delaying.

TA'RDIGRAOUS. adj. [tardigradus, Latin.] Moving slowly.

It is but a slow and tardigradous animal, preying upon advantage, and otherwise may be escaped.

Brown.

TA'RDILY. adv. [from tardy.] Slowly; sluggishly.

He was indeed the glass,

Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves;

Speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,

Became the accents of the valiant:

For those that could speak slow and tardily,

Would turn their own perfection to abuse,

To seem like him.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

TA'RDINESS. n. s. [from tardy.] Slowness; sluggishness; unwillingness to action or motion.

A tardiness in nature,

Which often leaves the history unspoke,

That it intends to do.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

TA'RDITY. n. s. [tarditas, from tardus, Lat. tardiveté, Fr.] Slowness; want of velocity.

Suppose some observable tardity in the motion of light, and then ask how we should arrive to perceive it?

Digby.

Our explication includes time in the notions of velocity and tardity.

Digby on the Soul.

TARDY. adj. [tardus, Lat. tardif, Fr.]

1. Slow; not swift.

Nor should their age by years be told,

Whose souls, more swift than motion, climb,

And check the tardy flight of time.

Sandys, Paraph.

2. Sluggish; unwilling to action or motion.

Behold that navy which a while before

Provok'd the tardy English close to fight;

Now draw their beaten vessels close to shore,

As larks lie dar'd to shun the hobbies' flight.

Dryden.

When certain to o'ercome, inclin'd to save,

Tardy to vengeance, and with mercy brave.

Prior.

3. Dilatory; late; tedious.

You shall have letters from me to my son

In your behalf, to meet you on the way;

Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Death he as oft accus'd

Of tardy execution, since denounc'd

The day of his offence.

Milton, P. L.

The tardy plants in our cold orchards plac'd,

Reserve their fruit for the next age's taste:

There a small grain in some few months will be

A firm, a lofty, and a spacious tree.

Waller.

Tardy of aid, unseal thy heavy eyes,

Awake, and with the dawning day arise.

Dryden.

You may freely censure him for being tardy in his payments.

Arbutnot.

4. Unwary. A low word.

Yield, scoundrel base, quoth she, or die,

Thy life is mine, and liberty:

But if thou think'st I took thee tardy,

And dar'st presume to be so hardy,

To try thy fortune o'er a-fresh,

I'll wave my title to thy flesh.

Hudibras.

5. Criminal; offending. A low word.

If they take them tardy, they endeavour to humble them by way of reprisal: those slips and mismanagements are usually ridiculed.

Collier on Pride.

To TA'RDY. v. a. [tarder, Fr. from the adjective.]

To delay; to hinder.

I chose

Camillo for the minister, to poison

My friend Polixenes; which had been done,

But that the good mind of Camillo tardied

My swift command.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

TARE.† n. s. [from teeren, Dutch, to consume. Skinner.]

1. A weed that grows among corn.

Through hatred of tares, the corn in the field of God is plucked up.

Hooker.

The liberal contributions such teachers met with served to invite more labourers, where their seed-time was their harvest, and by sowing tares they reaped gold.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

My country neighbours begin not to think of being in general, which is being abstracted from all its inferior species, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn.

Locke.

2. The common vetch.

A poor grain of oat, or tare, or barley.

Pope, Acc. of E. Curll.

TARE. n. s. [French.] A mercantile word denoting the weight of any thing containing a commodity; also the allowance made for it.

TARE, preterite of tear.

The women beat their breasts, their cheeks they tare.

Dryden.

TARGE. } n. s. [tapz, tanga, Saxon; targe, Italian;

TA'RGET. } targe, French; tarian, Welsh, which seems the original of the rest; an taargett, Erse.]

A kind of buckler or shield borne on the left arm.

It seems to be commonly used for a defensive weapon, less in circumference than a shield.

Glancing on his helmet made a large

And open gash therein, were not his targe

That broke the violence.

Spenser.

I took all their seven points in my target.

Shakspeare.

Henceforward will I bear

Upon my target three fair shining suns.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The arms she useth most is the target, to shroud herself under, and fence away the blow.

Howell, Engl. Tears.

Those leaves

They gather'd, broad as Amazonian targe.

Milton, P. L.

The Greeks the gates approach'd, their targets cast

Over their heads, some scaling-ladders plac'd

Against the walls.

Derham.

TARGET'ER. n. s. [from target.] One armed with a target.

For horsemen and for targetiers none could with him compare.

Chapman.

Jonathan or Onkelos the targumists were of cleaner language. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

TA'RIFF. n. s. [perhaps a Spanish word; tarif, Fr.] A cartel of commerce.

This branch of our trade was regulated by a tariff, or declaration of the duties of import and export. Addison.

TARN.† n. s. [tiaurn, Icelandick.] A bog; a fen; a marsh; a pool; a quagmire.

A pasture overflowed with water, not much unlike a tarn or lough, whence the grass by the superfluity of an oleaginous moisture degenerates into coarse piles.

Ray, Collect. of Eng. Words, p. 137.

To TA'RNISH. v. a. [ternir, Fr.] To sully; to soil; to make not bright.

Let him pray for resolution, that he may discover nothing that may discredit the cause, tarnish the glory, and weaken the example of the suffering. Collier.

Low waves the rooted forest, vex'd, and sheds
What of its tarnish'd honours yet remain. Thomson.

To TA'RNISH. v. n. To lose brightness.

If a fine object should tarnish by having a great many see it, or the musick should run mostly into one man's ears, these satisfactions would be made inclosure. Collier of Envy.

TARPA'WLING.† n. s. [from tar.]

1. Hempen cloth smeared with tar.

Some the gall'd ropes with dauby marling bind,
Or searcloth masts with strong tarpawling coats. Dryden.

2. A sailor.

Lawson was the man of whose judgement the duke had the best esteem: and he was, in truth, of a man of that breeding, (for he was a perfect tarpawlin,) a very extraordinary person: he understood his profession incomparably well, spake clearly and pertinently. Ld. Clarendon, Life, &c. ii. 478.

Was any thing wanting to the extravagance of this age, but the making a living tarpawlin and a swabber the hero of a tragedy? Dennis.

TA'RRAGON. n. s. A plant called herb-dragon.

TA'RRANCE. n. s. [from tarry.] Stay; delay; perhaps sojourn.

Dispatch me hence;
Come, answer not; but do it presently,
I am impatient of my tarriance. Shakspeare.

TARRIER. n. s. [This should be written terrier, from terre, French, the earth.] A sort of small dog, that hunts the fox or otter out of his hole.

The fox is earthed; but I shall send my two tarriers in after him. Dryden.

TARRIER.† n. s. [from tarry.] One that tarries or stays; one that waits; whatever delays or puts off.

He is oftentimes called of them Fabius Cunctator, that is to say, the tarrier and delaier. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 75.

Writs of error are the tarriers that keep his client undoing somewhat the longer. Overbury, Charact. M. 7. b.

To TA'RRY.† v. n. [targir, French. Kilian refers both the French and our word to the Teut. traeghen, to delay; by metathesis therefore tarry.]

1. To stay; to continue in a place.

Tarry I here, I but attend on death;
But fly I hence, I fly away from life. Shakspeare.
I yet am tender, young, and full of fear,
And dare not die, but fain would tarry here. Dryden.

2. To delay; to be long in coming.

Thou art my deliverer, make no tarrying, O God. • Psalms.

TART. n. s. [tarte, French; tarta, Italian; taart, Danish.] A small pie of fruit.

Figures, with divers coloured earths, under the windows of the house on that side near which the garden stands, be but toys; you may see as good sights in tarts. Bacon, Ess.

TA'TARANE. n. s. [tartana, Italian; tartane, Fr.] A vessel much used in the Mediterranean, with one mast and a three-cornered sail.

I set out from Marseilles to Genoa in a tartane, and arrived late at a small French port called Cassis. Addison.

TA'TAR.† n. s. [tartarus, Lat.]

1. Hell. A word used by the old poets, now obsolete.

With this the damned ghosts he governeth,

And furies rules, and tartare tempereth. Spenser.

He's in tartar limbo worse than hell;

A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,
One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel. Shakspeare.

2. [tartre, Fr.] Tartar is what sticks to wine casks, like a hard stone, either white or red, as the colour of the wine from whence it comes: the white is preferable, as containing less dross or earthy parts: the best comes from Germany, and is the tartar of the Rhenish wine. Quincy.

The fermented juice of grapes is partly turned into liquid drops or lees, and partly into that crust or dry feculency that is commonly called tartar; and this tartar may by the fire be divided into five differing substances, four of which are not acid, and the other not so manifestly acid as the tartar itself. Boyle.

3. To catch a TARTAR. See the fifteenth sense of To CATCH.

TARTA'REAN. adj. [tartarus, Lat.] Hellish.

His throne mix'd with tartarean sulphur. Milton.

Daily in the common prison else enjoin'd me.

Milton, S. A.

2. Employment; business.

His mental powers were equal to greater tasks.

Atterbury.

No happier task these faded eyes pursue,

To read and weep is all they now can do.

Pope.

3. To take to TASK. To reprove; to reprimand.

A holy man took a soldier to task upon the subject of his profession.

L'Estrange.

He discovered some remains of his nature when he met with a football, for which Sir Roger took him to task.

Addison.

To TASK. v. a. [from the noun.] To burthen with something to be done.

Forth he goes,

Like to a harvestman, that's task'd to mow,

Or all, or lose his hire.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Some things of weight,

That task our thoughts, concerning us and France.

Shakespeare.

I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified too; and behold what innovation it makes here. I am unfortunate in the infirmity, and dare not task my weakness with any more.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Divert thy thoughts at home,

There task thy maids, and exercise the loom.

Dryden.

TA'SKER.† } n. s. [task and master.]

TA'SKMASTER. }

1. One who imposes tasks.

All is, if I have grace to use it so,

As ever in my great taskmaster's eye.

Milton, Sonn.

The service of sin is perfect slavery; and he who will pay obedience to the commands of it, shall find it an unreasonable taskmaster, and an unmeasurable exactor.

South.

Hear, ye sullen powers below;

Hear, ye taskers of the dead.

Dryden and Lee.

2. One who undertakes a task, as a day-labourer: this is a colloquial use of tasker.

TA'SSEL. n. s. [tasse, French; tasselus, low Latin.] An ornamental bunch of silk, or glittering substances.

Then took the squire an horn of bugle small,

Which hung adown his side in twisted gold,

And tassels gay.

Spenser.

Their heads are tricked with tassels and flowers.

Sandys.

TA'SSEL.* n. s. [properly tercel or tiercel; Ital. terzuolo; which name it is said to have obtained, because it is a terce or third less than the female. See Stevens's Note on Shakspeare's Rom. and Jul.] The male of the goshawk.

A fearfull dove—

Having far off espyde a tassel-gent.

Spenser, F. Q.

O, for a falconer's voice,

To lure this tassel-gentle back again!

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

When hawks lay three eggs, the first produceth a female and large hawk, the second of a middler sort, and the third a smaller bird tercellene or tassel of the male sex.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 119.

Early ere the odorous breath of morn

Awakes the slumbering leaves, or tassel'd horn

Shakes the high thicket, haste I all about.

Milton, Arcades.

TA'SSES. n. s. Armour for the thighs.

Ainsworth.

TA'STABLE. adj. That may tasted; savoury; relishing.

Their distilled oils are fluid, volatile and tastable.

Boyle.

To TASTE.† v. a. [taster, to try, French. Dr.

Johnson.—The old French word taster is to handle, to feel, to touch, as the Germ. and Teut. tasten, from which Kilian and Wachter derive the French; and the latter deduces the word from tatse, the hand. Taste-vin Cotgrave calls a broker for wine-merchants. Richelet shews taster, under the form of tâter, as common in the sense of perceiving by the palate: "tâter du vin, de la biere, &c." Dict. 1685.]

1. To perceive and distinguish by the palate.

The ruler of the feast tasted the water made wine.

St. John, ii.

2. To try by the mouth; to eat at least in a small quantity.

Bold deed to taste it under ban to touch.

Milton, P. L.

3. To essay first.

Rosceus was seldom permitted to eat any other meat but such as the prince before tasted of.

Kneller.

Thou and I marching before our troops

May taste fate to them, mow them out a passage.

Dryden.

4. To obtain pleasure from.

So shalt thou be despis'd, fair maid,

When by the sated lover tasted;

What first he did with tears invade,

Shall afterwards with scorn be wasted.

Carew.

5. To feel; to have perception of.

He should taste death for every man.

Heb. ii. 9.

6. To relish intellectually; to approve.

Thou, Adam, wilt taste no pleasure.

Milton, P. L.

To TASTE. v. n.

1. To try by the mouth to eat.

- Of this tree we may not taste nor touch. Milton, P. L.
2. To have a smack; to produce on the palate a particular sensation.
When the mouth is out of taste, it maketh things taste bitter and loathsome, but never sweet. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
When kine feed upon wild garlick, their milk tasteth of it. Bacon.
If your butter tastes of brass, it is your master's fault, who will not allow a silver saucepan. Swift.
  3. To distinguish intellectually.
Scholars, when good sense describing,
Call it tasting and imbibing. Swift.
  4. To be tinctured, or receive some quality or character.
Ev'ry idle, nice, and wanton reason
Shall, to the king, taste of this action. Shakespeare.
  5. To try the relish of any thing.
The body's life with meats and air is fed,
Therefore the soul doth use the tasting power
In veins, which through the tongue and palate spread,
Distinguish every relish sweet and sour. Davies.
  6. To have perception of.
Cowards die many times before their deaths;
The valiant never taste of death but once. Shakespeare.
The tasting of death touched the righteous also, and there was a destruction of the multitude in the wilderness. Wisdom of Sol.
  7. To take to be enjoyed.
What hither brought us? not hope here to taste
Of pleasure. Milton, P. L.
Of nature's bounty men forbore to taste,
And the best portion of the earth lay waste. Waller.
  8. To enjoy sparingly.
This fiery game your active youth maintain'd,
Not yet by years extinguish'd, though restrain'd;
You season still with sports your serious hours,
For age but tastes of pleasures, youth devours. Dryden.
- TASTE. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. The act of tasting; gustation.
Best of fruits, whose taste gave elocution. Milton, P. L.
  2. The sense by which the relish of any thing on the palate is perceived.
Bees delight more in one flower than another, and therefore have taste. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Delicacies of taste, sight, smell.
The tardy plants in our cold orchards plac'd,
Reserve their fruit for the next age's taste. Waller.
  3. Sensibility; perception.
I have almost forgot the taste of fears:
The time has been, my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night shriek. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Musick in the close,
As the last taste of sweets is sweetest last. Shakespeare, Rich. II.
  4. That sensation which all things taken into the mouth give particularly to the tongue, the papillæ of which are the principal instruments hereof. Quincy.
Manna was like coriander seed, white; and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey. Exod. xvi. 31.
Though there be a great variety of tastes, yet, as in smells, they have only some few general names. Locke.
  5. Intellectual relish or discernment.
Seeing they pretend no quarrel at other psalms which are in like manner appointed to be daily read, why do these so much offend and displease their tastes? Hooker.
Sion's songs to all true tastes excelling,
Where God is prais'd aright. Milton, P. R.
I have no taste
Of popular applause. Dryden, Span. Friar.
As he had no taste of true glory, we see him equipped like an Hercules, with a club and a lion's skin. Addison.
This metaphor would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste which gives us a relish of every flavour. Addison.
Your way of life, in my taste, will be the best. Pope.
How ill a taste for wit and sense prevails in the world. Swift.

- Pleasure results from a sense to discern, and a taste to be affected with beauty. Seed, Serm.
However contradictory it may be in geometry, it is true in taste, that many little things will not make a great one. Reynolds.
6. An essay; a trial; an experiment. Not in use.
I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this as an essay or taste of my virtue. Shakespeare.
  7. A small portion given as a specimen.
They thought it not safe to resolve, till they had a taste of the people's inclination. Bacon, Hen. VII.

TAX.† n. s. [tásg, Welsh; taxe, Fr. taxe, Dutch.]

1. An impost; a tribute imposed; an excise; a tallage. He, says Horace, being the son of a tax gatherer or collector, smells everywhere of the meanness of his birth. Dryden.

VOL. V.

With wars and taxes others waste their own,
And houses burn, and household gods deface,
To drink in bowls which glittering gems enchase. Dryden.

The tax upon tillage was two shillings in the pound in arable land, and four in plantations: this tax was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decumæ or tithes. Arbutnot.

2. [taxo, Lat.] Charge; censure.

Fly far from hence

All private taxes, and immodest phrases,
Whatever may but shew like vicious;
For wicked mirth never true pleasure brings,
But honest minds are pleas'd with honest things.

Beaum. and Fl. Kn. Burn. Peattie.

He could not without grief of heart, and without some tax upon himself and his ministers for the not executing the laws, look upon the bold licence of some pamphlets. Clarendon.

3. [taxa, low Lat.] Task; lesson to be learned. Obsolete.

At the archdeacon's visitation, the archdeacon shall appoint the curate to certain taxes of the New Testament, to be conned without book; and at their next synod to exact a rehearsal of them. Articles of Eccl. Visitation and Inquiry, 1564.

To TAX. v. a. [taxer, Fr. from the noun.]

They cannot tax other's omissions towards them without a tacit reproach of their own. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

He taxed not Homer nor Virgil for interesting their gods in the wars of Troy and Italy; neither would he have taxed Milton for his choice of a supernatural argument. Dryden.

Men's virtues I have commended as freely as I have taxed their crimes. Dryden.

He call'd him back aloud, and tax'd his fear;
And sure enough he heard, but durst not hear. Dryden.

Like some rich and mighty murderer,
Too great for prison which he breaks with gold,
Who fresher for new mischief does appear,
And dares the world to tax him with the old. Dryden.

If this be chance, it is extraordinary; and I dare not call it more, for fear of being taxed with superstition. Dryden.

If he taxes both of long delay,
My guilt is less, who sooner came away. Dryden.

This salutation cannot be taxed with flattery, since it was directed to a prince, of whom it had been happy for Rome if he had never been born, or if he had never died. Addison.

TA'XABLE.† adj. [from tax.] That may be taxed. Sherwood.

TAXA'TION. n. s. [taxation, Fr. taxatio, Lat. from tax.]

1. The act of loading with taxes; impost; tax.

The subjects could taste no sweeter fruits of having a king than grievous taxations to some vain purposes; laws made rather to find faults than to prevent faults. Sidney.

I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage; my words are as full of peace as matter. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

He daily such taxations did exact,
As were against the order of the state. Daniel.

Various news I heard,
Of old mismanagements, taxations new;
All neither wholly false, nor wholly true. Pope.

2. Accusation; scandal.

My father's love is enough to honour; speak no more of him, you'll be whipt for taxation one of these days. Shakespeare.

TA'XER. n. s. [from tax.] One who taxes.

These rumours begot scandal against the king, taxing him for a great taxer of his people. Bacon, Hen. VII.

TEA.† n. s. [a word, I suppose, Chinese; thé, Fr. "Tea was first imported from Holland by the earls of Arlington and Ossory, in 1666; from their ladies the women of quality learned its use. Its price was then three pounds a pound, and continued the same to 1707. In 1715, we began to use green tea; and the practice of drinking it descended to the lower class of the people." Dr. Johnson's Review of Hanway's Journal.] A Chinese plant, of which the infusion has lately been much drunk in Europe.

The muses' friend, tea, does our fancy aid,
Repress those vapours which the head invade. Waller.
One has a design of keeping an open tea table. Addison.
I have filled a tea pot, and received a dish of it. Addison.
He swept down a dozen tea dishes. Spectator.
Nor will you encourage the common tea table talk. Spectator.

Green leaves of tea contain a narcotick juice, which exudes by roasting: this is performed with great care before it is exposed to sale. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A living tea pot stands; one arm held out,
One bent; the handle this, and that the spout. Pope.
The mistress of the tea shop may give half an ounce. Swift.
The fear of being thought pedants hath taken many young divines off from their severer studies, which they have exchanged for plays, in order to qualify them for tea tables. Swift.

When you sweep, never stay to pick up tea spoons. Swift.

To TEACH.† v. a. pret. and part. pass. taught, sometimes teached, which is now obsolete. [æcan, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — From the Swed. te, Ioel. tia, to show: the derivation of which by Stiernh. from the M. Goth. ataugian, to show, (compounded of at, to, and augo, the eye,) Serenius pronounces highly ingenious and probable. See also Wachter in V. ZEIGEN.]

1. To instruct; to inform, as a master: correlative to learn.

I am too sudden bold,
To teach a teacher ill beseecheth me. Shakespeare.
The Lord will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. Isa. ii. 3.

Teach us by what means to shun
The inclement seasons. Milton, P. L.

2. To deliver any doctrine or art, or words to be learned.

Moses wrote this song, and taught it. Deut. xxxi. 22.

They teach all nations what of him they learn'd. Milton, P. L.

3. To show; to exhibit so as to impress upon the mind.

He is a good divine that follows his own instructions; I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than to be one of the twenty to follow my own teaching. Shakespeare.
If some men teach wicked things, it must be that others should practise them. South, Serm.

4. To tell; to give intelligence.

Huswives are taught, instead of a clocke,
How winter night passeth by crowing of cocke. Tusser.

To TEACH. v. n. To perform the office of an instructor.

I have labour'd
And with no little study, that my teaching,
And the strong course of my authority,
Might go one way. Shakespeare.
The heads judge for reward, the priests teach for hire, and the prophets divine for money. Mic. iii. 11.

TEACHABLE. adj. [from teach.] Docile; susceptible of instruction.

'Tis sufficient that matters of faith and religion be propounded in such a way, as to render them highly credible, so as an honest and teachable man may willingly and safely assent to them, and according to the rules of prudence be justified in so doing. Wilkins.

We ought to bring our minds free, unbiassed, and teachable to learn our religion from the word of God. Watts.

TEACHABLENESS.† n. s. [from teachable.] Docility; willingness to learn; capacity to learn.

Docility, teachableness, tractableness, is the property of wisdom; and he that is wise, is nearest unto happiness.

Granger on Eccl. (1621), p. 105.

TEACHER. n. s. [from teach.]

1. One who teaches; an instructor; preceptor.

Nature is no sufficient teacher what we should do that may attain unto life everlasting. Hooker.

I went into the temple, there to hear

The teachers of our law, and to propose

What might improve my knowledge or their own. Milton, P. R.

These were notions born with us; such as we were taught without the help of a teacher. South, Serm.

Imperious with a teacher's air,

Boastful he claims a right to wisdom's chair. Blackmore.

When he was run away with by his legs. Prior.

TEAL. n. s. [teelingh, Dutch.] A wild fowl of the duck kind.

Some serve for food to us, and some but to feed themselves; amongst the first sort we reckon the dip-chick, coots, teal, wigeon. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

TEAM. n. s. [temo, the team of a carriage, Latin; team, Sax. a yoke.]

1. A number of horses or oxen drawing at once the same carriage.

Thee a ploughman all unweasting found,

As he his toilsome team that way did guide,

And brought thee up in ploughman's state to bide. Spenser.

We fairies that do run

By the triple Hecate's team,

From the presence of the sun,

Following darkness like a dream,

Now are frolick. Shakespeare, Mids. Night's Dream.

Making such difference betwixt wake and sleep,

As is the difference betwixt day and night,

The hour before the heav'nly harness'd team

Begins his golden progress in the East. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

T E A

I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me, nor who 'tis I love. Shakspeare.

After the declining sun
Had chang'd the shadows, and their task was done,
Home with their weary team they took their way. Roscommon.

He heav'd with more than human force to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team. Dryden.

In stiff clays they may plow one acre of wheat with a team of horse. Mortimer.

pieces, and I saw him not since. Gen. xlv. 28.

John tore off lord Strut's servants' clothes: now and then they came home naked. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

Ambassadors sent to Carthage were like to be torn to pieces by the populace. Arbuthnot.

2. To laniate; to wound with any sharp point drawn along.

Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair,
The women beat their breasts, their cheeks they tare. Shakspeare.

Neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning to comfort them for the dead. Jer. xvi. 7.

3. To break or take away by violence.

As storms the skies, and torrents tear the ground,
Thus rag'd the prince, and scatter'd death around. Dryden.

4. To divide violently; to shatter.

Is it not as much reason to say, that God destroys fatherly authority, when he suffers one in possession of it to have his government torn in pieces, and shared by his subjects? Locke.

5. To pull with violence; to drive violently.

He roar'd, he beat his breast, he tore his hair. Dryden.
From harden'd oak, or from a rock's cold womb,
At least thou art from some fierce tygress come;
Or on rough seas from their foundation torn,
Got by the winds, and in a tempest born. Dryden.

T E A

Blush rather, that you are a slave to passion,
Which, like a whirlwind, tears up all your virtues,
And gives you not the leisure to consider. A. Philips.

6. To take away by sudden violence.

Solyman
Rhodes and Buda from the Christians tore. Waller.

The hand of fate
Has torn thee from me, and I must forget thee. Addison.

7. To make a violent rent.

In the midst a tearing groan did break
The name of Antony. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To TEAR. v. n. [tieren, Dutch.] To fume; to rave;
to rant turbulently.

All men transported into outrages for small trivial matters, fall under the inuendo of this bull, that ran tearing mad for the pinching of a mouse. L'Estrange,

TEAR. n. s. [from the verb.] A rent; a fissure.

TEARER. n. s. [from to tear.] One who rends or tears; one who blusters.

TEARFALLING. adj. [tear and fall.] Tender; shedding tears.

I am in
So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin,
Tearfalling pity dwells not in this eye. Shakspeare.

TEARFUL. adj. [tear and full.] Weeping; full of tears.

Is't meet that he
Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,
With tearful eyes add water to the sea? Shakspeare.

To clear the cloudy front of wrinkled care,
And dry the tearful sluices of despair;
Charm'd with that virtuous draught the exalted mind
All sense of woe delivers to the wind. Pope, Odys.

TEARLESS.* adj. [tear and less.] Without tears.

They look on with tearless eyes. Sandys, Ps. 106.
Why weep ye now? ye saw with tearless eye
When your fleet perish'd on the Punick wave.

Shenstone, El. 19.

To TEASE.† v. a. [tæjan, Saxon.]

1. To comb or unravel wool or flax.

Coarse complexions,
And cheeks of sorry grain, will serve to ply
The sampler, and to tease the huswife's wool. Milton, Comus.

2. To scratch cloth in order to level the nap.

3. To torment with importunity; to vex with assiduous impertinence.

Not by the force of carnal reason,
But indefatigable teasing. Butler.
My friends always tease me about him, because he has no estate. Spectator.

After having been present in publick debates, he was teased by his mother to inform her of what had passed. Addison.

We system-makers can sustain
The thesis, which you grant was plain;
And with remarks and comments tease ye,
In case the thing before was easy. Prior.

TEASEL. n. s. [tæjl, Saxon; dipsacus, Lat.] A plant.

The species are three: one is called carduus
fullonum, and is of singular use in raising the nap upon woollen cloth. Miller.

TEASELER.* n. s. [from teasel; teizeler, Norm. Fr.]
One who raises the nap on woollen cloth by means of the teasel. Kelham.

TEASER.† n. s. [from tease.] Whoever or whatever torments by incessant importunity.

These teasers, rather to rouse than pinch the game, only made Whitaker find his spirits. Fuller, Holy State, p. 60.
A fly buzzing at his ear, makes him deaf to the best advice.
If you would have him come to himself, you must take off his little teaser, which holds his reason at bay. Collier.

TEAT.† n. s. [teth, Welsh; tit, Saxon; tette, Dutch; teton, French. Dr. Johnson. — Germ. tittle, dutte; Heb. dad; M. Goth. daddian, lactare: vox anti-quissima. See Wachter and Serenius.] A dug; a pap.

Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny. Shakspeare.
Snows cause a fruitful year, watering the earth better than rain; for the earth sucks it as out of the teat. Bacon.

When we perceive that bats have teats, we infer, that they suckle their younglings with milk. Brown, Vulg. Err.

It more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe or goat dropping with milk at even. Milton, P. L.
Infants sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat. Locke.

The goat, how bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthea, reach'd her teat distant
With milk, thy early food. Prior.

TE'CHILY. adv. [from techy.] Peevishly; fretfully; frowardly.

TE'CHINESS.† n. s. [from techy.] Peevishness; fretfulness.

Age is not a more common plea than unjust: The young man pretends it for his wanton and inordinate lust; the old, for his grippleness, techiness, loquacity: all wrongfully, and not without foul abuse. Bp. Hall, Tempt. Repell. iii. § 10.

TE'CHNICAL. adj. [τεχνικός; technique, French.] Belonging to arts; not in common or popular use.

In technical words, or terms of art, they refrain not from calling the same substance sometimes the sulphur, and sometimes the mercury of a body. Locke.

TE'CHNICALLY.* adv. [from technical.] In a technical manner.

The first professed English satirist, to speak technically, is bishop Joseph Hall. Warton, Hist. E. P. iv. 2.

TECHNO'LOGY.* n. s. [τεχνη and λογος, Greek.] A description or discourse upon arts.

There were not any further essays made in technology for above fourscore years; but all men acquiesced in the common grammar. Twells, Exam. of Gramm. (1683,) Pref. p. 17.

TE'CHY.† adj. [for touchy, that is, inclination to be touched with whatever is said or done. Ray. Often written tetchy; which see.] Peevish; fretful; irritable; easily made angry; froward.

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar,
And he is as techy to be woo'd to woo,
As she is stubborn-chaste against all suit. Shakspeare.

When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple, and felt it bitter, pretty fool, to see it techy, and fall out with the dug. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

TECTO'NICK. adj. [τεκτονικός.] Pertaining to building. Bailey.

To TED.† v. a. [teaban, Saxon, to prepare.] To spread abroad new-mown grass, in order to make it into hay.

The smell of grain, or tedded grass or kine,
Or dairy, each rural sight, each rural sound. Milton, P. L.

Hay-makers following the mowers, and casting it abroad, they call tedding. Mortimer.

Prudent his fall'n heaps
Collecting, cherish'd with the tepid wreaths
Of tedded grass, and the sun's mellowing beams, Rivall'd with artful heats. Philips.

TEDDER, or TE'THER. n. s. [tudder, Dutch; tiudt, a rope, Icelandick.]

1. A rope with which a horse is tied in the field that he may not pasture too wide. [teigher, Erse.]

2. Any thing by which one is restrained.
We live joyfully, going abroad within our tedder. Bacon.
We shall have them against the wall; we know the length of their tedder, they cannot run far from us. Child.

To TE'DDER.* v. a. [from the noun.] To tie up; to restrain.

Though it is not required that we should be always teddered to a formal solemn praying; yet by our mental meditations, and our ejaculatory emissions of the heart and mind, we may go far to the compleating the Apostle's counsel.

Feltham, Res. ii. 55.

TE DEUM. n. s. An hymn of the church, so called from the two first words of the Latin.

The choir,

With all the choicest musick of the kingdom,
Together sung te deum. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Te deum was sung at Saint Paul's after the victory. Bacon.

TEDIOUS. adj. [tedieux, Fr. tedium, Lat.]

1. Wearisome by continuance; troublesome; irksome.

The one intense, the other still remiss,
Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove
Tedious alike. Milton, P. L.

Pity only on fresh objects stays,
But with the tedious sight of woes decays. Dryden.

2. Wearisome by prolixity. Used of authours or performances.

They unto whom we shall seem tedious are in nowise injured by us, because it is in their own hands to spare that labour which they are not willing to endure. Hooker.

That I be not further tedious unto thee, hear us of thy clemency a few words. Acts, xxiv. 4.

Chief mastery to dissect

With long and tedious havock fabled knights. Milton, P. L.

3. Slow.

But then the road was smooth and fair to see,
With such insensible declivity,
That what men thought a tedious course to run,
Was finish'd in the hour it first begun. Hartc.

TE'DIOUSLY.† adv. [from tedious.] In such a manner as to weary.

Why dost thou wrong

Our mutual love so much, and tediously prolong
Our mirthful marriage-hour. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

TE'DIOUSNESS. n. s. [from tedious.]

1. Wearisomeness by continuance.

She distastes them all within a while;
And in the sweetest finds a tediousness. Davies.

2. Wearisomeness by prolixity.

In vain we labour to persuade them, that any thing can take away the tediousness of prayer, except it be brought to the same measure and form which themselves assign. Hooker.

3. Prolixity; length.

Since brevity's the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

4. Uneasiness; tiresomeness; quality of wearying.

In those very actions whereby we are especially perfected in this life we are not able to persist; forced we are with very weariness, and that often, to interrupt them; which tediousness cannot fall into those operations that are in the state of bliss when our union with God is compleat. Hooker.

More than kisses, letters mingle souls,
For thus friends absent speak: this ease controuls
The tediousness of my life. Donne.

To TEEM.† v. n. [teman, Sax. to procreate; team, offspring.]

1. To bring young.

If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live,
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her. Shakspeare.

2. To be pregnant; to engender young.

Have we more sons? or are we like to have?
Is not my teeming date drunk up with time,
And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age? Shakspeare.

When the rising spring adorns the mead,
Teeming buds and cheerful greens appear. Dryden.

T E E

There are fundamental truths the basis upon which a great many others rest: these are teeming truths, rich in store, with which they furnish the mind, and, like the lights of Heaven, give light and evidence to other things. Locke.

3. To be full; to be charged as a breeding animal.

We live in a nation where there is scarce a single head that does not teem with politicks. Addison.

To TEEM.† v. a.

1. To bring forth; to produce.

What's the newest grief?

Each minute teems a new one. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Common mother, thou

Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast,
Teems and feeds all. Shakspeare, Timon.

The earth obey'd; and strait

Opening her fertile womb, teem'd at a birth
Innumerable living creatures. Milton, P. L.

The deluge wrought such a change, that the earth did not then teem forth its increase, as formerly, of its own accord, but required culture. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. To pour. A low word, imagined by Skinner to come from tommen, Danish, to draw out; to pour.

The Scots retain it: as, teem that water out; hence Swift took this word. Dr. Johnson.—

What Dr. Johnson has here said, is not accurate. This sense of teem is not only still retained in our northern parts of England, but is very old in our language. “The teming or broaching of a vessel, depletio.” Prompt. Parv. Serenius refers it to the Icel. taema, to empty.

Teem out the remainder of the ale into the tankard, and fill the glass with small beer. Swift, Direct. to the Butler.

TE'EMER. n. s. [from teem.] One that brings young.

TE'EMPUL. adj. [teampul, Saxon.]

1. Pregnant; prolific.

2. Brimful.

Ainsworth.

TE'EMLESS. adj. [from teem.] Unfruitful; not prolific.

Such wars, such waste, such fiery tracks of dearth,
Their zeal has left, and such a teemless earth. Dryden.

TEEN.† n. s. [tinan, Saxon, to kindle; tenen, Flemish, to vex; teonan, Saxon, injuries.] Sorrow; grief. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says; yet it is still a northern word both for sorrow, and for injury or harm.

Arrived there

That barehead knight, for dread and doleful teen
Would fain have fled, ne durst approachen near. Spenser.

Fry not in heartless grief and doleful teen. Spenser.

My heart bleeds

To think o' the teen that I have turn'd to you. Shakspeare.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,

And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shakspeare.

Cold winter's storms and wreakful teene. W. Browne.

To TEEN.† v. a. [from tinan, to kindle, Sax.] To excite; to provoke to do a thing. Not in use.

Why tempt ye me, and tene, with such manner speche?

Chaucer, Test. of Love.

Religious reverence doth buriall teene,
Which whoso wants, wants so much of his rest. Spenser, F. Q.

TEENS. n. s. [from teen for ten.] The years reckoned by the termination teen; as, thirteen, fourteen.

Our author would excuse these youthful scenes,
Begotten at his entrance, in his teens;
Some childish fancies may approve the toy,
Some like the muse the more for being a boy. Granville.

TEETH, the plural of tooth.

Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth are terrible round about. Job, xli. 14.

To TEETH. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed teeth; to be at the time of dentition.

When the symptoms of teething appear, the gums ought to be relaxed by softening ointment. Arbuthnot on Diet

T E L

TE'GUMENT. n. s. [tegumentum, Latin.] Cover; the outward part. This word is seldom used but in anatomy or physicks.

Clip and trim those tender strings in the fashion of beard, or other hairy teguments. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Proceed by section, dividing the skin, and separating the teguments. Wiseman, Surgery.

In the nutmeg another tegument is the mace between the green pericarpium and the hard shell. Ray on the Creation.

TEHE'E.* interjection. This is an old expression for a laugh. It is also used in Scotland; and Dr. Jamieson considers it as either derived from the sound, or as allied to hia, Su. Goth. and Icel. to sport, to laugh.

Te-he, quoth she, and clapt the window to.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

To TE'HEE. v. n. To laugh with a loud and more insolent kind of cachinnation; to titter.

They laugh'd and te-hee'd with derision,

To see them take your deposition.

Hudibras.

TEIL.† n. s. [tilia, Lat.] The same with linden or lime tree.

A teiltree and an oak have their substance in them when they cast their leaves. Isa. vi. 13.

From purple violets and the teil they bring

Their gather'd sweets, and rifle all the spring.

Addison, Virg. Georg. 4.

TEINT. n. s. [teinte, Fr.] Colour; touch of the pencil.

Glaz'd colours have a vivacity which can never be imitated by the most brilliant colours, because the different teints are simply laid on, each in its place, one after another. Dryden.

TE'LARY. adj. [tela, a web, Lat.] Spinning webs.

The pictures of telary spiders, and their position in the web, is commonly made lateral, and regarding the horizon; although we shall commonly find it downward, and their heads respecting the center. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TE'LEGRAPH.* n. s. [telegraphe, Fr. from τελος and γραφω, Gr.] An instrument that answers the end of writing by conveying intelligence to a distance through the means of signals. Mason.

TE'LESCOPE.† n. s. [telescope, Fr. from τηλε, far, and σκοπεω, to view.] A long glass by which distant objects are viewed.

The telescope discovers to us distant wonders in the heavens, and shews the milky way, and the bright cloudy spots, in a very dark sky, to be a collection of little stars. Watts.

TELESCO'PICAL.† } adj. [from telescope.] Belonging

TELESCO'PICK. } to a telescope; seeing at a distance.

Mr. Molyneux discoursed of telescopic sights.

Hist. R. S. iv. 272.

TE'LESM.* n. s. [talism, Arab. See TALISMAN.] A kind of amulet or magical charm.

He made there many telesms at the instance of the citizens, as that against the storms, against the river Lycus, and other strange things. Gregory, Notes on Script. p. 38.

This is hugely like the consecrated telesms of the pagans.

More against Idolatry, ch. 9.

TELESMA'TICAL.* adj. [from telesm.] Belonging to telesms.

They had a telesmatical way of preparation, answerable to the beginnings and mediocrity of the art.

Gregory, Notes on Script. p. 41.

There was brought into Aleppo a little copper vessel, out of a strong imagination that it was endued with a telesmatical virtue to draw thereunto a sort of birds which feed on locusts.

Ricaut, State of the Gr. Ch. p. 376.

TELE'STICK.* n. s. [from τελος and στιχος, Gr.] A poem, where the final letters of each line make up a name. Mason.

TEL

To TELL. v. a. preterite and part. pass. told. [tellan, Saxon; taelen, tellen, Dutch; talen, Danish.]

1. To utter; to express; to speak.

I will not eat till I have told mine errand. Gen. xxiv. 33.

Thy message might in telling wound,
And in performing end us. Milton, P. L.

2. To relate; to rehearse.

I will declare what wise men have told from their fathers, and have not hid. Job, xv. 18.

When Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the interpretation, he worshipped. Judges, vii. 13.

He longer will delay to hear thee tell
His generation. Milton, P. L.

You must know; but break, O break my heart,
Before I tell my fatal story out,
Th' usurper of my throne is my wife! Dryden.

The rest are vanish'd, none repass'd the gate,
And not a man appears to tell their fate. Pope, Odys.

3. To teach; to inform.

He gently ask'd where all the people be,
Which in that stately building wont to dwell,
Who answer'd him full soft, he could not tell. Spenser.

I told him of myself; which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Tell me now; what lady is the same,
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promis'd to tell me of. Shakespeare.

The fourth part of a shekel of silver will I give to the man of God to tell us our way. 1 Sam. ix. 8.

Saint Paul telleth us, we must needs be subject not only for fear, but also for conscience sake. Sanderson.

Tell me how may I know him, how adore. Milton, P. L.

They will tell it to the inhabitants. Num. xiv. 14.

5. To count; to number.

Here lies the learned Savile's heir,
So early wise, and lasting fair;
That none, except her years they told,
Thought her a child, or thought her old. Waller.

Numerous sails the fearful only tell;
Courage from hearts, and not from numbers grows. Dryden.

A child can tell twenty before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.

She doubts if two and two make four,
Though she has told them ten times o'er. Prior.

6. To make excuses. A low word.

Tush, never tell me, I take it much unkindly,
That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse,
As if the strings were thine, should'st know of this. Shakespeare.

To TELL. v. n.

1. To give an account; to make report.

I will compass thine altar, O Lord, that I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works. Ps. xxvii. 7.

Ye that live and move, fair creatures tell,
Tell, if ye saw, how came I thus, how here? Milton, P. L.

2. To TELL on. To inform of. A doubtful phrase.

David saved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, lest they should tell on us, saying, so did David. 1 Sam. xxvii. 11.

TELLER. † n. s. [from tell.]

Woman! Nature made thee

To temper man: we had been brutes without you.

Otway.

8. To form metals to a proper degree of hardness.

The sword

Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was given him temper'd so, that neither keen
Nor solid might resist that edge.

Milton, P. L.

In the tempering of steel, by holding it but a minute or two longer or lesser in the other competent heat, gives it very differing tempers as to brittleness or toughness.

Boyle.

Repeated peals they hear,
And, in a heav'n serene, refulgent arms appear;
Red'ning the skies, and glitt'ring all around,
The temper'd metals clash, and yield a silver sound.

Dryden.

9. To govern. A latinism.

With which the damned ghosts he governeth,
And furies rules, and Tartare tempereth.

Spenser.

TE'MPER. n. s. [from the verb.]

Granger on Eccl. (1621,) p. 15.

TE'MPERATURE. n. s. [temperatura, tempero, Lat. temperatura, Fr.]

1. Constitution of nature; degree of any qualities.

It lieth in the same climate, and is of no other temperature than Guinea.

Abbot, Descr. of the World.

Birds that change countries at certain seasons, if they come earlier, shew the temperature of weather.

Bacon.

There may be as much difference as to the temperature of the air, and as to heat and cold in one mile, as in ten degrees of latitude; and he that would cool and refresh himself in the summer, had better go up to the top of the next hill, than remove into a far more northern country.

Brown, Trav.

Memory depends upon the consistence and the temperature of the brain.

Watts.

2. Mediocrity; due balance of contrarieties.

As the world's sun doth effects beget

Different, in divers places every day;

Here autumn's temperature, there summer's heat,

Here flowery spring-tide, and there winter gray.

Davies.

If, instead of this variation of heat, we suppose an equality, or constant temperature of it before the deluge, the case would be much altered.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. Moderation; freedom from predominant passion.

In that proud port which her so goodly graceth,

Most goodly temperature you may descry.

Spenser.

TE'MPERED. adj. [from temper.] Disposed with regard to the passions.

Maxon, Mech. Ex.

TE'MPORAL. adj. [temporal, Fr. temporalis, low Lat.]

1. Measured by time; not eternal.

As there they sustain temporal life, so here they would learn to make provision for eternal. Hooker.

2. Secular; not ecclesiastical.

This sceptre shews the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread of kings. Shakspeare.

All the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament have given to the church,
Would they strip from us. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

All temporal power hath been wrested from the clergy, and much of their ecclesiastick. Swift.

3. Not spiritual.

There is scarce any of those decisions but gives good light, by way of authority or reason, to some questions that arise also between temporal dignities, especially to cases wherein some of our subordinate temporal titles have part in the controversy. Selden.

Call not every temporal end a defiling of the intention, but only when it contradicts the ends of God, or when it is principally intended: for sometimes a temporal end is part of our duty; and such are all the actions of our calling. Bp. Taylor.

Prayer is the instrument of fetching down all good things to us, whether spiritual or temporal. Wh. Duty of Man.

Our petitions to God with regard to temporals, must be that medium of convenience proportioned to the several conditions of life. Rogers, Sermon.

4. [Temporal, Fr.] Placed at the temples, or upper part of the sides of the head.

Copious bleeding, by opening the temporal arteries, are the most effectual remedies for a phrensy. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

TEMPORALITY. } n.s. [temporalité, Fr. from temporal.]

TEMPORALS. } Secular possessions; not ecclesiastick rights.

Such revenues, lands, and tenements, as bishops have had annexed to their sees by the kings and others from time to time, as they are barons and lords of the parliament. Cowel.

The residue of these ordinary finances is casual, as the temporalities of vacant bishopricks, the profits that grow by the tenures of lands. Bacon.

The king yielded up the point, reserving the ceremony of homage from the bishops, in respect of the temporalities, to himself. Ayliffe.

TEMPORALLY. adv. [from temporal.] With respect to this life.

Sinners who are in such a temporally happy condition, owe it not to their sins, but wholly to their luck. South.

TEMPORARY. adj. [tempus, Latin.] Lasting only for a limited time.

These temporary truces were soon made and soon broken;
he desired a straiter amity. Bacon, Hen. VII.

If the Lord's immediate speaking, uttering, and writing, doth conclude by a necessary inference, that all precepts uttered and written in this manner are simply and perpetually moral; then, on the contrary, all precepts wanting this are merely temporary. White.

The republick threatened with danger, appointed a temporary dictator, who, when the danger was over, retired again into the community. Addison.

TEMPORIZATION. * n.s. [from temporize.] The act of complying with times or occasions.

Charges of temporization and compliance had somewhat sullied his reputation. Johnson, Life of Ascham.

To TEMPORIZE. v. n. [temporiser, Fr. tempus, Latin.]

1. To delay; to procrastinate.

If Cupid hath not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly.

— I look for an earthquake too then.

— Well, you will temporize with the hours. Shakspeare.

The earl of Lincoln, deceived of the country's concourse, in which case he would have temporized, resolved to give the king battle. Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. To comply with the times or occasions.

They might their grievance inwardly complain,
But outwardly they needs must temporize. Daniel.

3. To comply. This is improper.

The dauphin is too wilful opposite,
And will not temporize with my entreaties:
He flatly says, he'll not lay down his arms. Shakspeare.

TEMPORIZER. † n.s. [temporiseur, Fr. from temporize.] One that complies with times or occasions; a trimmer.

I pronounce thee a hovering temporizer, that Canst with thine eyes at once see good and evil, Inclining to them both. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Like so many weathercocks they turn round, a rout of temporizers, ready to maintain all that is or shall be proposed, in hope of preferment! Burton, Anat. of Mel. Pref.

TEMSE BREAD. † } n.s. [temsen, Dutch; tamiser, Fr.]

TEMSED BREAD. } tamesare, Italian, to sift; tems, Dutch; tamis, French; tamiso, Italian, a sieve; all from the Saxon temerian. Lyc. Bread made of flower better sifted than common.

To TEMPT. † v. a. [tento, Lat. tenter, Fr.]

1. To solicit to ill; to incite by presenting some pleasure or advantage to the mind; to entice.

'Tis not the king that sends you to the Tower:

My lady Gray tempts him to this harsh extremity. Shakspeare.

You ever gentle gods, take my breath from me;

Let not my worse spirit tempt me again
To die before you please. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Come together, that Satan tempt you not. 1 Cor. vii. 5.

He that hath not wholly subdued himself, is quickly tempted and overcome in small things. Bp. Taylor.

Fix'd on the fruit she gaz'd, which to behold

Might tempt alone. Milton, P. L.

The devil can but tempt and deceive; and if he cannot destroy so, his power is at end. South.

O wretched maid!

Whose roving fancy would resolve the same
With him, who next should tempt her easy fame. Prior.

2. To provoke.

I'm much too venturous
In tempting of your patience. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Withhold
Your talons from the wretched and the bold;
Tempt not the brave and needy to despair:
For, though your violence should leave 'em bare
Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain. Dryden.

3. It is sometimes used without any notion of evil; to solicit; to draw.

Still his strength conceal'd
Which tempted our attempt, and wrought our fall. Milton, P. L.

The rowing crew,
To tempt a fare, clothe all their tilts in blue. Gay.

4. To try; to attempt; to venture on. I know not whether it was not originally t'attempt, which was viciously written to tempt, by an elision of the wrong syllable.

This from the vulgar branches must be torn,
And to fair Proserpine the present born,
Ere leave be giv'n to tempt the nether skies.

Dryden.

5. To prove; to try.

He stayde his hand, and gan himselfe advise
To prove his sense, and tempt her feigned truth.

Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 50.

And it came to pass after these things, that God did tempt Abraham.

Gen. xxii.

TE'MPTABLE. adj. [from tempt.] Liable to temptation;
obnoxious to bad influence. Not elegant, nor used.

If the parliament were as temptable as any other assembly, the managers must fail for want of tools to work with.

Swift.

TEMPTA'TION.† n. s. [temptacion, old French; from tempt.]

1. The act of tempting; solicitation to ill; enticement.

All temptation to transgress repel.

Milton, P. L.

2. The state of being tempted.

When by human weakness, and the arts of the tempter, you are led into temptations, prayer is the thread to bring you out of this labyrinth.

Duppa.

3. That which is offered to the mind as a motive to ill.

Set a deep glass of Rhenish wine on the contrary casket; for if the devil be within, and that temptation without, he will chuse it.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Dare to be great without a guilty crown;

View it, and lay the bright temptation down:

'Tis base to seize on all.

Dryden, Aurengz.

TEMPTA'TIONLESS.* adj. [temptation and less.] Having no motive. Not in use.

An empty, profitless, temptationless sin.

Hammond, Works, iv. 513.

TE'MPTER. n. s. [from tempt.]

1. One who solicits to ill; an enticer.

These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Is this her fault or mine?

The tempter or the tempted, who sins most?

Not she; nor doth she tempt.

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Those who are bent to do wickedly, will never want tempters to urge them on.

Tillotson.

My work is done:

She's now the tempter to ensnare his heart.

Dryden.

2. The infernal solicitor to evil.

The experience of our own frailties, and the watchfulness of the tempter, discourage us.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

Foretold so lately what would come to pass,
When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell.

Milton, P. L.

To this high mountain's top the tempter brought

Our Saviour.

Milton, P. R.

TE'MPTINGLY.* adv. [from tempt.] So as to tempt or entice.

These look temptingly.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 301.

Precious trinkets are lavishly and temptingly exposed to view.

Peters on Job, p. 451.

TE'MPTRESS.* n. s. [from tempter.] She that tempts or entices.

Huloet, and Sherwood.

Be not jealous,

Euphrania; I shall scarcely prove a temptress:

Fall to our dance.

Ford, Broken Heart.

TEMULENCY.† n. s. [temulentia, Latin.] Inebriation; intoxication by liquor.

Bullockar.

TE'MULENT. adj. [temulentus, Lat.] Inebriated; intoxicated as with strong liquors.

TE'MULENTIVE.* adj. [temulentus, Lat.] Drunken; denoting the state of intoxication.

The drunkard commonly hath a palsied hand; gouty, staggering legs, that fain would go, but cannot; a drawling, stammering, temulentive tongue.

Junius, Sin Stigm. (1639), p. 38.

TEN.† adj. [tyn, Saxon; tien, Dutch.] Dr. Johnson. — M. Goth. taihim; Icel. tiju: aperto lingu.
affin. consensu. Ingeniosè satis Wachterus ab

Icel. tyna, legere, enumerare, digitos nempè omnes, quibus sine dubio numerabant veteres. Serenius.
To this numeration of the fingers Mr. H. Tooke also adverts; and pronounces ten the past participle of the Sax. tynan, to enclose, to encompass. See Div. of Purl. ii. 201. But the Icel. tyna, to reckon, is the more likely etymon.]

1. The decimal number; twice five; the number by which we multiply numbers into new denominations.

Thou shalt have more

Than two tens to a score.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Ten hath been extolled as containing even, odd, long, and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers; and Aristotle observed, that Barbarians as well as Greeks used a numeration unto ten.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

With twice ten sail I cross'd the Phrygian sea,
Scarce seven within your harbour meet.

Dryden.

From the soft lyre,

Sweet flute, and ten-string'd instrument, require
Sounds of delight.

Prior.

2. Ten is a proverbial number.

There's a proud modesty in merit,

Averse from begging; and resolv'd to pay

Ten times the gift it asks.

Dryden, Cleomenes.

Although English is too little cultivated, yet the faults are nine in ten owing to affectation.

Swift, Miscell.

TE'NABLE. adj. [tenable, French.] That may be maintained against opposition; that may be held against attacks.

The town was strong of itself, and wanted no industry to fortify and make it tenable.

Bacon, War with Spain.

Sir William Ogle seized upon the castle, and put it into a tenable condition.

Clarendon.

Infidelity has been driven out of all its outworks: the Atheist has not found his post tenable, and is therefore retired into Deism.

Addison, Spect.

TENACIOUS. adj. [tenax, Lat.]

1. Grasping hard; inclined to hold fast; not willing to let go: with of before the thing held.

A resolute tenacious adherence to well chosen principles, makes the face of a governor shine in the eyes of those that see his actions.

South.

Gripping, and still tenacious of thy hold,

Would'st thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely soul'd,

Should give the prizes they had gain'd.

Dryden.

You reign absolute over the hearts of a stubborn and freeborn people, tenacious to madness of their liberty.

Dryden.

True love's a miser; so tenacious grown,

He weighs to the least grain of what's his own.

Dryden.

Men are tenacious of the opinions that first possess them.

Locke.

He is tenacious of his own property, and ready to invade that of others.

Arbuthnot.

2. Retentive.

The memory in some is very tenacious; but yet there seems to be a constant decay of all our ideas, even of those which are struck deepest, and in minds the most retentive.

Locke.

3. [tenace, French.] Having parts disposed to adhere to each other; cohesive; viscous; glutinous.

Three equal round vessels filled, the one with water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors stirred alike to give them a vortical motion; the pitch by its tenacity will lose its motion quickly, the oil being less tenacious will keep it longer, and the water being less tenacious will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time.

Newton.

4. Niggardly; close-fisted; meanly parsimonious.

Ainsworth.

TENA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from tenacious.] With disposition to hold fast.

Some things our juvenile reasons tenaciously adhere to, which yet our maturer judgments disallow of.

Glanville.

TE'NANTABLE. adj. [from tenant.] Such as may be held by a tenant.

The ruins that time, sickness, or melancholy, shall bring, must be made up at your cost; for that thing a husband is but tenant for life in what he holds, and is bound to leave the place tenantable to the next that shall take it. Suckling.

That the soul may not be too much incommoded in her house of clay, such necessities are secured to the body as may keep it in tenantable repair. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

TE'NANTLESS. adj. [from tenant.] Unoccupied; unpossessed.

O thou, that dost inhabit in my breast,
Leave not the mansion so long tenantless;
Lest growing ruinous the building fall,
And leave no memory of what it was. Shakespeare.

TE'NANTRY. * n. s. [from tenant.]

O'ercome you with her shew. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

4. Care; act of tending.

Nature does require

Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
I her frail son, amongst my brethren mortal,
Must give my tendence to.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

They at her coming sprung,
And touch'd by her fair tendence gladlier grew.

Milton, P. L.

TE'NDENCE. } n. s. [from tend.]
TE'NDENCY. }

1. Direction or course towards any place or object.

It is not much business that distracts any man; but the want of purity, constancy, and tendency towards God.

Bp. Taylor.

Writings of this kind, if conducted with candour, have a more particular tendency to the good of their country than any other compositions.

Addison, Freeholder.

All of them are innocent, and most of them had a moral tendency, to soften the virulence of parties, or laugh out of countenance some vice or folly.

Swift.

We may acquaint ourselves with the powers and properties, the tendencies and inclinations, of body and spirit.

Watts.

2. Direction or course toward any inference or result; drift.

The greater congruity or incongruity there is in any thing to the reason of mankind, and the greater tendency it hath to promote or hinder the perfection of man's nature, so much greater degrees hath it of moral good or evil; to which we ought to proportion our inclination, or aversion.

Wilkins.

These opinions are of so little moment, that, like motes in the sun, their tendencies are little noticed.

Locke.

TENDER.† adj. [tendre, Fr.]

The barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed tennis balls.
Shakspeare.

A prince, by a hard destiny, became a tennis ball long to the blind goddess.
Howell, Voc. For.

It can be no more disgrace to a great lord to draw a fair picture, than to play at tennis with his page.
Peacham.

The inside of the uvea is blacked like the walls of a tennis court, that the rays falling upon the retina may not, by being rebounded thence upon the uvea, be returned again; for such a repercussion would make the sight more confused.
More against Atheism.

We conceive not a tennis ball to think, consequently not to have any volition, or preference of motion to rest.
Locke.

We have no exedra for the philosophers adjoining to our tennis court, but there are alehouses.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

TO TENNIS. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive as a ball. Not used.

Those four garrisons issuing forth upon the enemy, will so drive him from one side to another, and tennis him amongst them, that he shall find no where safe to keep his feet in, nor hide himself.
Spenser on Ireland.

TENOUR. n. s. [tenor, Lat. teneur, Fr.]

1. Continuity of state; constant mode; manner of continuity; general currency.

We might perceive his words interrupted continually with sighs, and the tenor of his speech not knit together to one constant end, but dissolved in itself, as the vehemency of the inward passion prevailed.
Sidney.

When the world first out of chaos sprang,
So smil'd the days, and so the tenor ran

T E N

Of their felicity: a spring was there,
An everlasting spring, the jolly year
Led round in his great circle, no wind's breath
As now did smell of winter or of death.
Crashaw.

Still I see the tenor of man's woe
Hold on the same, from woman to begin.
Milton, P. L.

Does not the whole tenor of the divine law positively require humility and meekness of all men.
Sprat.

Inspire my numbers,
Till I my long laborious work complete,
And add perpetual tenor to my rhimes,
Deduc'd from nature's birth to Cæsar's times.
Dryden.

This success would look like chance if it were not perpetual,
and always of the same tenor.
Dryden.

Can it be poison! poison's of one tenor,
Or hot, or cold.
Dryden, Don Sebastian.

There is so great an uniformity amongst them, that the whole tenor of those bodies thus preserved clearly points forth the month of May.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.

In such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low,
That shunning faults, one quiet tenor keep,
We cannot blame indeed — but we may sleep.
Pope.

2. Sense contained; general course or drift.

Has not the divine Apollo said,
Is't not the tenor of his oracle,
That king Leontes shall not have an heir,
Till his lost child be found?
Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

By the stern brow and waspish action,
Which she did use as she was writing of it,
It bears an angry tenor.
Shakspeare, As you like it.

Bid me tear the bond.
— When it is paid according to the tenor.
Shakspeare.

Reading it must be repeated again and again with a close attention to the tenor of the discourse, and a perfect neglect of the divisions into chapters and verses.
Locke.

3. A sound in musick.

The treble cutteth the air too sharp to make the sound equal;
and therefore a mean or tenor is the sweetest part.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Water and air he for the tenor chose,
Barth made the base, the treble flame arose.
Cowley.

TENSE. n. s. [temps, Fr. tempus, Lat.]

a variation of the verb to signify time.
Clarke.

As foresight, when it is natural, answers to memory, so when methodical it answers to reminiscence, and may be called forecast; all of them expressed in the tenses given to verbs.
Memory saith, I did see; reminiscence, I had seen; foresight,
I shall see; forecast, I shall have seen.
Grew.

Ladies, without knowing what tenses and participles are,
speak as properly and as correctly as gentlemen.
Locke.

He should have the Latin words given him in their first case and tense, and should never be left to seek them himself from a dictionary.
Watts.

TENSE. adj. [tensus, Lat.] Stretched; stiff; not lax.

For the free passage of the sound into the ear, it is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched, otherwise the laxness of the membrane will certainly dead and damp the sound.
Holder.

TENSENESS. n. s. [from tense.] Contraction; tension:
the contrary to laxity.

Should the pain and tenseness of the part continue, the operation must take place.
Sharp, Surgery.

TENSIBLE. adj. [tensus, Lat.] Capable of being extended.

Gold is the closest, and therefore the heaviest, of metals, and is likewise the most flexible and tensible.
Bacon.

TENSILE. adj. [tensilis, Lat.] Capable of extension.

All bodies ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires, have the appetite of not discontinuing.
Bacon.

TENSION. n. s. [tension, Fr. tensus, Lat.]

1. The act of stretching; not laxation.

It can have nothing of vocal sound, voice being raised by stiff tension of the larynx; and on the contrary, this sound by a relaxed posture of the muscles thereof.
Holder.

2. The state of being stretched; not laxity.

Still are the subtle strings in tension found,
Like those of lutes to just proportion wound,
Which of the air's vibration is the force. Blackmore.

TE'NSIVE. adj. [tensus, Latin.] Giving a sensation of stiffness or contraction.

From choler is a hot burning pain; a beating pain from the pulse of the artery; a tensive pain from distention of the parts by the fulness of humours. Floyer on Humours.

TE'NSURE. n. s. [tensus, Lat.] The act of stretching, or state of being stretched; the contrary to laxation or laxity.

This motion upon pressure, and the reciprocal thereof, motion upon tensure, we call motion of liberty, which is, when any body being forced to a preternatural extent, restoreth itself to the natural. Bacon.

TENT. † n. s. [tente, Fr. tentorium, Lat. from tendo, to stretch.]

4. [vino tinto, Spanish.] A species of wine deeply red, chiefly from Galicia in Spain.

While the tinker did dine, he had plenty of wine,
Rich canary with sherry and tent superfine.

Old Ballad, Percy's Rel. i. ii. 16.

As in Spain, so in all other wine countries, one cannot pass a day's journey but he will find a differing race of wine: those kinds that our merchants carry over, are those only that grow upon the sea-side, as Malagas, Sherries, Tents, and Alicants: of this last there comes little over right; therefore the vintners make tent, which is a name for all wines in Spain except white, to supply the place of it. Howell, Lett. iii. 54.

To TENT. v. n. [from the noun.] To lodge as in a tent; to tabernacle.

The smiles of knaves
Tent in my cheeks, and schoolboys' tears take up
The glasses of my sight. Shakspeare, Coriol.

2. To be on the TENTER. To be on the stretch; to be in difficulties; to be in suspense.

In all my past adventures,

I ne'er was set so on the tenters;

Or taken tardy with dilemma,

That ev'ry way I turn does hem me. Hudibras.

To TE'NTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To stretch by hooks.

A blown bladder pressed riseth again, and when leather or cloth is tentered, it springeth back. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To TE'NTER. v. n. To admit extension.

Woollen cloth will tenter, linen scarcely. Bacon.

TE'NTERGROUND.* n. s. [tenter and ground.] Ground on which tenters are erected for stretching cloth.

I entered Kendal almost in the dark, and could distinguish only a shadow of the castle on a hill, and tenter-grounds spread far and wide round the town. Gray, Lett. to Dr. Wharton.

TENTH. adj. [teoða, Sax.]. First after the ninth; ordinal of ten.

It may be thought the less strange if others cannot do as much at the tenth or twentieth trial, as we did after much practice. Boyle.

TENTH. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The tenth part.

Of all the horses,

The treasure in the field achiev'd, and city,
We render you the tenth. Shakspeare, Coriol.

By decimation and a tithed death,

If thy revenges hunger for that food

Which nature loaths, take thou the destin'd tenth. Shakspeare.

To purchase but the tenth of all their store,

Would make the mighty Persian monarch poor. Dryden.

Suppose half an ounce of silver now worth a bushel of wheat; but should there be next year a scarcity, five ounces of silver would purchase but one bushel: so that money would be then nine tenths less worth in respect of food. Locke.

2. Tithe.

With cheerful heart

The tenth of thy increase bestow, and own

Heav'n's bounteous goodness, that will sure repay

Thy grateful duty. Philips.

3. Tenths are that yearly portion which all livings ecclesiastical yield to the king. The bishop of Rome pretended right to this revenue by example of the high priest of the Jews, who had tenths from the Levites, till by Henry the Eighth they were annexed to the crown. Cowel.

TE'NTHLY. adv. [from tenth.] In the tenth place.

TENTI'GINOUS. adj. [tentigo, Lat.] Stiff; stretched.

TE'NTORY.* n. s. [tentorium, Lat.] The awning of a tent. Mason.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Consider the divers figurings of the brain; the strings or filaments thereof; their difference in tenuity, or aptness for motion.

Glanville, Scepis.

Aliment circulating through an animal body, is reduced to an almost imperceptible tenuity, before it can serve animal purposes.

Arbuthnot.

At the height of four thousand miles the æther is of that wonderful tenuity, that if a small sphere of common air, of an inch diameter, should be expanded to the thinness of that æther, it would more than take up the orb of Saturn, which is many million times bigger than the earth.

Bentley.

2. Poverty; meanness. Not used.

The tenuity and contempt of clergymen will soon let them see what a poor carcass they are, when parted from the influence of that supremacy.

King Charles.

TE'NUOUS.† adj. [tenuis, Lat. Glanville writes it tenuious.] Thin; small; minute.

Another way of their attraction is by a tenuous emanation, or continued effluvia, which after some distance retracteth unto itself.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Could I but follow where you lead,
Disrob'd of earth and plum'd by air,
Then I my tenuous self might spread

As quick as fancy every-where. J. Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 36.

The most tenuous, pure, and simple matter.

Glanville, Pre-ex. ch. 14.

TE'NURE. n. s. [teneo, Lat. tenure, Fr. tenura, law Latin.] The manner whereby tenements are holden of their lords.

In Scotland are four tenures; the first is pura eleemosina, which is proper to spiritual men, paying nothing for it, but devota animarum suffragia; the second they call feu, which holds of the king, church, barons, or others, paying a certain duty called feudi firma; the third is a holding in blanch by payment of a penny, rose, pair of gilt spurs, or some such thing, if asked; the fourth is by service of word and relief, where the heir being minor is in the custody of his lord, together with his lands, and lands holden in this manner is called feudum de hauberk or haubert, feudum militare or loricatum. Tenure in gross is the tenure in capite; for the crown is called a seignory in gross, because a corporation of and by itself.

Cowel.

The service follows the tenure of lands; and the lands were given away by the kings of England to those lords.

Spenser.

The uncertainty of tenure, by which all worldly things are held, ministers very unpleasant meditation.

Raleigh.

Man must be known, his strength, his state,
And by that tenure he holds all of fate.

These are to be reckoned with the heathen, with whom you know we undertook not to meddle, treating only of the Scripture-election terminated in those to whom the Scripture is revealed.

Hammond.

That God was the maker of this visible world was evident from the very order of causes; the greatest argument by which natural reason evinces a God: it being necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to, and terminate in, some first; which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things, but itself be caused by none.

South.

The wisdom of this world, its designs and efficacy, terminate on this side heaven.

South.

Ere I the rapture of my wish renew,

I tell you then, it terminates in you.

Dryden, Atranga.

Our terrene moon is now eclips'd,

And it portends alone the fall of Antony. Shakespeare.

God set before him a mortal and immortal life, a nature celestial and terrene; but God gave man to himself. Raleigh.

TERRE'NE.* n. s. The surface of the whole earth.

Over many a tract

Of heav'n they march'd, and many a province wide,
Tenfold the length of this terrene.

Milton, P. L.

TE'RRÉOUS. adj. [terreus, Lat.] Earthy; consisting of earth.

There is but little similitude betwixt a terreous humidity and plantal germinations. Glanville, Scepis.

According to the temper of the terreous parts at the bottom, variously begin intumescencies. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TERRE'STRIAL. adj. [terrestris, Lat.]

1. Earthy; not celestial.

Far passing th' height of men terrestrial,
Like an huge giant of the Titan race.

Spenser.

Terrestrial heaven! danc'd round by other heavens

That shine, yet bear their bright officious lamps,

Light above light.

Milton, P. L.

Thou brought'st Briareus with his hundred hands,

So call'd in heaven; but mortal men below

By his terrestrial name Ægeon know.

Dryden.

2. Consisting of earth; terreous. Improper.

I did not confine these observations to land or terrestrial parts of the globe, but extended them to the fluids.

Woodward.

TERRE'STRIALLY.* adv. [from terrestrial.] After an earthly manner.

They fancying it as terrestrially modified, though called a celestial or spiritual body in Scriptures, as that body is which we put into the grave. More on the Sev. Churches, ch. 7.

To TERRE'STRIFY. v. a. [terrestris and facio, Lat.] To reduce to the state of earth.

Though we should affirm, that heaven were but earth celestified, and earth but heaven terrestified; or, that each part above had an influence on its divided affinity below; yet to single out these relations is a work to be effected by revelation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TERRE'STRIOUS. adj. [terrestris, Lat. terrestre, Fr.]

Terreous; earthy; consisting of earth.

This variation proceedeth from terrestrious eminences of earth respecting the needle. Brown.

TE'RRIBLE. adj. [terrible, Fr. from terribilis, Lat.]

1. Dreadful; formidable; causing fear.

T E R

- Was this a face to be expos'd
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick, cross lightning? Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Fit love for gods
Not terrible, though terroure be in love. Milton, P. L.
Thy native Latium was thy darling care,
Prudent in peace, and terrible in war. Prior.
2. Great so as to offend: a colloquial hyperbole.
Being indispos'd by the terrible coldness of the season, he reposed himself till the weather should mend. Clarendon.
I began to be in a terrible fear of him, and to look upon myself as a dead man. Tillotson.
- TE'RRIBLENESS. n. s. [from terrible.] Formidableness; the quality of being terrible; dreadfulness.
Having quite lost the way of nobleness, he strove to climb to the height of terribleness. Sidney.
Their terribleness is owing to the violent contusion and laceration of the parts. Sharp, Surgery.
- TE'RRIBLY. adv. [from terrible.]
1. Dreadfully; formidably; so as to raise fear.
The polish'd steel gleams terribly from far,
And every moment nearer shows the war. Dryden.
2. Violently; very much.
The poor man squall'd terribly. Swift.
- TE'RRIER. n. s. [terrier, Fr. from terra, Lat. earth.]
1. A dog that follows his game under-ground.
The fox is earth'd, but I shall send my two terriers in after him. Dryden, Span. Friar.
2. [Terrier, Fr.] A survey or register of lands.
King James's canons require that the bishops procure a terrier to be taken of such lands. Ayliffe.
3. [From terebro, Lat.] A wimble; auger or borer.
Ainsworth.
- TERR'FICK. adj. [terrificus, Lat.] Dreadful; causing terroure.
The serpent, subtlest beast of all the field,
Of huge extent sometimes, with brazen eyes
And hairy mane terrificok. Milton, P. L.
The British navy through ocean vast Shall wave her double cross, t' extremest climes
Terrifick. Philips.
- To TE'RRIFY. v. a. [terror and facio, Lat.] To fright;
to shock with fear; to make afraid.
Thou scarest me with dreams, and terrifiest me through visions. Job, vii. 14.
In nothing terrified by your adversaries. Phil. i. 28.
Neither doth it beseech this most wealthy state to be terrified from that which is right with any charges of war. Knolles.
Though he was an offender against the laws, yet in regard they had treated him illegally, in scourging him and Silas uncon-demned, against the privilege of Romans, he terrifies them with their illegal proceedings. Kettlewell.
The amazing difficulty of his account will rather terrify than inform him, and keep him from setting heartily about it such a task as he despairs ever to go through with. South.
Meteors for various purposes to form;
The breeze to cheer, to terrify, the storm. Blackmore.
- TERRITO'RIAL. * adj. [from territory.] Belonging to a territory.
The church universal in general causes; each particular and private church for special, and particular, and territorial questions. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625,) p. 8.
- TERRITORY. n. s. [territorium, low Latin; terri-toire, Fr.] Land; country; dominion; district.
Linger not in my territories longer than swiftest expedition will give thee time to leave our royal court. Shakspeare.
They erected a house within their own territory, half way between their fort and the town. Hayward.
He saw wide territory spread
Before him, towns, and rural works between. Milton, P. L.
Ne'er did the Turk invade our territory,
But fame and terror doubl'd still their files. Denham.
Arts and sciences took their rise, and flourished only in those small territories where the people were free. Swift.

T E S

- TE'RROUR. n. s. [terror, Lat. terrens, Fr.]
1. Fear communicated.
The thunder when to roll
With terroure through the dark aerial hall. Milton, P. L.
The pleasures of the land and terroures of the main. Blackmore.
2. Fear received.
It is the cowish terroure of his spirit
That darts not undertake. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
They shot thorough both the walls of the town and the bul-work also, to the great terroure of the defendants. Knolles.
Amaze and terroure seiz'd the rebel host. Milton, P. L.
They with conscious terroures vex me round. Milton, P. L.
O sight
Of terroure, foul and ugly to behold,
Horrid to think, how horrible to feel! Milton, P. L.
3. The cause of fear.
So spake the griesly terroure. Milton, P. L.
Those enormous terroures of the Nile. Prior.
- TERSE. adj. [ters, Fr. tersus, Lat.]
1. Smooth. Not in use.
Many stones precious and vulgar, although terse and smooth, have not this power attractive. Brown, Vulg. Err.
2. Cleanly written; neat; elegant without pompousness.
To raw numbers and unfinish'd verse,
Sweet sound is added now to make it terse. Dryden.
These accomplishments in the pulpit appear by a quaint,
terse, florid style, rounded into periods without propriety or meaning. Swift, Miscell.
Various of numbers, new in ev'ry strain
Diffus'd, yet terse, poetical, though plain. Harte.
- TE'RSELY. * adv. [from terse.] Neatly: used ironically by Ben Jonson.
Fastidius Brisk, a courtier, — speaks good remnants; swears tersely, and with variety!
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.
- TE'RSENESS. * n. s. [from terse.] Smoothness or neatness of style.
Gay wrote with neatness and terseness, but certainly without any elevation. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.
It was usual to write the chapter-acts in Latin; and a certain terseness and elegance of style eminently distinguish those, that were made during his deanship, from any memorials that have been inserted before or since in the register of that cathedral.
Warton, Life of Bathurst, p. 214.
They [Ogden's Sermons] display that perfect propriety and purity of English diction, that chastised terseness of composition, which has scarcely been equalled by any writer. Wakefield, Mem. p. 95.
- TE'RTIAN. n. s. [tertiana, Latin.] Is an ague intermitting but one day, so that there are two fits in three days.
Tertians of a long continuance do most menace this symptom. Harvey on Consumptions.
- To TE'RTIATE. v. a. [tertio, tertius, Lat.] To do any thing the third time.
- TE'SSELLATED. adj. [tessella, Latin.] Variegated by squares.
Van Helmont produced a stone very different from the tes-sellated pyrites. Woodward on Fossils.
- TESSERA'ICK. * adj. [tesseré, Fr. from tessera, Latin.]
Variegated by squares; tessellated.
Some of the tesseraick work of the Romans has lately been dug up. Sir R. Atkyns, Hist. of Glouc. (1712,) p. 778.
- TEST. † n. s. [test, Fr. testa, Italian.]
1. The cupel by which refiners try their metals.
Our ingots, tests, and many things mo.
Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.
2. Trial; examination: as by the cupel.
All thy vexations
Were but my trials of thy love, and thou
Hast strangely stood the test. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp't upon it.

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.
They who thought worst of the Scots, did not think there would be no fruit or discovery from that test. Clarendon.

What use of oaths, of promise, or of test,
Where men regard no God but interest? Waller.

Thy virtue, prince, has stood the test of fortune
Like purest gold, that, tortur'd in the furnace,
Comes out more bright, and brings forth all its weight.

Addison.

3. Means of trial.

Whom should my muse then fly to, but the best
Of kings for grace; of poets for my test. B. Jonson.

To be read herself she need not fear;
Each test, and every light, her muse will bear. Dryden.

Your noble race

We banish not, but they forsake the place:
Our doors are open: True, but ere they come,
You toss your 'censing test, and fume the room. Dryden.

4. That with which any thing is compared in order to prove its genuineness.

Unerring Nature, still divinely bright,
One clear, unchang'd and universal light,
Life, force, and beauty, must to all impart,
At once the source, and end, and test of art. Pope.

5. Discriminative characteristic.

Our penal laws no sons of yours admit,
Our test excludes your tribe from benefit. Dryden.

6. Judgement; distinction.

Who would excel, when few can make a test,
Betwixt indiff'rent writing and the best? Dryden.

TE'STABLE.* adj. [testable, Fr. from test.] Capable of witnessing or bearing witness.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

TESTA'CEOUS. adj. [testaceus, Lat. testacée, Fr.]

1. Consisting of shells; composed of shells.

2. Having continuous, not jointed shells: opposed to crustaceous.

Testaceous, with naturalists, is a term given only to such fish whose strong and thick shells are entire, and of a piece;
because those which are joined, as the lobsters, are crustaceous: but in medicine all preparations of shells, and substances of the like kind, are thus called. Quincy.

Several shells were found upon the shores, of the crustaceous and testaceous kind. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The mineral particles in these shells are plainly to be distinguished from the testaceous ones, or the texture and substance of the shell. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

TE'STAMENT.† n. s. [testament, Fr. testamentum,
Latin.]

1. A will; any writing directing the disposal of the possessions of a man deceased.

He bringeth arguments from the love which always the testator bore him, imagining that these, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it which other men can no where by reading find. Hooker.

All the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament have given to the church,
Would they strip from us. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

He ordained by his last testament, that his Æneids should be burnt. Dryden.

2. The name of each of the volumes of the Holy Scripture.

It is not out of any satiety that I change from the Old Testament to the New: these two, as they are the breasts of the church, so they yield milk equally wholesome, equally pleasant unto able nurselings.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. on the N. Test. Ded.

TESTAME'NTARY. adj. [testamentaire, French; testamentarius, Lat.] Given by will; contained in wills.

How many testamentary charities have been defeated by the negligence or fraud of executors? by the suppression of a will?
the subornation of witnesses, or the corrupt sentence of a judge? Alterbury.

TESTAMENTA'TION.* n. s. [from testament.] The act or power of giving by will.

By this law the right of testamentation is taken away, which the inferiour tenures had always enjoyed.

Burke, Tracts on the Popery Laws.

TE'STATE. adj. [testatus, Lat.] Having made a will.

By the canon law, the bishop had the lawful distribution of the goods of persons dying testate and intestate. Ayliffe.

TESTA'TION.* n. s. [testatio, Latin.] Witness; evidence.

How clear a testation have the inspired prophets of God given of old to this truth. Bp. Hall, Tempt. Repell. D. i. § 6.

TESTA'TOR. n. s. [testator, Lat. testateur, French.]

One who leaves a will.

He bringeth arguments from the love or good will which always the testator bore him. Hooker.

The same is the case of a testator giving a legacy by kindness, or by promise and common right. Bp. Taylor.

TESTA'TRIX. n. s. [Latin.] A woman who leaves a will.

TE'STED. adj. [from test.] Tried by a test.

Not with fond shekels of the tested gold. Shakspeare.

TE'STER.† n. s. [teste, French, a head; this coin probably being distinguished by the head stamped upon it. Dr. Johnson. — The Italians and French had their testone, and teston; the latter of which Cotgrave states to be of the value of eighteen-pence.

Our word was also teston, and testern. "You cannot give him less than a shilling in conscience;

for the book he had it out of cost him a teston at least." B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

"Such another piece as our testerne." Latimer,

Serm. 1584, fol. 94. It was of the value of a shilling in our eighth Henry's time, and sunk first to nine-pence, then to sixpence, as Mr. Douce has observed, in Edward the sixth's.]

1. A sixpence.

Come manage me your caliver: hold, there is a tester for thee. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

A crown goes for sixty-pence, a shilling for twelve-pence, and a tester for sixpence. Locke.

Those who bore bulwarks on their backs,

And guarded nations from attacks,

Now practise every pliant gesture,

Opening their trunk for every tester. Swift, Miscell.

Young man, your days can ne'er be long,

In flower of age you perish for a song;

Plums and directors, Shylock and his wife,

Will club their testers now to take thy life. Pope.

2. The cover of a bed.

Each hole and cupboard they explore,

Each creek and cranny of his chamber,

Run hurry-skurry round the floor,

And o'er the bed and tester clamber. Gray, Long Story.

TE'STERN.* n. s. A sixpence. See TE'STER.

To TE'STERN.* v. a. [from testern.] To present with sixpence. Not in use.

To testify your bounty, I thank you, you have testerned me.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

TE'STICLE. n. s. [testiculus, Lat.] Stone.

That a beaver, to escape the hunter, bites off his testicles or stones, is a tenent very ancient. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The more certain sign from the pains reaching to the groin and testicles. Wiseman, Surgery.

TESTIFICA'TION. n. s. [testificatio, Lat. from testify.]

The act of witnessing.

When together we have all received those heavenly mysteries wherein Christ imparteth himself unto us, and giveth visible

testification of our blessed communion with him, we should, in hatred of all heresies, factions, and schisms, declare openly ourselves united. Hooker.

T E S

In places solemnly dedicated for that purpose, is a more direct service and testification of our homage to God. South.

TE'STIFICATOR. n. s. [from testificor, Lat.] One who witnesses.

TE'STIFIER. † n. s. [from testify.] One who testifies. The strength and validity of every testimony must bear proportion with the authority of the testifier; and the authority of the testifier is founded upon his ability and integrity.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

To TE'STIFY. v. n. [testificor, Lat.] To witness; to prove; to give evidence.

Jesus needed not that any should testify of man; for he knew what was in man. St. John, ii. 25.

One witness shall not testify against any, to cause him to die. Numb. xxxv. 30.

Heaven and earth shall testify for us, that you put us to death wrongfully. 1 Mac. ii. 47.

Th' event was dire,
As this place testifies. Milton, P. L.

She appeals to their closets, to their books of devotion, to testify what care she has taken to establish her children in a life of solid piety and devotion. Law.

To TE'STIFY. v. a. To witness; to give evidence of any point.

We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness. St. John, iii. 11.

TE'STILY. adv. [from testy.] Fretfully; peevishly; morosely.

TESTIMO'NIAL. n. s. [testimonial, Fr. testimonium, Lat.] A writing produced by any one as an evidence for himself.

Hospitable people entertain all the idle vagrant reports, and send them out with passports and testimonials, and will have them pass for legitimate. Gov. of the Tongue.

It is possible to have such testimonials of divine authority as may be sufficient to convince the more reasonable part of mankind, and pray what is wanting in the testimonies of Jesus Christ? Burnet, Theory.

A clerk does not exhibit to the bishop letters missive or testimonial, testifying his good behaviour. Ayliffe.

TESTIMONY. n. s. [testimonium, Lat.]

1. Evidence given; proof by witness.

The proof of every thing must be by the testimony of such as the parties produce. Spenser.

If I bring you sufficient testimony, my ten thousand ducats are mine. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Evidence is said to arise from testimony, when we depend upon the credit and relation of others for the truth or falsehood of any thing. Wilkins.

I could not answer it to the world, if I gave not your lordship my testimony of being the best husband. Dryden.

I must bear this testimony to Otway's memory, that the passions are truly touched in his Venice Preserved. Dryden.

2. Publick evidences.

We maintain the uniform testimony and tradition of the primitive church. White.

By his prescript a sanctuary is fram'd,
An ark, and in the ark his testimony;
The records of his covenant. Milton, P. L.

3. Open attestation; profession.

Thou for the testimony of truth hast born
Universal reproach. Milton, P. L.

To TE'STIMONY. v. a. To witness. A word not used.

Let him be but testimonied in his own bringings forth, and he shall appear a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

TE'STINESS. † n. s. [from testy.] Moroseness; peevishness.

He may be a little angry for my so rough usage; but my mother, having power of his testiness, shall turn all into my commendations. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
Testiness is a disposition or aptness to be angry. Locke.

T E T

TE'STON.* n. s. [teston, Fr.] A sixpence; a tester. See TESTER.

Lo! what it is that makes white rags so deare,
That men must give a teston for a queare. Bp. Hall, Sat. ii. 1.

TESTU'DINATED. adj. [testudo, Latin.] Roofed; arched.

TESTUD'NEOUS. adj. [testudo, Latin.] Resembling the shell of a tortoise.

TESTY. † adj. [testiu, French; testoso, Italian; both rendered headstrong, as well as testy, by Cotgrave and Florio; thus pointing to the head, teste, testa, as the origin of the word.] Fretful; peevish; apt to be angry.

Lead these testy rivals so astray,
As one come not within another's way. Shakspeare.

Must I stand and crouch under your testy humour?
Shakspeare.

King Pyrrhus cur'd his splenetick
And testy courtiers with a kick. Hudibras.

In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a touchy, testy, pleasing fellow:
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Addison.

TE'TCHY. adj. Froward; peevish: a corruption of testy or touchy.

A grievous burthen was thy birth to me,
Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

A silly schoolboy, coming to say my lesson to the world, that peevish and tetchy master. Graunt.

TETE.* n. s. [French.] False hair; a wig worn by ladies.

An old baronet fell in love with a young lady of small fortune for her beautiful brown locks. He married her on a sudden: but was greatly disappointed upon seeing her wig or tete the next morning thrown carelessly upon her toilette, and her ladyship appearing at breakfast in very bright red hair, a colour the old gentleman happened to have a particular aversion to. Graves, Spirit. Quisore, B. 3. ch. 20.

TETE A TETE. n. s. [French.] Cheek by jowl.

Long before the squire and dame
Are tête à tête. Prior.

Deluded mortals, whom the great
Chuse for companions tête à tête;
Who at their dinners, en famille,
Get leave to sit whene'er you will. Swift, Miscell.

TE'THER. n. s. [See TEDDER.] A string by which horses are held from pasturing too wide.

Hamlet is young,
And with a larger tether may he walk
Than may be given you. Shakspeare.

Fame and censure with a tether,
By fate are always link'd together. Swift, Miscell.
Imagination has no limits; but where it is confined, we find the shortness of our tether. Swift.

To TE'THER. † v. a. [from the noun.] To confine with a tether.

TE'TRAD.* n. s. [tetras, tetradis, Lat.] The number four; a collection of four things.

Four here takes place again in the assignment of the masculine and feminine numbers; whence I further conceive, that, under the number of this more complex tetrad, he [Pythagoras] taught his disciples the mystery of the whole creation. More, Conj. Cabb. (1653) p. 155.

TETRA'GONAL. adj. [τετραγωνος, Gr.] Four square.

From the beginning of the disease, reckoning on unto the seventh day, the moon will be in a tetragonal or quadrate aspect, that is, four signs removed from that wherein the disease began; in the fourteenth day it will be an opposite aspect, and at the end of the third septenary tetragonal again. Brown, Vulg. Err.

T E T

TETRA'METER.* n. s. [tetrametrum, Lat.] A verse consisting of four feet.

The first are couplets interchanged of sixteen and fourteen feet; the second of equal tetrameters.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 4.

TETRA'METER.* adj. Having four metrical feet.

Every reader who has an ear for metre will easily perceive, that it is written very exactly in verses of fifteen syllables without rhyme, in imitation of the most common species of the Latin tetrameter iambic.

Tyrwhitt.

TETRAPE'TALOUS. adj. [τέσσαρες and πέταλον, Gr.]

In this the tetrical basses finding him to excel, gave him as a rare gift to Solyman.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

TETRI'CITY.* n. s. [tetricité, old French.] Sourness; perverseness.

Cockeram.

TE'TRICK.* adj. [tetricue, Fr.] Sour; harsh; perverse; morose.

In a thick and cloudy air men are tetrick, sad, and peevish.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 81.

Severe, sad, dry, tetrick, are common epithets to scholars.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 126.

The old tetrick philosophers looked always with indignation upon such a face of things.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 26.

TE'TTER. n. s. [tecep, Saxon.] A scab; a scurf; a ringworm.

A most instant tetter bark'd about

Most lazar like, with vile and loathsome crust,

All my smooth body.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

A scabby tetter on their pelts will stick.

Dryden.

To TE'TTER.* v. a. [from the noun.] To infect with a tetter.

As for my country I have shed my blood,

Not fearing outward force, so shall my lungs

Coin words till their decay, against those measels,

Which we disdain should tetter us.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

T E X

TE'TTISH.* adj. [perhaps a corruption of tetchy. The Scotch use tittish in this sense, which Dr. Jamieson has noticed, with a reference of it to tit, a stroke. This etymon may be doubted.] Capacious; testy; ill-humoured.

This rogue, if he had been sober, sure had beaten me, is the most tettish knave.

Beaum. and Fl. Wit without Money.

Who will be troubled with a tettish girl?

Beaum. and Fl.

TEUTO'NICK.* adj. Spoken by the Teutones, or ancient Germans.

Our knowledge of the northern literature is so scanty, that of words undoubtedly Teutonic the original is not always to be found in any ancient language.

TEUTO'NICK.* n. s. The language of the Teutones: by ellipsis.

The Icelandick is the mother of the modern Swedish and Danish tongues, in like manner as the Anglo-Saxon is the parent of our English. Both these mother-tongues are dialects of the ancient Gothick or Teutonic.

Bp. Percy, Pref. to Runic Poetry.

TEW. n. s. [towe, a hempen rope, Dutch.]

1. Materials for any thing.

Skinner.

2. An iron chain.

Ainsworth.

To TEW.† v. a. [capian, Sax.]

1. To work; to beat so as to soften: of leather we say to taw. Dr. Johnson.—It is a naval expression applied to hemp: to tew hemp.

2. To tease; to tumble over or about; to pull.

Do not anger 'em,

But go in quietly, and slip in softly,

They will so tew you else.

Beaum. and Fl. Pilgrim.

TE'WEL.† n. s. [tuyau or tuyal, Fr.]

In the back of the forge, against the fire-place, is fixed a thick iron plate, and a taper pipe in it above five inches long, called a tewel, or tewel iron, which comes through the back of the forge; into this tewel is placed the bellows.

Moxon.

Soche a smoke—

As—where that men melte lead,

Lo, all on hie from the tewel.

Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 559.

To TE'WTAW. v. a. [formed from tew by reduplication.] To beat; to break.

The method and way of watering, pilling, breaking, and tewtawing of hemp and flax, is a particular business.

Mortimer.

TEXT. n. s. [texte, Fr. textus, Lat.]

1. That on which a comment is written.

We expect your next

Should be no comment but a text,

To tell how modern beasts are text.

Waller.

2. A sentence of Scripture.

In religion

What error but some sober brow

Will bless it, and approve it with a text.

Shakespeare.

Some prime articles of faith are not delivered in a literal or catechetical form of speech, but are collected and concluded by argumentation out of sentences of Scripture, and by comparing of sundry texts with one another.

White.

His mind he should fortify with some few texts, which are home and apposite to his case.

South.

To TEXT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To write as a text.

Indifferent judges might condemn me for

A most malicious slanderer, nay text it

Upon my forehead.

Beaum. and Fl. Th. and Theodoret.

TEXT-HAND.* n. s. A particular kind of large handwriting: so called, because formerly the text was ever written in a large hand, and the comment in a small. As text-hand is both square and round, it means little more than a large hand of each sort. The books of J. Bad. Ascensius, and of the other black-letter printers, give one a perfect notion of the reason of this name. Pegge.

T E X

Once she writ only text-hand, when
She scribbled giants, and no men.

Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 22.

TEXTILE. adj. [textilis, Lat.] Woven; capable of being woven.

The placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse, as in the warp and woof of textiles. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The materials of them were not from any herb, as other textiles, but from a stone called amiantus. Wilkins.

TEXTMAN. n. s. [text and man.] A man ready in quotation of texts.

Men's daily occasions require the doing of a thousand things, which it would puzzle the best textman readily to bethink himself of a sentence in the Bible, clear enough to satisfy a scrupulous conscience of the lawfulness of. Sanderson.

TEXTORIAL.* adj. [textorius, Lat.] Belonging to weaving.

From the cultivation of the textorial arts among the orientals came Darius's wonderful cloth.

Watson, Hist. E. P. iii. lxxviii.

TEXTRINE. adj. [textrina, Latin.] Relating to weaving.

It is a wonderful artifice how newly hatched maggots, not the parent animal, because she emits no web, nor hath any textrine art, can convolve the stubborn leaf, and bind it with the thread it weaves from its body. Derham.

TEXTUAL.* adj. [textuel, Fr.]

1. Contained in the text.

They seek to rout and disarray the wise and well-couched order of St. Paul's own words, using a certain textual riot to chop off the hands of the word presbytery.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Def. § 5.

The Keri is the marginal reading; the Chetib is the textual reading. Waterland, Script. Vind. P. ii. p. 125.

2. Serving for texts.

Here shall your majestie find—speculation interchanged with experience, positive theology with polemical, textual with discursive. Bp. Hall, Works, Dedic.

TEXTUALIST.* n. s. [from textual.] One ready in citing texts.

How nimble textualists and grammarians for the tongue the rabbins are, their comments can witness. But, as in Chaucer, "the greatest clerks are not the wisest men;" so, among them, these that are so great textualists are not best at the text.

TEXTUARY. adj. [from text.]

1. Contained in the text.

He extends the exclusion unto twenty days, which in the textuary sense is fully accomplished in one. Brown.

2. Serving as a text; authoritative.

I see no ground why his reason should be textuary to ours, or that God intended him an universal headship. Glanville.

TEXTUARIST.† } n. s. [textuaire, Fr. from text.] One TEXTUARY. } ready in the text of Scripture; a divine well versed in Scripture.

Common textuaries abolish laws, as the rabble demolish images; in the zeal of their hammers oft violating the sepulchres of good men. Milton, Tetrachordon.

TEXTUIST.* n. s. [from text.] One ready in quotation of texts.

I remember the little that our Saviour could prevail about this doctrine of charity against the crabbed textuists of his time. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. Ded.

T H A

TEXTURE.† n. s. [texture, Fr. Cotgrave; textus, Latin.]

1. The act of weaving.

Skins, although a natural habit unto all before the invention of texture, was something more unto Adam. Brown.

2. A web; a thing woven.

Others, far in the grassy dale,
Their humble texture weave.

Thomson, Spring.

3. Manner of weaving with respect either to form or matter.

Curious celatures, and artificial textures.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 260.

Under state of richest texture spread.

Milton, P. L.

A veil of richest texture wrought she wears.

Pope.

4. Disposition of the parts of bodies; combination of parts.

Spirits—nor in their liquid texture mortal wound

Receive, no more than can the fluid air.

Milton, P. L.

While the particles continue entire, they may compose bodies of the same nature and texture now, with water and earth composed of entire particles in the beginning. Newton.

THACK.* n. s. [ðace, Saxon.] Thatch: a common northern word, and old in our language. Hence also a thackster, a thatcher.

Prompt. Parv.

They would in houses of thacke

Their lives leade.

Chaucer's Dr. ver. 1771.

THAN.† conjunction. [than, Goth. ðanne, Saxon.]

A particle placed in comparison after the comparative adjective or adverb, noting a less degree of the quality compared in the word that follows than: as, Monarchy is better than anarchy. The hawk flies more swiftly than the pigeon.

Were we not better to fall once with virtue,

Than draw a wretched and dishonour'd breath? B. Jonson.

More true delight in that small ground,

Than in possessing all the earth was found.

Daniel.

I never met with a more unhappy conjuncture of affairs than in the business of that unfortunate earl.

King Charles.

I love you for nothing more than for the just esteem you have for all the sons of Adam.

Swift.

THANE.† n. s. [ðegn, Saxon, meaning originally a servant. "The (Anglo-Saxon) nobles were called thanes or servants. It must be remembered, that the German chiefs were raised to that honourable rank by those qualifications, which drew after them a numerous train of followers and dependants. If it was honourable to be followed by a numerous train, so it was honourable in a secondary degree to be a follower of a man of consideration; and this honour was the greater in proportion to the quality of the chief, and to the nearness of the attendance upon his person." Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. B. 2. ch. 7. The Icel. thegn is tantamount to lord. That and the Sax. ðegn have been referred, by Dr. Jamieson, to the verbs thienan, thenan, ðegnian, ðenan, to serve.] An old title of honour, perhaps equivalent to baron.

By Sinel's death I know I'm thane of Glamis;

But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives. Shakspeare.

THANELANDS.* n. s. Such lands as were granted by charters of the Saxon kings to their thanes with all immunities, except the threefold necessity of expedition, repair of castles, and mending of bridges.

Cowel.

THANESHIP.* n. s. [ðegen-þcipe, Sax.] The office and dignity of a thane; the seigniorship of a thane.

The thaneship of Glamis was the ancient inheritance of Macbeth's family.

Stevens, Notes on Shakspeare.

To THANK. v. a. [ðancian, Saxon; dancken, Dutch; thanken, German.]

1. To return acknowledgements for any favour or kindness.

For your stubborn answer
The king shall know it, and, no doubt, thank you. Shakspeare.
We thank God always for you. 2 Thess. i. 3.
He was so true a father of his country,
To thank me for defending ev'n his foes,
Because they were his subjects. Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. It is used often in a contrary or ironical sense.

Ill fare our ancestor impure,
For this we may thank Adam. Milton, P. L.
Weigh the danger with the doubtful bliss,
And thank yourself, if ought should fall amiss. Dryden.
That Portugal hath yet no more than a suspension of arms, they may thank themselves, because they came so late into the treaty; and, that they came so late, they may thank the Whigs, whose false representations they believed. Swift.

THANK. † } n. s. [ðanc, ðanca], Saxon; dancke, THANKS. } Dutch.] Acknowledgement paid for favour or kindness; expression of gratitude.
Thanks is commonly used of verbal acknowledgement;
gratitude, of real repayment. It is seldom used in the singular. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson had overlooked the use of the singular number in the Sax. and in old English; as also in many later established authorities.

The poorest service is repaid with thanks. Shakspeare.
Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke.
— Thanks, good Egeus, what's the news? Shakspeare.
The fool saith, I have no thank for all my good deed; and they that eat my bread speak evil of me. Ecclus. xx. 16.
If ye love them which love you, what thank have ye?
St. Luke, vi. 32.

He took bread, and gave thanks to God in presence of them
all. Acts, xxvii. 35.
Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory. 1 Cor. xv.
Some embrace suits which never mean to deal effectually in them; but they will win a thank, or take a reward. Bacon.
To remit the debt of some few farthings, it were small thank.
Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

The tiller shall root up all that burdens the soil without thank to your bondage. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.
For this to the infinitely Good we owe Immortal thanks. Milton, P. L.

THANKFUL. adj. [ðancful, Saxon.] Full of gratitude; ready to acknowledge good received.

A thankful remembrance of his death. Comm. Prayer.
Be thankful unto him, and bless his name. Pt. c. 4.
In favour, to use men with much difference is good; for it maketh the person preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious. Bacon, Ess.

Live, thou great encourager of arts;
Live ever in our thankful hearts. Dryden.

THANKFULLY. adv. [from thankful.] With lively and grateful sense of good received.

Here is better than the open air; take it thankfully.
Shakspeare.

If you have liv'd, take thankfully the past;
Make, as you can, the sweet remembrance last. Dryden.
Out of gold how to draw as many distinct substances as I can separate from vitriol, I shall very thankfully learn. Boyle.

THANKFULNESS. n. s. [from thankful.] Gratitude; lively sense or ready acknowledgement of good received.

Ho scarcely would give me thanks for what I had done, for fear that thankfulness might have an introduction of reward. Sidney.

Will you give me this maid your daughter?
— As freely, son, as God did give her me.
— Sweet prince, you learn me noble thankfulness Shakspeare.

The celebration of these holy mysteries being ended, retire with all thankfulness of heart for having been admitted to that heavenly feast. Bp. Taylor.

Thankfulness and submission make us happy. L' Etrange.

THANKLESS. adj. [from thank.]

1. Unthankful; ungrateful; making no acknowledgement.

Lest so great good, as he for her had wrought,
Should die unknown, and buried be in thankless thought.
Spenser.

That she may feel
How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is,
To have a thankless child. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
One grateful woman to thy fame supply'd,
What a whole thankless land to his deny'd. Pope.

2. Not deserving, or not likely, to gain thanks.

The contracting and extending the lines and sense of others, if the first authors might speak for themselves, would appear a thankless office. Wotton.

Wage still their wars,
And bring home on thy breast more thankless scars. Crashaw.

THANKLESSNESS. n. s. [from thankless.] Ingratitude;
failure to acknowledge good received.

Not t' have written then, seems little less Than worst of civil vices, thanklessness. Donne.

THANKOFFERING. n. s. [thank and offering.] Offering paid in acknowledgement of mercy.

A thousand thankofferings are due to that Providence which has delivered our nation from these absurd iniquities. Watts.

To THANKSGIVE. * v. a. [thank and give.] To celebrate; to distinguish by solemn rites. Not in use.

To thanksgive or bless a thing in way to a sacred use, he took to be an offering of it unto God. Mede, Diatr. p. 55.

THANKSGIVER. * n. s. A giver of thanks.

We find our never-to-be forgotten example, the devout thanksgiver, David, continually declaring the great price he set upon the divine favours.

Barrow, Sermon on the Duty of Thanksgiving.

THANKSGIVING. n. s. [thanks and give.] Celebration of mercy.

These sacred hymns Christianity hath peculiar to itself; the other being songs too of praise and thanksgiving, wherewith as we serve God so the Jews likewise. Hooker.

Of old there were songs of praise and thanksgiving unto God.
Neh. xii. 46.

We should acknowledge our obligations to God for the many favours we receive, by continual praises and thanksgivings.
Tillotson.

The common practice of all christian churches and states, in appointing and keeping days of publick thanksgiving and humiliation, is argument sufficient to prove, that in the common sense of Christians it is not forbidden in Scripture.

Nelson.

THANKWORTHY. adj. [thank and worthy.] Deserving gratitude; meritorious.

This is thankworthy, if a man endure grief. 1 Pet. ii. 19.

If love be compell'd, and cannot chuse,
How can it grateful or thankworthy prove? Davies.

THARM. n. s. [ðeapm, Saxon; darm, Dutch, the gut.]
Intestines twisted for several uses.

THAT. † pronoun. [that, thata, Gothick; ðæt, Sax.
dat, Dutch.]

1. Not this, but the other,

He wins me by that means I told you. Shakspeare.

Octavia, not only that,

That were excusable, that and thousands more
Of semblable import, but he hath wag'd
New wars against Pompey. Shakspeare.

2. Which; relating to an antecedent thing.

The sinner makes an aberration from the scope or mark that is set before him. Perkins.

You'll rue the time

That clogs me with this answer. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Nothing they but dust can show,
Or bones that hasten to be so. Cowley.

When there is no such evident certainty as to take away all kind of doubting; in such cases, a judgement that is equal and impartial must incline to the greater probabilities. Wilkins.

3. Who; relating to an antecedent person. [In our management of the relatives who, which, that, it may be a good general rule to apply who to persons, which to things, and that to things chiefly. But when the antecedent is the second person, not only that, but which, is used for who by our best writers. And this use, which is enough authorized, may be worth retaining, not merely for the grace of variety, but for the convenience of pronunciation. Bp. Hurd on Addison's Guard. No. 160.]

It is thou, O king, that art become strong. Dan. iv. 22.
Ye that are of the fountain of Israel. Ps. lxxviii. 26. marg.
You are a person that very eminently distinguish yourself. Addison, Guard. No. 160.

Saints that taught and led the way to heav'n. Tickell.

4. It sometimes serves to save the repetition of a word or words foregoing.

I'll know your business, that I will. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
They said, what is that to us? see thou to that.

Ye defraud, and that your brethren. St. Matt. xxvii. 4.
Yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies 1 Cor. vi. 8.

I will not cast them away. Lev. xxvi. 44.
We must direct our prayers to right ends; and that either in respect of the prayer itself, or the things we pray for. Wh. Duty of Man.

They weep, as if they meant
That way at least proud Nabas to prevent. Cowley.

This runick subject will occur upon that of poetry. Temple.

What is inviting in this sort of poetry proceeds not so much from the idea of a country life itself, as from that of its tranquillity. Pope.

5. Opposed to this, as the other to one.

This is not fair; nor profitable that;
Nor t' other question proper for debate. Dryden, Pers.

6. When this and that relate to foregoing words, this is referred like hic or ecce to the latter, and that like ille or cela to the former.

In this scale gold, in t' other fame does lie,
The weight of that mounts this so high. Cowley.

7. Such as.

By religion is meant a living up to those principles, that is, to act conformably to our best reason, and to live as becomes those who believe a God and a future state. Tillotson.

8. That which; what.

Sir, I think the meat wants that I have,
— Basting. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

9. The thing.

The Nazarite hath vowed, besides that that his hand shall get. Numb. vi. 21.

He made that art which was a rage. Cowley.

10. The thing which then was.

Secure proud Nabas slept,
And dreamt, vain man, of that day's barbarous sport. Cowley.

11. By way of eminence.

This is that Jonathan, the joy and grace,
That Jonathan in whom does mixt remain
All that fond mothers wish. Cowley.

Hence love himself, that tyrant of my days. Cowley.

12. In THAT. Because; in consequence of.

Things are preached not in that they are taught, but in that they are published. Hooker.

THAT.† conjunction. [thatei, Goth.]

1. Because.

VOL. V.

It is not that I love you less
Than when before your feet I lay:

But to prevent the sad increase

Of hopeless love, I keep away.

Forgive me that I thus your patience wrong. Waller.

2. Noting a consequence.

That he should dare to do me this disgrace,
Is fool or coward writ upon my face? Dryden.

The custom and familiarity of these tongues do sometimes so far influence the expressions in these epistles, that one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. Locke.

3. Noting indication.

We answered, that we held it so agreeable, as we both forgot dangers past and fears to come, that we thought an hour spent with him was worth years of our former life.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

In the midst of this darkness they saw so much light, as to believe that when they died, they went immediately to the stars. Heylin.

I have shewed before, that a meer possibility to the contrary, can by no means hinder a thing from being highly credible. Wilkins.

4. Noting a final end.

Treat it kindly, that it may Wish at least with us to stay. Cowley.

THATCH.† n. s. [ðace, Saxon, straw, Skinner; from ðac, a roof, in Icelandick, thak, Lye; thaecka, tecto munire: vox antiquissima, omnibusque linguis à Scythicâ matre oriundis communis. Serenius. Formerly thack. See THACK.] Straw laid upon the top of a house to keep out the weather.

Hard by a sty, beneath a roof of thatch,

Dwelt Obloquy, who in her early days

Baskets of fish at Billingsgate did watch,

Cod, whiting, oyster, mackerel, sprat, or plaise. Pope.

A plough-boy, who has never seen any thing but thatched houses, naturally imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a house. Watts.

Then came rosy Health from her cottage of thatch,
Where never physician had lifted the latch. Smart.

To THATCH. v. a. [ðaccian, Sax.] To cover as with straw.

Make false hair, and thatch

Your poor thin roofs with burthens of the dead. Shakspeare.

Moss groweth chiefly upon ridges of houses tiled or thatched. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Then Rome was poor, and there you might behold

The palace thatch'd with straw. Dryden.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris

Might raise a house above two stories:

A lyric ode would slate, a catch

Would tile, an epigram would thatch. Swift.

THATCHER. n. s. [from thatch.] One whose trade is to cover houses with straw.

You merit new employments daily;

Our thatcher, ditcher, gard'ner, baily. Swift.

Ash is universal timber, it serves the soldier, seaman, carpenter, thatcher, and husbandman. Mortimer.

THAUMATU'RGICAL* adj. [See THAUMATURGY.]
Exciting wonder.

Indian pictures made of feathers, China works, frames, thaumaturgical motions, exotick toys. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 275.

THA'UMATURGY* n. s. [Gr. θαύμα, θαύματος, a wonder, and ἔργον, a work.] Act of performing what may excite wonder.

This art, with others of the experimental kind, the philosophers of those times were fond of adapting to the purposes of thaumaturgy. Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 408.

To THAW. v. n. [ðapan, Saxon; degen, Dutch.]

1. To grow liquid after congelation; to melt.

When thy melted maid

His letter at thy pillow hath laid:

If thou begin'st to thaw for this,

May my name step in. Donne.

THE

It on firm land

Thaws not, but gathers heap, and ruin seems
Of ancient pile; all else deep snow and ice. Milton, P. L.
Having let that ice thaw of itself, and frozen the liquor a second time, we could not discern any thing. Boyle.

O Solitude, romantick maid,
Whether by nodding towers you tread,
Or climb the Andes' clifted side,
Or by the Nile's coy source abide,
Or starting from your half year's sleep,
From Hecla view the thawing deep; —
Thee, fond nymph, again I woo,
And again thy steps pursue. Grainger.

2. To remit the cold which had caused frost.

To THAW. v. a. To melt what was congealed.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phœbus' fire scarce thaws the isicles. Shakspeare.

Think not that Cæsar bears such rebel blood,
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth fools. Shakspeare.

My love is thaw'd,
Which, like a waxen image 'gains't a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was. Shakspeare.

She can unlock
The clasp charm, and thaw the numming spell. Milton, Comus.

Burnish'd steel, that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden.
Her icy heart is thaw'd. Granville.

THAW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Liquefaction of any thing congealed.

A man of my kidney, that am as subject to heat as butter;
a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakspeare.

Hardens his stubborn heart, but still as ice
More harden'd after thaw. Milton, P. L.

2. Warmth such as liquifies congelation.

I was the prince's jester, and duller than a great thaw.
Shakspeare, Much Ado.

That cold country where discourse doth freeze in the air all winter, and may be heard in the next summer, or at a great thaw. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

When sharp frosts had long constrain'd the earth,
A kindly thaw unlocks it with cold rain,
First the tender blade peeps. Dryden.

THE.† article. [ðe, Sax. articulus. Præfigitur nominibus per omnes casus utriusque numeri, haud se-cus ac apud nos ipsa the; præsertim verò apud scriptores Normanno-Saxonicos. Lye, edit. Manning.]

1. The article noting a particular thing.

Your son has paid a soldier's debt;
He only liv'd but till he was a man,
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd,
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he died. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

He put him in mind of the long pretence he had to be groom of the bed-chamber; for the which he could not chuse but say, that he had the queen's promise. Clarendon.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.
I'll march the muses Hannibal. Cowley.

The fair example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley mark;
Above the stars let thy bold musick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world. Milton, P. L.

Night shades the groves, and all in silence lie,
All but the mournful Philomel and I. Pope.

2. Before a vowel e is commonly cut off in verse. Dr. Johnson. — It is a barbarous custom, now rarely observed.

Who had th' especial engines been to rear
His fortunes up into the state they were. Daniel.

THE

Th' adorning thee with so much art
Is but a barb'rous skill,

'Tis like the pois'ning of a dart,
Too apt before to kill. Cowley.

3. Sometimes he is cut off.

In this scale gold, in 'other fame does lie. Cowley.

4. It is used by way of consequential reference.

The longer sin hath kept possession of the heart, the harder it will be to drive it out. Wh. Duty of Man.

5. In the following passage the is used according to the French idiom.

As all the considerable governments among the Alps are commonwealths, so it is a constitution the most adapted of any to the poverty of these countries. Addison on Italy.

THE'ATIN.* n. s. [French.] One of an order of priests among the papists, so called from a superiour of their order, who was archbishop of Chieti in Naples, anciently Theate.

The Theatins [were] a sect of priests in credit about pope Clement the seventh's time, and of more antiquity by some few years than the Jesuits. Cotgrave.

THE'ATINE.* n. s. One of an order of nuns conforming to the rules of the Theatins.

THE'ATRAL.† adj. [theatral, Fr. theatralis, Latin.]
Belonging to a theatre.

In theatral actions he personates Herod in his majesty.

Comment. on Chaucer, (1665,) p. 23.

THE'ATRE. n. s. [theatre, Fr. theatrum, Lat.]

1. A place in which shews are exhibited; a playhouse.

This wise and universal theatre,
Presents more woful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play. Shakspeare, As you like it.

When the boats came within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, yet so as they might go about, so as they all stood as in a theatre beholding this light. Bacon.

2. A place rising by steps or gradations like a theatre.

Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view. Milton, P. L.

In the midst of this fair valley stood
A native theatre, which rising slow,
By just degrees o'erlook'd the ground below. Dryden.

No theatres of oaks around him rise,
Whose roots earth's centre touch, whose heads the skies. Harte.

THEA'TRICK. } adj. [theatrum, Lat.] Scenick; suit-

THEA'TRICAL. } ing a theatre; pertaining to a theatre.

Theatrical forms stickle hard for the prize of religion: a distorted countenance is made the mark of an upright heart.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Load some vain church with old theatrick state,
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden gate. Pope.

THEA'TRICALLY. adv. [from theatrical.] In a manner suiting the stage.

Dauntless her look, her gesture proud,
Her voice theatrically loud. Pope.

THEAVE.* n. s. An ewe or sheep of three years old.

North. Bailey says, of one year. Pegge.

THEE, the oblique singular of thou.

Poet and saint, to thee alone were given
The two most sacred names of earth and heaven. Cowley.

To THEE.* v. n. [Goth. theihan; Sax. ðean.] To thrive; to prosper.

Let him never the! Chaucer, Non. Pr. Tale.
Fairst mote he thee! Spenser, F. Q.

THEFT.† n. s. [ðyfte, Sax. from thieve.]

1. The act of stealing.

Theft is an unlawful felonious taking away of another man's goods against the owner's knowledge or will. Cowel.

T H E

His thefts were too open, his filching was like an unskilful singer, he kept not time. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.
 Their nurse Euriphile,
 Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children.

Shakspeare.
 Deceit in trade, a secret theft: extortion, an impudent theft.
Holyday.
 The thefts upon the publick can be looked into and punished.
Davenant.

2. The thing stolen.

If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether ox, ass, or sheep, he shall restore double. Exod. xxii. 4.
 THEIR.† pron. [Æona, of them, Saxon; theirra, Icel. the same.]

1. Of them: the pronoun possessive, from they.

The round world should have shook
 Lions into civil streets, and citizens into their dens.

Shakspeare.
 For the Italians, Dante had begun to file their language in verse before Boccace, who likewise received no little help from his master Petrarch; but the reformation of their prose was wholly owing to Boccace.
Dryden.

2. Theirs is used when any thing comes in construction between the possessive and substantive.

Prayer we always have in our power to bestow, and they never in theirs to refuse. Hooker.

They gave the same names to their own idols which the Egyptians did to theirs. Raleigh.

The penalty to thy transgression due,
 And due to theirs which out of thine will grow. Milton, P. L.
 Nothing but the name of zeal appears,
 'Twixt our best actions and the worst of theirs. Denham.

Vain are our neighbours' hopes, and vain their cares,
 The fault is more their language's than theirs. Roscommon.
 Which established law of theirs seems too strict at first, because it excludes all secret intrigues. Dryden.

And reading wish, like theirs, our fate and fame. Pope.

THEISM.* n. s. [theisme, Fr. from Θεός, Gr.] The acknowledgement of a God, as opposed to atheism; deism, which see.

Having laid down in this manner the general principles of theism, he says nothing of the particular doctrines of Christianity except in one verse. Ld. Monboddo, Anc. Metaph. iv. 387.

THEIST.* n. s. [theiste, French.] A deist, which see.

I purposed to have tendered my service as a priest, — without any stipend or wages, save only a room to have said my office in twice a day for our church, king, and country; as God hath enabled me (and his only be the praise therefore) in prisons, dungeons, fields, chambers, or ships upon sea, or land, among rebels, theists, atheists, philologers, wits, masters of reason, puritans, &c. for these eighteen years daily to do.

Dean Martin, Lett. (1662), p. 45.

The word deist, or theist, in its original signification, implies merely the belief of a God, being opposed to atheist; and so there may be deists of various kinds.

Waterland, Christ. Vindie. p. 62.

THEISTICAL.* } adj. [from theist.] Belonging to THEISTICK. } theists; deistical, which see.

The theistical club have set this up as a principle.

Leslie, Short Method with the Deists.

It must appear at first sight, that nothing could be more contradictory to the first principles of the Christian religion, than those of the atheistical or sceptical sects, which at that time prevailed very much both among the Greeks and the Romans; nor shall we find that the theistical sects were much less at enmity with it, when we consider the doctrines they held upon the nature of God and the soul.

Ld. Lyttelton, Obs. on the Conv. of St. Paul.

From an abhorrence of superstition, he appears to have adopted the most distant extremes of the theistic system.

Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 208.

THEM, the oblique of they.† [thaim, Goth.]

The materials of them were not from any herb. Wilkins.

THEME. n. s. [theme, Fr. from θέμα.]

1. A subject on which one speaks or writes.

T H E

Every object of our idea is called a theme, whether it be a being or not being. Watts.

Two truths are told,
 As happy prologues to the swelling act
 Of the imperial theme. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

When a soldier was the theme, my name
 Was not far off. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

O! could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
 My great example, as it is my theme:
 Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;
 Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full. Denham.

Whatever near Eurota's happy stream,
 With laurels crown'd, had been Apollo's theme. Roscommon.

Though Tyber's streams immortal Rome behold,
 Though foaming Hermus swells with tides of gold,
 From Heav'n itself though seven-fold Nilus flows,
 And harvests on a hundred realms bestows;
 These now no more shall be the muse's themes,
 Lost in my fame, as in the sea their streams. Pope.

2. A short dissertation written by boys on any topic.

Forcing the empty wits of children to compose themes, verses, and orations. Milton on Education.

3. The original word whence others are derived.

Let scholars daily reduce the words to their original or theme, to the first case of nouns, or first tense of verbs. Watts.

THEMSELVES. n. s. [See THEY and SELF.]

1. These very persons: in this sense it is nominative.

Whosoever evil befalleth in that, themselves have made themselves worthy to suffer it. Hooker.

2. The oblique case of they and selves.

They open to themselves at length the way. Milton, P. L.
 Such things as in themselves are equally true and certain, may not yet be capable of the same kind or degree of evidence as to us. Wilkins.

Waken children out of sleep with a low call, and give them kind usage till they come perfectly to themselves. Locke.

THEN. adv. [than, Gothick; ðan, Saxon; dan, Dutch.]

1. At that time.

The then bishop of London, Dr. Laud, attended on his majesty throughout that whole journey. Clarendon.
 Thee, then a boy, within my arms I laid. Dryden.

2. Afterwards; immediately afterwards; soon afterwards.

If an herb be cut off from the roots in winter, and then the earth be trodden down hard, the roots will become very big in summer. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. In that case; in consequence.

If God's immediate speaking and writing argueth precepts, thus spoken or written, to be perpetually moral; then his not writing of precepts argueth them to be temporary. White.

Had not men been fated to be blind,
Then had our lances pierc'd the treach'rous wood. Dryden.

Had fate so pleas'd I had been eldest born,
 And then without a crime the crown had worn. Dryden.

If all this be so, then man has a natural freedom. Locke.

4. Therefore; for this reason.

Whiles then the apostle moves us to unity, and moves us also to an endeavour to it, he bestows upon us as well a discovery, as an exhortation, shewing us not only the end, but also the means. Holyday.

If then his providence
 Out of our evil seek to bring forth good. Milton, P. L.

Now then be all thy weighty cares away,
 Thy jealousies and fears, and, while you may,
 To peace and soft repose give all the day. Dryden.

5. At another time: as now and then, at one time and other.

Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars.

Milton, P. L.

One while the master is not aware of what is done, and then in other cases it may fall out to be his own act. L'Estrange.

6. That time: it has here the effect of a noun.

Till then who knew

The force of those dire arms? Milton, P. L.

THENCE. adv. [contracted, according to Minshew, from there hence.]

1. From that place.

Fast by the oracle of God; I thence Invoke thy aid.

Milton, P. L.

Surat he took, and thence preventing fame,
By quick and painful marches thither came.

Dryden.

2. From that time.

There shall be no more thence an infant of days. Isa. lxxv.

3. For that reason.

Not to sit idle with so great a gift
Useless, and thence ridiculous about him.

Milton, S. A.

4. From thence is a barbarous expression, thence implying the same, yet it wants not good authorities.

From thence; from him, whose daughter
His tears proclaim'd his parting with her; thence
We have cross'd.

Shakespeare.

There plant eyes, all mist from thence
Purge and disperse.

Milton, P. L.

THENCEFORTH. adv. [thence and forth.]

1. From that time.

Thenceforth this land was tributary made T'ambitious Rome.

Spenser.

They shall be placed in Leinster, and have land given them to live upon, in such sort as shall become good subjects, to labour thenceforth for their living.

Spenser on Ireland.

Wrath shall be no more
Thenceforth, but in thy presence joy entire.

Milton, P. L.

2. From thenceforth is a barbarous corruption, though it has crept into books where it ought not to be found.

Avert

His holy eyes; resolving from thenceforth
To leave them to their own polluted ways.

Milton, P. L.

Men grow acquainted with these self-evident truths upon their being proposed; but whosoever does so, finds in himself that he then begins to know a proposition which he knew not before, and which from thenceforth he never questions. Locke.

THENCEFORTHWARD. adv. [thence and forward.] On
from that time.

When he comes to the Lord's table, every communicant professes to repent, and promises to lead a new life thencefor- ward.

Kettlewell.

THENCEFRO'M. \ adv.* [thence and from.] From that place. Not in use, nor proper.

In the space of an hundred years, or thereabout, all the living upon the face of the earth are driven thencefrom by the stroke of death.

Smith on Old Age, p. 113.

THEOCRACY. † n. s. [theocratie, Fr. θεοκρατία, Gr. θεοκρατία.] Government immediately superintended by God.

A quiet calm subordination of saints and angels under that great theocracy.

Hammond, Works, iv. 488.

The characters of the reign of Christ are chiefly justice, peace, and divine presence or conduct, which is called theo- cracy.

Burnet, Theory.

THEOCRA'TICAL. † } adj. [theocratique, Fr. from theo-
THEOCRA'TICK. } cracy.] Relating to a government administered by God.

The government is neither human nor angelical, but peculiarly theocratical.

Burnet, Theory.

The splendour of divinity shines through every part of this theocratic form.

Warburton, Div. Leg. of Moses, B. 5. § 2.

THEODOLITE. † n. s. [theodolite, Fr. from θεωδολίτης, Gr. θεωδολίτης, contracted of θεωδός, or θεωδωμαι, to observe, and δολιχός, long. See Morin, Fr. and Gr. Etym. Dict.]
A mathematical instrument for taking heights and distances.

Nothing more than an accurate land-surveyor with his chain, sight, and theodolite, is requisite for such a plan as this.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

THEOGONY. † n. s. [theogonie, Fr. θεογονία.] The generation of the gods.

Cockeram.

The theogony of the heathens could admit of such different turns and figurative expressions, as suited the fancy and judgment of each philosopher or poet.

Ld. Shaftesbury.

THEOLOGASTER. \ n. s.* [from theologue.] A kind of quack in divinity, as a medicaster in physick; a low writer or student in divinity.

Theologasters are not contented to see the sun and moon, measure their site and biggest distance in a glass, calculate their motions, or visit the moon in a poetical fiction; but will transcend spheres, soar higher yet, and see what God himself doth. The Jewish thalmudists take upon them to determine how God spends his whole time.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 255.

THEOLOGER. † } n. s. [theologien, Fr. theologus,
THEOLOGIAN. } Lat.] A divine; a professor of divinity.

Some theologians defile places erected only for religion by defending oppressions.

Hayward.

Azorius the Jesuit affirms, that it is the constant opinion of the theologers.

More against Atheism, ch. 9.

You say the theologers think to save themselves.

Wallis, Confut. of Hobbes, § 3.

They to their viands fell: nor seemingly

The angel, nor in mist, the common gloss

Of theologians, but with keen dispatch

Of real hunger.

Milton, P. L.

THEOLOGICAL. † } adj. [theologique, Fr. theologia, THEOLOGICK. } Lat.] Relating to the science of divinity.

Although some pens have only symbolized the same from the mystery of its colours, yet are there other affections might admit of theological allusions.

Brown.

They generally are extracts of theological and moral sentences, drawn from ecclesiastical and other authors.

Swift.

Upon what principles does he erect his very new explication of theologic antiquity?

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 4.

The most considerable part for this purpose is the chapter of Laws. Of which, under its theologic consideration, I know of nothing so complete and masterly as the first book of Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 25.

THEOLOGICALLY. † adv. [from theological.] According to the principles of theology.

Such things as exceed the faculty and possibility of nature,
are properly and theologically miracles.

Dr. Westfield, Sermon. (1646,) p. 90.

THEOLOGIST. } n. s. [theologus, Lat.] A divine; one
THEOLOGUE. } studios in the science of divinity.

The cardinals of Rome, which are theologues, friars, and schoolmen, call all temporal business, of wars, embassages, shirry, which is under-sheriffries.

Bacon, Ess.

A theologue more by need than genial bent;

Int'rest in all his actions was discern'd.

Dryden.

It is no more an order, according to popish theologists, than the prima tonsura, they allowing only seven ecclesiastical theo- logists.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

To THEOLOGIZE. \ v. a.* [from theology.] To render theological.

School-divinity was but Aristotle's philosophy theologized.

Glanville, Pre-exist. ch. 4.

THEOLOGY. n. s. [theologie, Fr. θεολογία.] Divinity.

The whole drift of the Scripture of God, what is it but only to teach theology? Theology, what is it but the science of things divine?

Hooker.

She was most dear to the king in regard of her knowledge in languages, in theology, and in philosophy.

Hayward.

The oldest writers of theology were of this mind.

Tillotson.

THEOMACHIST. n. s. One who fights against the gods.

Bailey.

THEOMACHY. † n. s. [θεομαχία, Gr. μαχία.] The fight against the gods by the giants. This is Dr. Johnson's definition from Bailey. It is used, however, for opposition to the divine will.

To have all men happy or unhappy as they were our friends or enemies, and to give form to the world according to our own humours, is the true theomachy. Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. 2.

Who can distrust or oppose this happiness of good men, so long since assured by Him, which is the Eternal God, Blessed for ever? Surely none, without the guilt of theomachy or ingratitude. Life of Gregory, Pref. to his Posth. (1640,) A. 3.

THEORBO. n. s. [tiorda, Italian; tuorbe, Fr.] A large lute for playing a thorough bass, used by the Italians. Bailey.

He wanted nothing but a song,
And a well tun'd theorbo hung
Upon a bough, to ease the pain
His tugg'd ears suffer'd with a strain.

Butler.

THEOREM. † n. s. [theoreme, Fr. θεωρημα.]

1. A position laid down as an acknowledged truth.

Having found this the head theorem of all their discourses, who plead for the change of ecclesiastical government in England, we hold it necessary that the proofs thereof be weighed.

Hooker.

The chief points of morality are no less demonstrable than mathematicks; nor is the subtilty greater in moral theorems than in mathematical. More, Div. Dialog.

Many observations go to the making up of one theorem, which, like oaks fit for durable buildings, must be of many years' growth. Graunt.

Here are three theorems, that from thence we may draw some conclusions. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. A position proposed to be demonstrated. It is used by mathematicians in this sense as well as the other. Malone.

THEOREMA'TICAL. † adj. [from theorem.] Comprised THEOREMA'TICK. † in theorems; consisting in THEORE'MICK. † theorems.

Theoremick truth, or that which lies in the conceptions we have of things, is negative or positive. Grew.

THEORE'TICAL. † adj. { [theoretique, French;
THEORE'TICK. † from θεωρητικος;
THEO'RICAL. † adj. { [theorique, Fr. from
THEORICK. † adj. { [θεωρια.]

Speculative; depending on theory or speculation; terminating in theory or speculation; not practical.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences:
So that the act and practick part of life
Must be the mistress to this theorique.

Shakspeare.

The theoretical part of the inquiry being interwoven with the historical conjectures, the philosophy of colours will be promoted by indisputable experiments. Boyle on Colours.

For theoretical learning and sciences there is nothing yet complete. Burnet, Theory.

Admirably well turned, not only for the theoretick, but also the practical behaviour of cunning fellows. Tatler, No. 191.

THEORE'TICALLY. † adv. { [from theoretick.] } Spe-THEO'RICALLY. † { [from theorick.] } culatively; not practically.

Able to discourse theoretically of the dimensions, situation, and motion, of the whole terrestrial globe. Boyle, St. H. Script. p. 117.

THEORICK. n. s. [from the adjective.] Speculation, not practice.

The bookish theorick,
Wherein the tog'd consuls can propose
As masterly as he; meer prattle, without practice,
Is all his soldiership. Shakspeare, Othello.

THEORIST. n. s. [from theory.] A speculatist; one given to speculation.

The greatest theorists have given the preference to such a government as that which obtains in this kingdom. Addison.

THEORY. n. s. [theorie, Fr. θεωρια.] Speculation; not practice; scheme; plan or system yet subsisting only in the mind.

If they had been themselves to execute their own theory in this church, they would have seen, being nearer. Hooker.

In making gold, the means hitherto propounded to effect it are in the practice full of error, and in the theory full of unsound imagination. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Practice alone divides the world into virtuous and vicious; but as to the theory and speculation of virtue and vice, mankind are much the same. South, Sermon.

True Christianity depends on fact:
Religion is not theory, but act.

Harte.

THEOSO'PHICAL. \ adj.* [Gr. Θεος and σοφος.] Di-THEOSO'PHICK. † vinely wise. Coles.

There is a various intertexture of theosophical and philosophical truths. More, Conf. Cabb. (1653,) p. 104.

Such noble truths and theosophick mysteries are delivered in it. Ward, Life of Henry More, (1710,) p. 128.

THERAPE'UTICAL. † adj. [therapeutique, Fr. θεραπευτικη, THERAPE'UTICK. † περιττικος, Greek.] Curative; teaching or endeavouring the cure of diseases.

This remedy, in my opinion, should rather be prophylactick, for prevention of the disease, than therapeutick, for the cure of it. Ferrand on Love Melanch. (1640,) p. 336.

Therapeutick or curative physick restoreth the patient into sanity, and taketh away diseases actually affecting. Brown.

Medicine is justly distributed into prophylactick; or the art of preserving health; and therapeutick, or the art of restoring it. Watts.

THERE. adv. [thar, Gothick; ðær, Saxon; daer, Dutch; der, Danish.]

1. In that place.

If they come to sojourn at my house,
I'll not be there. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Exil'd by thee from earth to deepest hell,
In brazen bonds shall barbarous discord dwell;
Gigantic pride, pale terror, gloomy care,
And mad ambition shall attend her there. Pope.

2. It is opposed to here.

To see thee fight, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.
Could their relishes be as different there as they are here, yet The manna in heaven will suit every palate. Locke.
Darkness there might well seem twilight here. Milton, P. L.

3. An exclamation directing something at a distance.

Your fury hardens me.
A guard there; seize her. Dryden, Aurengz.

4. It is used at the beginning of a sentence with the appearance of a nominative case, but serves only to throw the nominative behind the verb: as, a man came, or, there came a man. It adds however some emphasis, which, like many other idioms in every language, must be learned by custom, and can hardly be explained. It cannot always be omitted without harshness: as, in old times there was a great king.

For reformation of error there were that thought it a part of Christian charity to instruct them. Hooker.

There are delivered in Holy Scripture many weighty arguments for this doctrine. White.

the equinoctial line, judging that thereunder might be found most pleasure and the greatest fertility. Raleigh.

THEREUPO'N. adv. [there and upon.]

1. Upon that; in consequence of that.

Grace having not in one thing shewed itself, nor for some few days, but in such sort so long continued, our manifold sins striving to the contrary, what can we less thereupon conclude, than that God would at least-wise, by tract of time, teach the world, that the thing which he blesseth cannot but be of him. Hooker.

He hopes to find you forward,
And thereupon he sends you this good news. Shakespeare.

Let that one article rank with the rest;
And thereupon give me your daughter. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Though grants of extraordinary liberties made by a king to his subjects do no more diminish his greatness than when one torch lighteth another, yet many times inconveniencies do arise
thereupon. Davies on Ireland.

THESE, pronoun, the plural of this.† [ðas, Sax. dese, Dutch; theser, Icel. Lye.]

1. Opposed to those, or to some others.

Did we for these barbarians plant and sow
On these, on these our happy fields bestow? Dryden.

2. These relates to the persons or things last mentioned; and those to the first.

More rain falls in June and July than in December and January; but it makes a much greater shew upon the earth in these months than in those, because it lies longer upon it.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

THE'SIS. n. s. [these, Fr. these.] A position; something laid down, affirmatively or negatively.

The truth of what you here lay down,

By some example should be shewn.

An honest, but a simple pair,

May serve to make this thesis clear.

and natural. More, Conf. Cabb. (1653), p. 127.

THEU'RGICAL.* } adj. [theurgique, Fr. from theurgy.]

THEU'RGICK. } Relating to theurgy. See THEURGY.

All his endeavour to purge his soul by these theurgick con-secrations was frustrate. Hallywell, Melampr. p. 51.

The reason of their calling inspiration by the names of fire, flame, flash, and the like, may be easily found in the authors of the theurgical science.

Daubuz on the Rev. edit. P. Lancaster, p. 52.

THE'URGIST.* n. s. [from theurgy.] One who is addicted to theurgy.

More refined necromancers or magicians call themselves
theurgists; — thinking to have to do only with good spirits.

Hallywell, Melampr. p. 50.

THE'URGY.† n. s. [θεουργία, Gr. theurgie, Fr.]

The power of doing supernatural things by lawful means, as by prayer to God. This is Dr. Johnson's definition from Bailey. But the meaning also is a species of magick, in old times, which was employed in the worship of angels for their assistance to effect wonderful things.

Porphyry and some others did distinguish these two sorts, so as to condemn indeed the grosser, which they called magick or goety; but allowed the other, which they termed theurgy, as laudable and honourable, and as an art by which they received angels, and had communication with the gods. Yet St. Austin assures us, they are both damnable.

Hallywell, Melampr. (1682), p. 51.

THEW. n. s. [ðeap, Saxon.]

1. Quality; manners; customs; habit of life; form of behaviour. Obsolete.

Home report these happy news,
For well yee worthy been for worth and gentle thewes.
Spenser, F. Q.

From mother's pap I taken was unfit,
And streight deliver'd to a fairy knight,
To be upbrought in gentle thewes and martial might.
Spenser, F. Q.

2. In Shakspeare it seems to signify brawn, or bulk, from the Saxon ðeop, the thigh, or some such meaning.

Nature crescent does not grow alone
In thews and bulk; but, as this temple waxes,
The inward service of the mind and soul
Grows wide withal. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Will you tell me how to chuse a man? Care I for the limbs, the thewes, the stature, bulk and big semblance of a man? give me the spirit, master Shallow.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

THE WED.† adj. [from thew.] Educated; habituated; accustomed. Perhaps not obsolete, as Dr. Johnson would have it to be. Thewed, in our northern dialect, is docile, towardly. Ray, Lye, and Grose.

But he was wise and wary of her will,
And ever held his hand upon his heart;
Yet would not seem so rude, and thewed ill,
As to despise so courteous seeming part. Spenser.

THEY.† pron. in the oblique case them, the plural of he or she. [thai, Goth. hi, Saxon.]

1. The men; the women; the persons.
They are in a most warlike preparation. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The Spaniards
Must now confess, if they have any goodnèss,
The trial just and noble. Shakspeare.

They eat on beds of silk and gold,
At ivory tables, or wood sold
Dearer than it. B. Jonson, Catiline.

They know
To joy the friend and grapple with the foe. Prior.

2. Those men; those women: opposed to some others.

Only they,
That come to hear a merry play,
Will be deceiv'd. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
'Tis remarkable, that they Talk most who have the least to say. Prior.

3. It is used indefinitely; as the French on dit.
There, as they say, perpetual night is found
In silence brooding on th' unhappy ground. Dryden.

4. [The plural of this, that, or it.] The things.
Why do you keep alone?

Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died
With them they think on. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The flowers she wore along the day,
And every nymph and shepherd said,
That in her hair they look'd more gay,
Than growing in their native bed. Prior.

THI'BLE. n. s. A slice; a scummer; a spatula.
Ainsworth.

THICK.† adj. [ðicce, Saxon; dick, Dutch; dyck, Dan. thickr, Icel.]

1. Not thin.

2. Dense; not rare; gross; crass.

Thick-leaved weeds amongst the grass will need more drying than ordinary grass. Mortimer.

11. Without proper intervals of articulation.

Speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,
Became the accents of the valiant,
To seem like him. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

12. Stupid.

I omit your thick error in putting no difference between a magistrate and a king.

Hayward, Answ. to Doleman, (1603,) ch. 4.

Gross-headed, thick-witted, illiterate, shallow.
Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

13. Dull; not quick: as, thick of hearing: a colloquial expression.

14. Intimate; familiar: a vulgarity.

THICK. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The thickest part, or time when any thing is thickest.

Achimetes having with a mine suddenly blown up a great part of the wall of the Spanish station, in the thick of the dust and smook presently entered his men. Knolles.

2. A thicket; a place full of bushes.
Mists and rotten fogs

Hang in the gloomy thicks, and make unstedfast bogs. Drayton.

3. THICK and thin. Whatever is in the way.

To grass and plants, and thickens into earth. Prior.
  4. To grow close or numerous.
The press of people thickens to the court,
The impatient crowd devouring the report. Dryden.
He saw the crowd thickening, and desired to know how many
there were. Tatler.
  5. To grow quick.
The combat thickens, like the storm that flies
From westward when the showery scuds arise,
Or pattering hail comes pouring on the main,
When Jupiter descends in harden'd rain. Dryden.
- THICKET. n. s. [diccette, Saxon.] A close knot or tuft of trees; of a close wood or copse.
I drew you hither,
Into the chiefest thicket of the park. Shakespeare.
Within a thicket I repos'd; and found
Let fall from Heav'n a sleep interminate. Chapman.

- Chus, or any of his, could not in haste creep through those desert regions, which the length of one hundred and thirty years after the flood had fortified with thickets, and permitted every bush and briar, reed and tree, to join themselves into one main body and forest. Raleigh.
- How often, from the steep
Of echoing hill, or thicket, have we heard
Celestial voices, to the midnight air,
Sole, or responsive, each to other's note,
Singing their great Creator? Milton, P. L.
My brothers stept to the next thicket side
To bring me berries. Milton, Comus.
- Now Leda's twins

Conceal'd from aiming spears, not pervious to the steed. Dryden.
- I've known young Juba rise before the sun,
To beat the thicket where the tyger slept,
Or seek the lion in his dreadful haunts. Addison, Cato.
- THICKLY.† adv. [from thick; Sax. ðiclice.]
1. Deeply; to a great quantity.
Mending cracked receivers, having thickly overlaid them with diachylon, we could not perceive leaks. Boyle.
  2. Closely; in quick succession.
- THICKNESS. n. s. [from thick.]
1. The state of being thick; density.
  2. Quantity of matter interposed; space taken up by matter interposed.
In the darkened room, against the hole at which the light entered, I could easily see through the whole thickness of my hand the motions of a body placed beyond it. Boyle.
  3. Quantity laid on quantity to some considerable depth.
Poll a tree, and cover it some thickness with clay on the top, and see what it will put forth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
  4. Consistence; grossness; not rareness; spissitude.
Nitre mingled with water to the thickness of honey, and anoined on the bud after the vine is cut, it will sprout forth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Diseases imagined to come from the thickness of blood, come often from the contrary cause. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
  5. Imperviousness; closeness.
The banks of the river and the thickness of the shades drew into them all the birds of the country. Addison.
  6. Want of sharpness; want of quickness.
A person found in himself, being at some times subject to a thickness of hearing, the like effect. Holder.
What you write is printed in large letters; otherwise between the weakness of my eyes and thickness of hearing, I should lose the greatest pleasure. Swift.
- THICKSKULL.* n. s. [thick and skull.] A dolt; a blockhead. Johnson, in V. Dolt.
- THICKSKULLED. adj. Dull; stupid.
They're pleas'd to hear their thickskull'd judges cry,
Well mov'd! oh finely said! Dryden.
This downright fighting fool, this thickskull'd hero,
This blunt unthinking instrument of death,
With plain dull virtue has outgone my wit. Dryden.
- THICKSET. adj. [thick and set.] Close planted.
His eye-balls glare with fire, suffus'd with blood,
His neck shoots up a thickset thorny wood;
His bristled back a trench impal'd appears,
And stands erected, like a field of spears. Dryden.
The world is so thickset with the numerous productions of the creatures, that besides the apparent beauty of things viewed by all, there are those secret graces in every part of nature, which some few alone have the skill to discern. Grew.
- THICKSKIN. n. s. [thick and skin.] A coarse gross man; a numskull.
The shallowest thickskin of that barren sort,
Who Pyramus presented in their sport,
Forsook his scene and enter'd in a brake. Shakespeare.

THIEF.† n. s. [thiubs, Gothick; ðief, ðeop, Sax. dief, Dutch. It was anciently written thieof, and so appeareth to have been of two syllables; thie was wont to be taken for thrift, so that thie of is he that takes of or from a man his thie, that is, his thrift or means whereby he thrives. Dr. Johnson. — Wachter and Serenius derive it from the Goth. thiwe, or thive, a servant; and illustrate this derivation by the analogy of the Latin fur, which meant a servant before it meant a thief. The Germ. dieb is both a male or female servant, and a thief. The reason, Wachter says, of transferring the sense, was because, in ancient times, servants were generally thieves; “quod plerique servi antiquitus essent fures domestici.” Lacombe thus also explains the old French word thieu, or thiev; “tives, domestiques, servantes: ce mot en Anglois signifie voleur.”]

1. One who takes what belongs to another: the thief steals by secrecy, and the robber by violence; but these senses are confounded.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night.

Shakespeare.

This he said because he was a thief, and had the bag.

St. John, xii. 6.

Can you think I owe a thief my life,
Because he took it not by lawless force?
Am I obliged by that to assist his rapines,
And to maintain his murders?

Dryden.

2. An excrescence in the snuff of a candle.

Where you see a thief in the candle, call presently for an extinguisher.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 46.

Their burning lamps the storm ensuing show,
Th' oil sparkles, thieves about the snuff do grow.

May.

THIEF-CATCHER. } n. s. [thief and catch, lead, and
THIEF-LEADER. } take.] One whose business is THIEF-TAKER. } to detect thieves, and bring them to justice.

A wolf passed by as the thief-leaders were dragging a fox to execution.

L'Estrange.

My evenings all I would with sharpers spend,
And make the thief-catcher my bosom friend.

Bramston.

To THIEVE.† v. n. [from thief; Sax. ðeofian.] To steal; to practise theft.

TH'EVERY. n. s. [from thieve.]

1. The practice of stealing; theft.

Ne how to scape great punishment and shame,
For their false treason and vile thievery.

Spenser.

Do villainy, do, since you profess to do't,
Like workmen; I'll example you with thievery.

Shakespeare.

He makes it a help unto thievery; for thieves having a design upon a house, make a fire at the four corners thereof, and cast thereon the fragments of loadstone, which raiseth fume.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Amongst the Spartans, thievery was a practice morally good and honest.

South.

2. That which is stolen.

Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,
Crams his rich thiev'ry up he knows not how.

Shakespeare.

TH'EVISH.† adj. [from thief.]

1. Given to stealing; practising theft.

What, would'st thou have me go and beg my food?

Or with a base and boisterous sword enforce

▲ thievish living on the common road.

Shakespeare.

O thievish night,

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller.

Milton, Comus.

The thievish god suspected him, and took
The hind aside, and thus in whispers spoke;
Discover not the theft.

Addison.

2. Secret; sly; acting by stealth.

Four-and-twenty times the pilot's glass

Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass.

Shakespeare.

3. Relating to what is stolen.

By astrology he resolved thievish questions with great success; that was his utmost sole practice.

Lilly, Life, &c. p. 77.

TH'EVISHLY. adv. [from thievish.] Like a thief.

They lay not to live by their worke,

But thievishly loiter and lurke.

Tusser.

TH'EVISHNESS. n. s. [from thievish.] Disposition to steal; habit of stealing.

THIGH. n. s. [ðeoh, Saxon; thio, Icelandick; die, Dutch.]

The thigh includes all between the buttocks and the knee. The thigh-bone is the longest of all the bones in the body: its fibres are close and hard: it has a cavity in its middle: it is a little convex and round on its foreside, but a little hollow, with a long and small ridge on its backside.

Quincy.

He touched the hollow of his thigh, and it was out of joint.

Gen. xxxii. 25.

The flesh dissolved, and left the thigh-bone bare.

Wicman.

THILK.† pronoun. [ðilc, ðylc, ðyllic, i. e. ðy lic, the like. Lye.] That same. Obsolete.

I love thilk lass: alas, why do I love!

She deigns not my good will, but doth reprove,

And of my rural musick holdeth scorn.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

THILL. n. s. [ðille, Saxon, a piece of timber cut.]

The shafts of a waggon; the arms of wood between which the last horse is placed.

More easily a waggon may be drawn in rough ways if the fore wheels were as high as the hinder wheels, and if the thills were fixed under the axis.

Mortimer.

THILL-HORSE. } n. s. [thill and horse.] The last horse;
TH'ILLER. } the horse that goes between the shafts.

Whose bridle and saddle, whitlether and nall,

With collars and harneiss for thiller and all.

Tusser.

What a beard hast thou got? thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dobbin my thill-horse has on his tail.

Shakespeare.

TH'IMBLE. n. s. [This is supposed by Minsheu to be corrupted from thumb bell.] A metal cover by which women secure their fingers from the needle when they sew.

Your ladies and pale-visag'd maids,

Like Amazons, come tripping after drums;

Their thimbles into armed gantlets change,

Their needles to lances.

Shakespeare, K. John.

Examine Venus and the moon,

Who stole a thimble or a spoon.

Hudibras.

Veins that run perpendicular to the horizon, have valves sticking to their sides like so many thimbles; which, when the blood presses back, stop its passage, but are compressed by the forward motion of the blood.

Cheyne.

THIME. n. s. [thymus, Lat. thym, Fr.] A fragrant herb from which the bees are supposed to draw honey. This should be written thyme.

Fair marigolds, and bees' alluring thyme.

Spenser.

THIN.† adj. [ðinn, Saxon; thunnr, Icelandick; dunn, Dutch.]

1. Not thick.

Beat gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires.

Erod. xxxix. 3.

2. Rare; not dense.

The hope of the ungodly is like thin froth, that is blown away with the wind. Wisd. v. 14.

In the day when the air is more thin, the sound pierceth better; but when the air is more thick, as in the night, the sound spendeth and spreadeth abroad less. Bacon.

Understand the same
Of fish within their watery residence;
Not hither summon'd, since they cannot change
Their element, to draw the thinner air. Milton, P. L.

The waters of Boristhenes are so thin and light, that they swim upon the top of the stream of the river Hypanis. More.

To warm new milk pour any alkali, the liquor will remain at rest, though it appears somewhat thinner. Arbuthnot.

3. Not close; separate by large spaces.

He pleas'd the thin and bashful audience
Of our well-meaning, frugal ancestors. Roscommon.

Thou art weak, and full of art is he;
Else how could he that host seduce to sin,
Whose fall has left the heavenly nation thin? Dryden.

Northward, beyond the mountains we will go,
Where rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow,
Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields,
The sand no gold, the mine no silver yields. Dryden.

Thin on the towers they stand; and ev'n those few,
A feeble, fainting, and dejected crew. Dryden.

Already Caesar
Has ravag'd more than half the globe; and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Addison.

Sick with the love of fame, what throngs pour in,
Unpeople court, and leave the senate thin! Young.

4. Not closely compacted or accumulated.

Seven thin ears blasted with the east wind sprung up.

5. Exile; small.

I hear the groans of ghosts;
Thin, hollow sounds, and lamentable screams. Dryden.

6. Not coarse; not gross in substance: as, a thin veil.

7. Not abounding.

Ferrara is very large, but extremely thin of people. Addison.

8. Not fat; not bulky; lean; slim; slender.

A slim thin-gutt'd fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a hen-roost, and when he had stuffed his guts well, the hole was too little to get out again. L'Estrange.

9. Slight; unsubstantial: we apply it, in colloquial language, to a person of weak mind.

Ye men that ben erthly bestes dremen alway your beginning, although it be with a thin imaginacion.

Chaucer, Boeth. B. 3. pr. 3.
Ibid. B. 3. pr. 12.

THIN. adv. Not thickly.

Spain is thin-sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil and the natives being exhausted in such vast territories as they possess. Bacon.

Remove the swelling epithets, thick laid
As varnish on a harlot's cheek; the rest
Thin-sown with aught of profit or delight. Milton, P. R.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise,
That last infirmity of noble mind,
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with th' abhorred sheers,
And slits the thin-spun life. Milton, Lycidas.

Thin-leaved arbutue hazle-graffs receives,
And planes huge apples bear that bore but leaves. Dryden.
A country gentlewoman, if it be like to rain, goes not abroad thin-clad. Locke.

To THIN. † v. a. [from the adjective; Sax. þinnian.]

1. To make thin or rare; to make less thick.

Pr. Parv.
The serum of the blood is neither acid nor alkaline: oil of vitriol thickens, and oil of tartar thins it a little. Arbuthnot.

2. To make less close or numerous.

The bill against root and branch never passed till both houses were sufficiently thinned and overawed. King Charles.

To unload the branches, or the leaves to thin,
That suck the vital moisture of the vine. Dryden.

'Tis Caesar's sword has made Rome's senate little,
And thinn'd its ranks. Addison, Cato.

3. To attenuate.

The vapours by the solar heat
Thinn'd and exhal'd rise to their airy seat. Blackmore.

THINE. pronoun. [thein, Gothick; ðin, Saxon; dijn, Dutch.] Belonging or relating to thee; the pronoun possessive of thou. It is used for thy when the substantive is divided from it: as, this is thy house; thine is this house; this house is thine.

Thou hast her, France; let her be thine, for we Have no such daughter. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

THING. † n. s. [ding, Saxon; ding, Dutch and German; deduced from thun, facere, to make. See Wachter in V. Ding.]

1. Whatever is; not a person. A general word.

Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.

— You have a thing for me?

It is a common thing —

— Ha?

— To have a foolish wife.

The great master he found busy in packing up his things against his departure. Shakspeare, Othello.

The remnant of the meat-offering is a thing most holy. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Lev. ii. 3.
Says the master, you devour the same things that they would have eaten, mice and all. L'Estrange.

When a thing is capable of good proof in any kind, men ought to rest satisfy'd in the best evidence for it which that kind of things will bear, and beyond which better would not be expected, supposing it were true. Wilkins.

I should blush to own so rude a thing,
As 'tis to shun the brother of my king.

Wicked men, who understand any thing of wisdom, may see the imprudence of worldly and irreligious courses. Dryden.

Princes, when they come to know the true state of things, are not unwilling to prevent their own ruin. Tillotson.

2. It is used in contempt.

I have a thing in prose, begun above twenty-eight years ago, and almost finished: it will make a four-shilling volume. Davenant.

3. It is used of persons in contempt, or sometimes with pity.

See, sons, what things you are! how quickly nature

Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!

For this the foolish over-careful fathers

Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

A thing by neither man or woman pris'd,
And scarcely known enough to be despis'd. Dryden.

Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man.

The poor thing sighed, and with a blessing expressed with the utmost vehemence turned from me. Congreve.

I'll be this abject thing no more. Addison.

Love give me back my heart again. Granville.

4. It is used by Shakspeare once in a sense of honour.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man

Sigh'd truer breath: but that I see thee here,

Thou noble thing! more dances my wrapt heart. Shakspeare.

To THINK. v. n. preter. thought. [thankgan, Goth. ðencean, ðincan, Sax. dencken, Dutch.]

1. To have ideas; to compare terms or things; to reason; to cogitate; to perform any mental operation, whether of apprehension, judgement, or illa-tion.

Thinking, in the propriety of the English tongue, signifies that sort of operation of the mind about its ideas, wherein the mind is active; where it, with some degree of voluntary attention, considers any thing. Locke.

What am I? or from whence? for that I am
I know, because I think; but whence I came,

- Or how this frame of mine began to be,
What other being can disclose to me? Dryden.
Those who perceive dully, or retain ideas in their minds ill,
will have little matter to think on. Locke.
It is an opinion that the soul always thinks, and that it has the actual perception of ideas in itself constantly, and that actual thinking is as inseparable from the soul, as actual extension is from the body. Locke.
These are not matters to be slightly and superficially thought upon. Tillotson, Serm.
His experience of a good prince must give great satisfaction to every thinking man. Addison, Freeholder.
2. To judge; to conclude; to determine.
Let them marry to whom they think best; only to their father's tribe shall they marry. Numb. xxxvi. 6.
I fear we shall not find
This long desired king such as was thought. Daniel.
Can it be thought that I have kept the gospel terms of salvation, without ever so much as intending, in any serious and deliberate manner, either to know them or keep them? Law.
3. To intend.
Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give,
As one near death to those that wish him life. Shakespeare.
4. To imagine; to fancy.
Something since his coming forth is thought of, which Imports the kingdom so much fear and danger,
That his return was most requir'd. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to dispatch
His nighted life. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
We may not be startled at the breaking of the exterior earth;
for the face of nature hath provoked men to think of and observe such a thing. Burnet, Theory.
Those who love to live in gardens, have never thought of contriving a winter-garden. Spectator.
5. To muse; to meditate.
You pine, you languish, love to be alone,
Think much, speak little, and in speaking sigh. Dryden.
6. To recollect; to observe.
We are come to have the warrant.
— Well thought upon; I have it here about me. Shakespeare.
Think upon me, my God, for good, according to all that I have done. Neh. v. 19.
7. To judge; to be of opinion.
If your general acquaintance be among ladies, provided they have no ill reputation, you think you are safe. Swift.
8. To consider; to doubt; to deliberate.
Any one may think with himself, how then can any thing live in Mercury and Saturn. Bentley, Serm.
9. To THINK on. To contrive; to light upon by meditation.
Still the work was not complete,
When Venus thought on a deceit. Swift, Miscell.
10. To THINK of. To estimate.
The opinions of others whom we know and think well of are no ground of assent. Locke.
- To THINK. v. a.
1. To imagine; to image in the mind; to conceive.
Charity thinketh no evil. 1 Cor. xiii. 5.
Think nought a trifle, though it small appear. Young.
2. To believe; to esteem.
Nor think superfluous others' aid. Milton.
3. To THINK much. To grudge.
He thought not much to clothe his enemies. Milton, P. L.
If we consider our infinite obligations to God, we have no reason to think much to sacrifice to him our dearest interests in this world. Tillotson.
4. To THINK scorn. To disdain.
He thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone. Esth. iii.
5. { Me THINKETH. It seems to me. } These are { Me THOUGHT. It appeared to me. } anomalous phrases of long continuance and great authority, but not easily reconciled to Grammar. In me
thinketh, the verb being of the third person, seems to be referred not to the thing, and is therefore either active, as signifying to cause to think; or has the sense of seems, me thinks it seems to me.

Me thought I saw the grave where Laura lay. Sidney.

Me thinketh the running of the foremost is like that of Ahimaaz. 2 Sam. xviii. 27.

TH'NKER. n. s. [from think.] One who thinks in a certain manner.

No body is made any thing by hearing of rules, or laying them up in his memory; practice must settle the habit: you may as well hope to make a good musician by a lecture on the art of musick, as a coherent thinker, or strict reasoner, by a set of rules. Locke.

If a man had an ill-favoured nose, deep thinkers would im-pute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

TH'NKING. n. s. [from think.] Imagination; cogitation; judgement.

He put it by once; but, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

If we did think

His contemplations were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual objects, he should still Dwell in his musings; but I am afraid
His thinkings are below the moon, nor worth
His serious considering. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

I heard a bird so sing,

Whose musick, to my thinking, pleas'd the king. Shakespeare.
I was a man, to my thinking, very likely to get a rich widow.
Addison.

TH'NLY.† adv. [from thin.]

1. Not thickly.

The wide domain

Now green with grass, now gilt with grain,
In russet robes of clover deep,
Or thinly veil'd, and white with sheep. Shenstone.

2. Not closely; not numerously.

It is commonly opinioned, that the earth was thinly inhabited before the flood. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Our walls are thinly mann'd; our best men slain:
The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching. Dryden.

TH'NNESS.† n. s. [ðinneſſe, Saxon.]

1. The contrary to thickness; exility; tenuity.

Tickling is most in the soles, arm-holes and sides, because of the thinness of the skin. Bacon.

No breach, but an expansion,
Like gold to airy thinness beat. Donne.

Transparent substances, as glass, water, air, &c. when made very thin by being blown into bubbles, or otherwise formed into plates, do exhibit various colours, according to their various thinness, although at a greater thickness they appear very clear and colourless. Newton, Opt.

Such depend upon a strong projectile motion of the blood, and too great thinness and delicacy of the vessels. Arbuthnot.

2. Paucity; scarcity.

The buzzard

Invites the feather'd Nimrods of his race
To hide the thinness of their flock from sight,
And all together make a seeming goodly flight. Dryden.
In country villages pope Leo the seventh indulged a practice, through the thinness of the inhabitants, which opened a way for pluralities. Ayliffe, Parergon.

3. Rareness; not spissitude.

Those pleasures that spring from honour the mind can nauseate, and quickly feel the thinness of a popular breath. South.

THIRD. adj. [ðriðða, Saxon.] The first after the second; the ordinal of three.

This is the third time: I hope good luck lies in odd numbers.

Such clamours are like the feigned quarrels of combined cheats, to delude some third person. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

THIRD. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The third part.

To thee and thine hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shakespeare.
Men of their broken debtors take a third,
A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrive again. Shakespeare.

The protestant subjects of the abbey make up a third of its people. Addison.

No sentence can stand that is not confirmed by two thirds of the council. Addison.

2. The sixtieth part of a second.

Divide the natural day into twenty-four equal parts, an hour into sixty minutes, a minute into sixty seconds, a second into sixty thirds. Holder on Time.

THIRDBOROUGH. † n. s. [third and borough.] An under-constable.

All the wise of the hundred;
Old Rasi' Clench of Hamstead, petty constable;
In-and-In Medley, cooper of Islington,
And headborough, with loud To-Pan the tinker
Or metal-man of Belsie, the thirdborough.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

THIRDLY. adv. [from third.] In the third place.

First, metals are more durable than plants; secondly, they are more solid; thirdly, they are wholly subterranean. Bacon.

To THIRL. † v. a. [ðiplian, Saxon.] To pierce; to perforate. It is now pronounced and written thrill.

Dr. Johnson. — Not universally: thirl is still a northern word, in this sense.

THIRST. n. s. [ðyr̥t, Saxon; dorst, Dutch. See To THIRST.]

1. The pain suffered for want of drink; want of drink.

But fearless they pursue, nor can the flood
Quench their dire thirst; alas! they thirst for blood. Denham.

Thus accur'd,
In midst of water I complain of thirst. Dryden.

Thirst and hunger denote the state of spittle and liquor of the stomach. Thirst is the sign of an acrimony commonly alkaliescent or muriatic. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

For forty years

I've liv'd an anchorite in pray'rs and tears:
Yon spring, which bubbles from the mountain's side,
Has all the luxury of thirst supply'd. Harte.

2. Eagerness; vehement desire: with of, for, or after.

Not hope of praise, nor thirst of worldly good,
Enticed us to follow this emprise. Fairfax.
Thou hast allay'd the thirst I had of knowledge. Milton, P. L.

Say, is't thy bounty, or thy thirst of praise? Granville.
This is an active and ardent thirst after happiness, or after a full, beatifying object. Cheyne.

3. Draught.

The rapid current, — through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst up drawn,
Rose a fresh fountain. Milton, P. L.

To THIRST. † v. n. [ðyr̥tan, Saxon; dersten, Dutch; thaurjan, Goth. from thaurus, aridus, dry. Sere-nius.]

1. To feel want of drink; to be thirsty or athirst: with for.

They shall not hunger nor thirst. Isa. xlix. 10.
The people thirsted there for water. Exod. xvii. 3.

Make all our trumpets speak, give them all breath,
Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death. Shakspeare.

Sure there are poets which did never dream

Upon Parnassus, nor did taste the stream

Of Helicon; we therefore may suppose

Those made not poets, but the poets those. Denham.

The fibres of this muscle act as those of others. Cheyne.

2. Those refers to the former, these to the latter noun.

Neither their sighs nor tears are true,

Those idly blow, these idly fall,

Nothing like to ours at all,

But sighs and tears have sexes too. Cowley.

THOU. pron. [ðu, Saxon; du, Dutch; in the oblique cases singular thee, ðe, Saxon; in the plural ye, ȝe, Saxon; in the oblique cases plural you, eop, Saxon. You is now commonly used for the nominative plural.

1. The second pronoun personal.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,

The handle tow'rd my hand? Come let me clutch thee.

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible

To feeling as to sight? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I am as like to call thee so again,

To spit on thee again, to spurn thee too,

If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not

As to thy friend. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Thou, if there be a thou in this base town,

Who dares with angry Eupolis to frown;

Who at enormous villainy turns pale,

And steers against it with a full-blown sail. Dryden.

2. It is used only in very familiar or very solemn language. When we speak to equals or superiors, we say you; but in solemn language, and in addresses of worship, we say thou.

[Familiar.]

[Solemn.]

For though in dreadful whirls we hung

High on the broken wave,

I know thou wert not slow to hear,

Not impotent to save. Addison.

 much money would have been immediately advanced. Addison.

THOUGHT.† n. s. [from the preterite of to think;
 Sax. ðeahht.]

1. The operation of the mind; the act of thinking.
 And cards are dealt, and chessboards brought,
 To ease the pain of coward thought. Prior.

2. Idea; image formed in the mind.
 For our instruction to impart
 Things above earthly thought. Milton, P. L.

3. Sentiment; fancy; imagery; conceit.
Thought, if translated truly, cannot be lost in another language; but the words that convey it to our apprehension, which are the image and ornament of that thought, may be so ill chosen as to make it appear unhandsome. Dryden.

One may often find as much thought on the reverse of a medal as in a canto of Spenser. Addison on Medals.

Thoughts come crowding in so fast upon me, that my only difficulty is to chuse or to reject. Dryden.

The thoughts of a soul that perish in thinking. Locke.

One only couplet fraught

With some unmeaning thing they call a thought. Pope.

4. Reflection; particular consideration.

 Using those thoughts which should indeed have died
 With them they think on. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

5. Conception; preconceived notion.
 Things to their thought
 So unimaginable as hate in heaven, Milton, P. L.

6. Opinion; judgement.
 He that is ready to slip, is as a lamp despised in the thought of him that is at ease. Job, xii. 5.

They communicated their thoughts on this subject to each other; and therefore their reasons are little different. Dryden.

Thus Bethel spoke, who always speaks his thought,
 And always thinks the very thing he ought. Pope.

7. Meditation; serious consideration.
 Pride, of all others the most dangerous fault,
 Proceeds from want of sense or want of thought. Roscommon.

8. Design; purpose.
 The thoughts I think towards you are thoughts of peace, and not evil. Jer. xxix. 11.

Nor was godhead from her thought. Milton, P. L.

9. Silent contemplation.
 Who is so gross
 That cannot see this palpable device?
 Yet who so bold, but says, he sees it not?
 Bad is the world; and all will come to nought,
 When such ill dealings must be seen in thought. Shakespeare.

10. Solicitude; care; concern.
 Let us return, lest he leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us. 1 Sam. ix. 5.

Hawis was put in trouble, and died with thought and anguish before his business came to an end. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Adam took no thought, eating his fill. Milton, P. L.

11. Expectation.
 The main descry
 Stands on the hourly thought. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

12. A small degree; a small quantity. It seems a loose term, but is used by good writers.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrians would allow. Sidney.

T H O

If our own be but equal, the law of common indulgence alloweth us to think them at the least half a thought the better, because they are our own. Hooker.

A needle pierced through a globe of cork, cut away by degrees, will swim under water, yet not sink unto the bottom:
 if the cork be a thought too light to sink under the furnace,
 the water may be attenuated with spirits of wine. Brown.

My giddiness seized me, and though I now totter, yet I think I am a thought better. Swift.

THOUGHTFUL. adj. [thought and full.]

1. Contemplative; full of reflection; full of meditation.

On these he mus'd within his thoughtful mind,
 And then resolv'd what Faunus had divin'd. Dryden.

2. Attentive; careful.

Thoughtful of thy gain, I all the live-long day
 Consume in meditation deep. Philips.

3. Promoting meditation; favourable to musing.

War, horrid war, your thoughtful walks invades,
 And steel now glitters in the muses' shades. Pope.

4. Anxious; solicitous.

In awful pomp, and melancholy state,
 See settled reason on the judgment-seat;
 Around her crowd distrust, and doubt, and fear,
 And thoughtful foresight, and tormenting care. Prior.

THOUGHTFULLY. adv. [from thoughtful.] With thought or consideration; with solicitude.

THOUGHTFULNESS.† n. s. [from thoughtful.]

1. Deep meditation.

Suitable to the gravity of a Spaniard, or the silence and thoughtfulness of an Italian. Swift, Exam. No. 32.

While the nervous fibres preserve their due tension and firmness, and the spirits are transmitted to them from the brain, endowed with due strength, swiftness, and vivacity, and suffered to attend their duty, without the avocations of thoughtfulness, and intense contemplation, the concoction of the meats is well performed. Blackmore.

2. Anxiety; solicitude.

THOUGHTLESS. adj. [from thought.]

1. Airy; gay; dissipated.

2. Negligent; careless.

It is something peculiarly shocking to see gray hairs without remorse for the past, and thoughtless of the future. Rogers.

3. Stupid; dull.

His goodly fabrick fills the eye,
 And seems design'd for thoughtless majesty:
Thoughtless as monarch oaks that shade the plain,
 And spread in solemn state supinely reign. Dryden.

THOUGHTLESSLY. adv. [from thought.] Without thought; carelessly; stupidly.

In restless hurries thoughtlessly they live,
 At substance oft unmov'd, for shadows grieve. Garth.

THOUGHTLESSNESS.† n. s. [from thoughtless.] Want of thought; absence of thought.

What is called absence, is a thoughtlessness and want of attention about what is doing. Ld. Chesterfield.

THOUGHTSICK. adj. [thought and sick.] Uneasy with reflection.

Heaven's face doth glow
 With tristful visage; and, as 'gainst the doom,
 Is thoughtsick at the act. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

THOUSAND.† adj. or n. s. [ðuɛnɒ, Saxon;
thusund, Icel. from tiu, Icel. ten, and hund, M.
 Goth. hundred. Serenius.]

1. The number of ten hundred.

About three thousand years ago, navigation of the world for remote voyages was greater than at this day. Bacon.

2. Proverbially, a great number.

So fair, and thousand, thousand times more fair
 She seem'd, when she presented was to sight. Spenser.

For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd,
 Not one of all the thousand but was lock'd. Dryden.

Search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree,
Drawn from the root of some old Tuscan tree,
And thou, a thousand off, a fool of long degree. Dryden.

Though he regulates himself by justice, he finds a thousand occasions for generosity and compassion. Addison, Spect.

How many thousands pronounce boldly on the affairs of the publick, whom God nor men never qualified for such judgement. Watts.

THO'USANDTH. adj. [from thousand.] The hundredth ten times told; the ordinal of a thousand: proverbially, very numerous.

He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and break but a part of a thousandth part in the affairs of love, it may be said of him, that Cupid hath clapt him o' th' shoulder, but I'll warrant him heart whole. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Such is the poet's lot: what luckier fate
Does on the works of grave historians wait:
More time they spend, in greater toils engage,
Their volumes swell beyond the thousandth page. Dryden.

The French hugonots are many thousand witnesses to the contrary; and I wish they deserved the thousandth part of the good treatment they have received. Swift, Miscell.

THOWL. † n. s. [þol, Saxon, "scalmus à quo pendet remus." Lye.] One of two small sticks or wooden pins, driven into the edge of a boat, by which oars are kept in their places when rowing. Ainsworth.

To THRACK.* v. a. [tracht, a load, German; from
tragen, to carry.] To load; to burthen.

Certainly we shall one day find, that the strait gate is too narrow for any man to come bustling in, thrack'd with great possessions and greater corruptions. South, Sermon. viii. 176.

THRALL. † n. s. [þræl, þrall, Sax. thrael, Icel. a bond-servant. Mr. Ellis considers it as derived from the Saxon þrallian, to bore; and refers to Exod. xxi. 6. þruple hīr eape mib anum æle, "drill his ear with an awl; a custom retained by our forefathers, and executed on their slaves at the church door." Specimens of the Early Engl. Poets, vol. i. p. 20.]

1. A slave; one who is in the power of another. Not much in use.

No thralls like them that inward bondage have. Sidney.
But sith she will the conquest challenge need,
Let her accept me as her faithful thrall. Spenser.

Look gracious on thy prostrate thrall. Shakspeare.
The two delinquents

That were the slaves of drink, and thralls of sleep. Shakspeare.

I know I'm one of Nature's little kings;
Yet to the least and vilest things am thrall. Davies.

That we may so suffice his vengeful ire,
Or do him mightier service, as his thralls
By right of war, whate'er his business be. Milton, P. L.

2. Bondage; state of slavery or confinement.

Her men took land,
And first brought forth Ulysses, bed, and all
That richly furnish'd it; he still in thrall
Of all-subduing sleep. Chapman.

And laid about him, till his nose
From thrall of ring and cord broke loose. Hudibras.

THRALL.* adj. Bond; subject.

Withstood
The fiend that you would maken thrall and bond.

Chaucer, Fr. Tale.

[He] made her person thrall unto his beastly kind.
Spenser, F. Q.

Greatest kings
Are thrall to change as well as weaker things.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 291.

To THRALL. v. a. [from the noun.] To enslave; to bring into the power of another. Out of use.

Let me be a slave t' achieve the maid,
Whose sudden sight hath thrall'd my wounded eye.

Shakspeare.

Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode
The bad with bad, a spider with a toad.
For so ill thralls not them, but they tame ill,
And make her do much good against her will. Donne.

The author of nature is not thrall'd to the laws of nature.
Drummond.

THRA'LDOM. n. s. [from thrall.] Slavery; servitude.
How far am I inferior to thee in the state of the mind? and yet know I that all the Heavens cannot bring me to such thraldom. Sidney.

He swore with sobs,
That he would labour my delivery.
—Why, so he doth, when he delivers you
From this earth's thraldom to the joys of heav'n. Shakspeare.

This country, in a great part desolate, groaneth under the Turkish thraldom. Sandys.

He shall rule, and she in thraldom live. Dryden.

They tell us we are all born slaves; life and thraldom we entered into together, and can never be quit of the one till we part with the other. Locke.

THRANG.* See THRONG.

THRA'PPLE. n. s. The windpipe of any animal. They still retain it in the Scottish dialect; we say rather throatle.

To THRASH. † v. a. [ðæppcan, Saxon; derschen, Dutch; therskia, Icel. Our word is written thrash or thresh; but, according to the etymology, thresh is most correct.]

1. To beat corn to free it from the chaff.
First thrash the corn, then after burn the straw.

Shakspeare.
Gideon threshed wheat to hide it. Judg. viii. 11.
Here be oxen for burnt sacrifice, and threshing instruments for wood. 2 Sam. xxiv. 22.

In the sun your golden grain display,
And thrash it out, and winnow it by day. Dryden.

This is to preserve the ends of the bones from an incalcency, which they being hard bodies would contract from a swift motion; such as that of running or threshing. Ray.

Out of your clover well dried in the sun, after the first threshing, get what seed you can. Mortimer.

2. To beat; to drub.

Thou scurvy valiant ass; thou art here but to thrash Trojans, and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit like a Barbarian slave. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

To THRASH. v. n. To labour; to drudge.

I rather wou'd be Mævius, thresh for rhimes
Like his, the scorn and scandal of the times,
Than that Philippick fatally divine,
Which is inscrib'd the second, should be mine. Dryden.

THRA'SHER. n. s. [from thrash.] One who thrashes corn.

Our soldiers, like a lazy thrasher with a flail,
Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends. Shakspeare.

Not barely the plowman's pains, the reaper's and thrasher's toil, and the baker's sweat, is to be counted into the bread we eat: the labour of those employed about the utensils must all be charged. Locke.

THRA'SHINGFLOOR. n. s. An area on which corn is beaten.

In vain the hinds the thrashing-floor prepare,
And exercise their flails in empty air. Dryden.

Delve of convenient depth your thrashing-floor
With temper'd clay, then fill and face it o'er. Dryden.

THRASO'NICAL. † adj. [from Thraso, a boaster in old comedy.] Boastful; bragging.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and thrasomical.

The following words seem to him a thrasomical hymn, wherein he brags what feats he would do.

Patrick on Gen. iv. 23.

THRASO'NICALLY.* adv. [from thrasonical.] Boastfully.

To brag thrasonically, to boast like Rodomonte.
Johnson, in V. To Rodomontade.

In thraves, to frolick with him. B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

THREAD.† n. s. [ðræb, Saxon; from ðrapan, to throw, to twist.]

1. A small line; a small twist; the rudiment of cloth.

Let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord and vile reproach. Shakespeare.

Though the slender thread of dyed silk looked on single seem devoid of redness, yet when numbers of these threads are brought together, their colour becomes notorious. Boyle.

Though need urg'd me, never so,
He not receive a thread, but naked go. Chapman.

He who sat at a table but with a sword hanging over his head by one single thread or hair, surely had enough to check his appetite. South.

The art of pleasing is the skill of cutting to a thread, betwixt flattery and ill-manners. L' Etrange.

2. Any thing continued in a course; uniform tenor.

The eagerness and trembling of the fancy doth not always regularly follow the same even thread of discourse, but strikes upon some other thing that hath relation to it. Burnet.

The gout being a disease of the nervous parts, makes it so hard to cure; diseases are so as they are more remote in the thread of the motion of the fluids. Arbuthnot.

To THREAD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pass through with a thread.

The largest crooked needle, with a ligature of the size of that I have threaded it with, in taking up the spermatick vessels. Sharp, Surgery.

2. To pass through; to pierce through.

Ev'n when the nave of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates. Shakespeare, Coriol.

THRE'ADBARE. adj. [thread and bare.]

1. Deprived of the nap; wore to the naked threads.

Threadbare coat, and cobbled shoes he ware. Spenser.
The clothier means to dress the commonwealth, and set a new nap upon it: so he had need; for 'tis threadbare. Shakespeare.

Will any freedom here from you be borne,
Whose clothes are threadbare, and whose cloaks are torn?
Dryden, Juv.

He walk'd the streets, and wore a threadbare cloak;
He din'd and supp'd at charge of other folk. Swift.

A Thracian slave the porter's place maintain'd,
Sworn foe to threadbare suppliants, and with pride
His master's presence, nay, his name, deny'd. Harte.

2. Worn out; trite.

A hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A threadbare juggler, and a fortune-teller. Shakespeare.

Many writers of moral discourses run into stale topicks and threadbare quotations, not handling their subject fully and closely. Swift.

If be understood trade, he would not have mentioned this threadbare and exploded project. Child on Trade.

THRE'ADBARENESS.* n. s. [from threadbare.] State of being threadbare.

There was much significance in his look with regard to the coat; it spoke of the sleekness of folly, and the threadbareness of wisdom. Man of Feeling, ch. 21.

THRE'ADEN. adj. [from thread.] Made of thread.

Behold the threaden sails,
Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea. Shakespeare.

THRE'ADY.* adj. [from thread.]

1. Like thread; slender.

Branches, like the small and threddie roots of a tree.
Granger on Eccl. (1621.) p. 315.

The theady shuttle glides along the lines. Dyer, Fleece.

To THREAP.† v. a. [Sax. ðreapian.] To argue; to contend: still a northern word.

Some crye upon God, some other threpe that he hathe forgotten theym. Bp. Fisher, Serm.

To THREAT. } v. a. [ðreatian, Saxon: threat
To THRE'ATEN. } is seldom used but in poetry.]

1. To menace; to denounce evil.

Death to be wish'd
Though threaten'd, which no worse than this can bring.
Milton, P. L.

2. To menace; to terrify, or attempt to terrify, by shewing or denouncing evil. It has with before the thing threatened, if a noun; to, if a verb.

What threat you me with telling of the king?
Tell him and spare not. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

That it spread no further, straitly threaten them that they speak henceforth to no man in this name. Acts, iv. 18.

The void profound
Wide gaping, and with utter loss of being
Threatens him. Milton, P. L.

This day black omens threat the brightest fair,
That e'er deserv'd a watchful spirit's care. Pope.

3. To menace by action.

Void of fear,
He threaten'd with his long protended spear. Dryden.

The noise increases as the billows roar,
When rowling from afar they threat the shore. Dryden.

THREAT. n. s. [from the verb.] Menace; denunciation of ill.

There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats. Shakespeare.
The emperor perceiving that his threats were little regarded, regarded little to threaten any more. Hayward.

Do not believe
Those rigid threats of death: ye shall not die. Milton, P. L.

THRE'ATENER.† n. s. [from threaten, formerly threater. Prompt. Parv.] Menacer; one that threatens.

Be stirring as the time; be fire with fire;
Threaten the threatener, and outface the brow
Of bragging horror. Shakespeare, K. John.

The fruit, it gives you life
To knowledge by the threat'ner. Milton, P. L.

THRE'ATENING. n. s. [from threaten.] A menace; a denunciation of evil.

Aeneas their assault undaunted did abide,
And thus to Lausus, loud with friendly threat'ning cry'd.
Dryden, Virg.

How impossible would it be for a master, that thus interceded with God for his servants, to use any unkind threatnings towards them, to damn and curse them as dogs and scoundrels, and treat them only as the dregs of the creation. Law.

THRE'ATENINGLY. adv. [from threaten.] With menace; in a threatening manner.

The honour that thus flames in your fair eyes,
Before I speak, too threat'ningly replies. Shakespeare, All's Well.

THRE'ATFUL.† adj. [threat and full.] Full of threats; minacious.

Like as a warlike brigandine applide
To fight, lays forth her threatful pikes afore,
The engines which in them sad death do hide. Spenser.

This sin, so threatful to his sovereign, his country, his own soul. Hammond, Works, iv. 514.

THREE. adj. [ðrie, ðre, Saxon; dry, Dutch; tri, Welsh and Erse; tres, Lat.]

1. Two and one.

Prove this a prosperous day, the three-nook'd world
Shall bear the olive freely. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

If you speak three words, it will three times report you the whole three words. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Great Atreus sons, Tydides fixt above,
With three-ag'd Nestor. Creech, Manil.

Jove hurls the three-fork'd thunder from above. Addison.

These three and three with osier bands we ty'd. Pope.

Down to these worlds I trod the dismal way,
And dragg'd the three-mouth'd dog to upper day. Pope.

A strait needle, such as gloves use, with a three-edged point, useful in sewing up dead bodies. Sharp.

2. Proverbially a small number.

Away, thou three-inch'd fool; I am no beast. Shakespeare.
A base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited, filthy, worsted stocking knave. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

THRE'FOLD. adj. [ðreofealb, Saxon.] Thrice repeated; consisting of three.

A threefold cord is not easily broken. Ecclus. iv. 12.

By a threefold justice the world hath been governed from the beginning: by a justice natural, by which the parents and elders of families governed their children, in which the obedience was called natural piety: again, by a justice divine, drawn from the laws of God; and the obedience was called conscience: and lastly, by a justice civil, begotten by both the former; and the obedience to this we call duty. Raleigh.

A threefold off'ring to his altar bring,
A bull, a ram, a boar. Pope, Odys.

THRE'PENNY. n. s. [three and pence.] A small silver coin valued at thrice a penny.

and gave vent to the matter. Wiseman, Surgery.

THRE'PENNY. adj. [triobolaris, Latin.] Vulgar; mean.

THRE'PILE. n. s. [three and pile.] An old name for good velvet.

I, in my time, wore threepile, but am out of service.
Shakespeare.

THRE'PILED. adj. Set with a thick pile; in another place it seems to mean piled one on another.

Thou art good velvet; thou'rt a threepil'd piece: I had as lief be English kersey, as be pil'd as thou art. Shakespeare.
Threepil'd hyperboles; spruce affectation. Shakespeare.

THRE'SCORE. adj. [three and score.] Thrice twenty;
sixty.

Threescore and ten I can remember well. Shakespeare.
Their lives before the flood were abbreviated after, and contracted unto hundreds and threescores. Brown.

By chace our long-liv'd fathers earn'd their food;
Toil strung the nerves, and purify'd the blood:
But we their sons, a pamper'd race of men,
Are dwindled down to threescore years and ten. Dryden.

THRENE.* n. s. [θρήνος, Gr.] Lamentation; complaint. Obsolete.

It made this threne
To the phoenix and the dove,
As chorus to their tragick scene. Shakespeare, Pass. Pilgrim.
Some of these psalms may serve as threnes and dirges to lament the present miseries.

Bp. King to Abp. Usher, Lett. p. 567.
We observe the threnes and sad accents of the prophet
Jeremy, when he wept for the sins of his nation.

Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651), p. 56.
The birds shall mourn, and change their song into threnes and sad accents. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1653), p. 12.

THRE'NODY.* n. s. [θρήνοδια.] A song of lamentation.

They carry the body to the grave; — and for seven days the next of kin watch, to keep if possible the evil angel from his grave; incessantly warbling out elegiac threnodies, as the last expression of love they can shew.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 308.

To THRESH.* v. a. [ðæpʃcan, ðeɹpʃcan, Saxon.
See To THRASH.] To beat corn to free it from the chaff.

from the plough, to command armies. Locke on Education.

THRE'SHER.* n. s. [ðæpʃcepe, Sax.]

1. One who threshes corn.

Here too the thresher brandishing his flail,
Bespeaks a master. Doddsley.

2. A fish; the sea-fox.

The flail-finn'd thresher, and steel-beak'd swordfish.
Donne, Poems, p. 306.

THRE'SHINGFLOOR.* n. s. An area on which corn is beaten.

The careful ploughman doubting stands,
Lest on the threshing-floor his sheaves prove chaff.

Milton, P. L.

THRE'SHOLD. n. s. [ðæpʃcpalb, Saxon.] The ground or step under the door; entrance; gate; door.

Fair marching forth in honourable wise,
Him at the threshold met she well did enterprize. Spenser.

Many men, that stumble at the threshold,
Are well foretold that danger lurks within. Shakespeare.

Not better
Than still at hell's dark threshold to have set watch, Unnam'd, undreaded, and thyself half starv'd. Milton, P. L.

Before the starry threshold of Jove's court
My mansion is, where those immortal shapes
Of bright aerial spirits live inspher'd
In regions mild of calm and serene air. Milton, Comus.

There sought the queen's apartment, stood before
The peaceful threshold, and besieg'd the door. Dryden.

THREW, preterite of throw.

A broken rock the force of Pyrrhus threw:
Full on his ankle fell the pond'rous stone,
Burst the strong nerves, and crash'd the solid bone. Pope.

THRICE. adv. [from three.]

1. Three times.

Thrice he assay'd it from his foot to draw,
And thrice in vain to draw it did assay,
It bootied nought to think, to rob him of his prey. Spenser.

Thrice within this hour
I saw him down; thrice up again and fighting. Shakespeare.
Thrice did he knock his iron teeth; thrice howl,
And into frowns his wrathful forehead rowl. Cowley.

2. A word of amplification.

Thrice noble lord, let me intreat of you
To pardon me. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.
Thrice and four times happy those
That under Ilian walls before their parents dy'd. Dryden.

To THRID.* v. a. [this is corrupted from thread;
in French enfiler.] To slide through a narrow passage.

Thridding back
That well known way where I had made a track.
Fanshaw, Tr. of Past. Fido, p. 1.
One gains the thicket, and one thrids the brake.

Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

Some thrid the mazy ringlets of her hair,
Some hang upon the pendants of her ear. Pope.

THRID.* n. s. Thread.

Sad Clotho held the rocke the whiles the thrid
By griesly Lacheis was spun with paine,
That cruell Atropos eftsoones undid,
With cursed knife cutting the twist in twaine:
Most wretched men whose dayes depend on thrids so vaine.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 48.

THRIFT.† n. s. [from thrive.]

1. Profit; gain; riches gotten; state of prospering.

He came out with all his clowns, horst upon such cart jades, and so furnished, as I thought with myself if that were thrift, I wisht none of my friends or subjects ever to thrive. Sidney.

You some permit
To second ills with ills, each worse than other,
And make them dreaded to the doer's thrift. Shakspeare.

Had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I have a mind presages me such thrift,
That I should be fortunate. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Should the poor be flatter'd?
No; let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp,
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Parsimony; frugality; good husbandry.

The rest unable to serve any longer, or willing to fall to thrift, prove very good husbands. Spenser on Ireland.

Out of the present sparing and untimely thrift, there grow many future inconveniences and continual charge in repairing and re-edifying such imperfect slight-built vessels. Raleigh.

Thus Heaven, though all-sufficient, shows a thrift
In his oeconomy, and bounds his gift. Dryden.

3. A plant.

The marygold above, to adorn the arched bar;
The double daysie, thrift, the button-batcheler. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 15.

THRIFTILY.† adv. [from thrifty.] Frugally; parsimoniously; carefully; with good husbandry.

Preserve it tenderly and thriftyly; fence it against sun, dust, air, and fire. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 102.

Cromartie after fourscore went to his country-house to live thriftyly, and save up money to spend at London. Swift.

THRIFTINESS. n. s. [from thrifty.] Frugality; husbandry.

If any other place you have,
Which asks small pains but thriftness to save. Spenser.

Some are censured for keeping their own, whom tenderness how to get honestly teacheth to spend discreetly; whereas such need no great thriftness in preserving their own, who assume more liberty in exacting from others. Wotton.

THRIFTLESS. adj. [from thrift.] Profuse; extravagant.

They in idle pomp and wanton play
Consumed had their goods and thriftness hours,
And thrown themselves into these heavy stowers. Spenser.

He shall spend mine honour with his shame,
As thriftness sons their scraping father's gold. Shakspeare.

THRIFTY. adj. [from thrift.]

1. Frugal; sparing; not profuse; not lavish.

Though some men do, as do they would,
Let thrifty do, as do they should. Tusser.

Nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence,
But like a thrifty goddess she determines
Herself the glory of a creditor,
Thanks and use. Shakspeare.

Lest he should neglect his studies
Like a young heir, the thrifty goddess,
For fear young master should be spoil'd,
Would use him like a younger child. Swift.

I am glad he hath so much youth and vigour left, of which he hath not been thrifty; but wonder he has no more discretion. Swift.

2. Well-husbanded.

I have five hundred crowns,
The thrifty hire I sav'd under your father. Shakspeare.

To THRILL. v. a. [ðynlian, Saxon; drilla, Swedish.]

To pierce; to bore; to penetrate; to drill.

The cruel word her tender heart so thrill'd,
That sudden cold did run through every vein,
And stormy horror all her senses fill'd
With dying fit, that down she fell for pain. Spenser.

He pierced through his chafed chest
With thrilling point of deadly iron brand,
And lanc'd his lordly heart. Spenser.

A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act; bending his sword
To his great master. Shakspeare, A. Lear.

Nature, that heard such sound,
Beneath the hollow round
Of Cynthia's seat, the airy region thrilling,
Now was almost won,
To think her part was done. Milton, Ode.

To THRILL. v. n.

1. To have the quality of piercing.

The knight his thrillant spear again assay'd,
In his brass-plated body to emboss. Spenser.

With that, one of his thrillant darts he threw,
Headed with ire and vengeable despote. Spenser.

2. To pierce or wound the ear with a sharp sound.

The piteous maiden, careful, comfortless,
Does throw out thrilling shrieks, and shrieking cries. Spenser.

3. To feel a sharp tingling sensation.

To seek sweet safety out,
In vaults and prisons; and to thrill and shake,
Ev'n at the crying of our nation's crow,
Thinking his voice an armed Englishman. Shakspeare.

Art thou not horribly afraid? Doth not thy blood thrill at it? Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

4. To pass with a tingling sensation.

A faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shakspeare.

A sudden horror chill
Ran through each nerve, and thrill'd in ev'ry vein. Addison.

THRILL.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The breathing place or hole.

The bill of the dodo hooks and bends downwards; the thrill or breathing-place is in the midst. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 383.

2. A piercing sound.

To THRING.* v. a. [ðringan, Sax.] To press; to thrust: still used in some parts of the north. It is, in fact, no other than throng; and in our old language, is both active and neuter.

In his sleeve he gan to thring
A rasor sharpe and wel byting. Chaucer, Rom. R.

There was many a birde singing,
Throughout the yerde al thringing. Ibid.

To THRIVE. v. n. pret. throve, and sometimes less properly thrived, part. thriven. [Of this word there is found no satisfactory etymology: in the northern dialect they use throdden, to make grow; perhaps throve was the original word, from throa, Icelandick, to encrease.] To prosper; to grow rich; to advance in any thing desired.

The better thou thrivest, the gladder am I. Tusser.

May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Alcides beaten by his page. Shakspeare.

If they err finally, it is like a man's missing his cast when he throws dice for his life; his being, his happiness, and all is involved in the error of one throw. South.

Suppose any particular order of the alphabet to be assigned, and the twenty-four letters cast at a venture, so as to fall in a line; it is many million of millions odds to one against any single throw, that the assigned order will not be cast. Bentley, Serm.

The world, where lucky throws to blockheads fall, Knives know the game, and honest men pay all. Young.

3. The space to which any thing is thrown.

Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground
I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have, almost, stamp'd the leasing. Shakspeare, Coriol.
The Sirenum Scopuli are sharp rocks that stand about a stone's throw from the south side of the island. Addison.

4. A short space of time; a little while. [ðrah, Sax.]

They danced but a little throw. Chaucer, Fl. and Leaf.

Upon the grassy ground to sleepe a throw. Spenser, F. Q.
You can fool no more money out of me at this throw. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

5. Stroke; blow.

So fierce he laid about him, and dealt blows
On either side, that neither mail could hold,
Ne shield defend the thunder of his throws. Spenser.

6. Effort; violent sally.

Your youth admires
The throws and swellings of a Roman soul;
Cato's bold flights, the extravagance of virtue. Addison.

7. The agony of childbirth: in this sense it is written throe. See THROE.

The most pregnant wit in the world never brings forth any thing great without some pain and travail, pangs and throws before the delivery. South.

But when the mother's throws begin to come,
The creature, pent within the narrow room,
Breaks his blind prison. Dryden.

Say, my friendship wants him
To help me bring to light a manly birth;
Which to the wondering world I shall disclose;
Or if he fail me, perish in my throws. Dryden.

THROWER. † n. s. [from throw.]

Pope.

2. [From thrust: as we say, a push; a breaking out.

Dr. Johnson. — The disease, being indicated by small red eruptions, especially in the mouth, is named from the Fr. rouge, red, prefixing the English the; hence thrush. D. Gazetteer, July 25. 1764.]

By this name are called small, round, superficial ulcerations, which appear first in the mouth; but as they proceed from the obstruction of the emissaries of the saliva, by the lentor and viscosity of the humour, they may affect every part of the alimentary duct, except the thick guts: they are just the same in the inward parts as scabs in the skin, and fall off from the inside of the bowels like a crust: the nearer they approach to a white colour the less dangerous.

Arbutnot on Diet.

To THRUST.† v. a. [trusito, Lat. thrijsta, trudere;

Serenius: old Engl. threst. "This lettre down she threste under his pillow." Chaucer, March. Tale.]

- THUMPING. * adj. Great; huge: a thumping boy, i. e. a large child. Exm. and different counties.
Grose. It is a low word.
- THUNDER. n. s. [ðunþen, ðunop, Saxon; dunder, Swedish; donder, Dutch; tonnere, Fr.]
1. Thunder is a most bright flame rising on a sudden, moving with great violence, and with a very rapid velocity, through the air, according to any determination, upwards from the earth, horizontally, obliquely, downwards, in a right line, or in several right lines, as it were in serpentine tracts, joined at various angles, and commonly ending with a loud noise or rattling. Muschenbroek.
2. In popular and poetick language, thunder is commonly the noise, and lightning the flash; though thunder is sometimes taken for both.
I do not bid the thunder bearer shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove. Shakespeare.
The revenging gods
'Gainst parricides all the thunder bend. Shakespeare.
The thunder
Wing'd with red lightning and impetuous rage,
Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
To bellow through the vast and boundless deep. Milton, P. L.

T H U

3. Any loud noise or tumultuous violence.
So fierce he laid about him, and dealt blows
On either side, that neither mail could hold
Ne shield defend the thunder of his throws. Spenser.
Here will we face this storm of insolence,
Nor fear the noisy thunder; let it roll,
Then burst, and spend at once its idle rage. Rowe.
- To THUNDER. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To make thunder.
His nature is too noble for the world:
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Nor Jove for's power to thunder. Shakespeare, Coriol.
2. To make a loud or terrible noise.
His dreadful name late through all Spain did thunder,
And Hercules' two pillars standing near,
Did make to quake and fear. Spenser.
His dreadful voice no more
Would thunder in my ears. Milton, P. L.
Like a black sheet the whelming billow spread,
Burst o'er the float, and thunder'd on his head. Pope.
- To THUNDER. † v. a.
1. To emit with noise and terrour.
So soon as some few notable examples had thundered a duty into the subjects' hearts, he soon shewed no baseness of suspicion. Sidney.
Oracles severe
Were daily thunder'd in our general's ear,
That by his daughter's blood we must appease
Diana's kindled wrath. Dryden.
2. To publish any denunciation or threat.
An archdeacon, as being a prelate, may thunder out an ecclesiastical censure. Ayliffe.
3. To urge violently; to inflict with vehemence.
Tho forth the boaster marching brave begonne
His stolen steed to thunder furiously. Spenser, F. Q.
Therewith they gan, both furious and fell,
To thunder blows, and fiercely to assaile,
Each other, bent his enemy to quell. Spenser, F. Q.
Now at his helm, now at his hawberk bright
He thunder'd blows, now at his face and sight. Fairfax.
- THUNDERBOLT. n. s. [thunder and bolt, as it signifies an arrow.]
1. Lightning; the arrows of heaven.
If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. Shakespeare.
Let the lightning of this thunderbolt, which hath been so severe a punishment to one, be a terrour to all. King Charles.
My heart does beat,
As if 'twere forging thunderbolts for Jove. Denham.
Who can omit the Gracchi, who declare
The Scipio's worth, those thunderbolts of war? Dryden.
The most remarkable piece in Antonine's pillar, is Jupiter Pluvius sending down rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies; which is the greatest confirmation of the story of the Christian legion. Addison.
2. Fulmination; denunciation, properly ecclesiastical.
He severely threatens such with the thunderbolt of excommunication. Hakewill on Providence.
- THUNDERCLAP. n. s. [thunder and clap.] Explosion of thunder.
The kindly bird that bears Jove's thunderclap,
One day did scorn the simple scarabee,
Proud of his highest service, and good hap,
That made all other fowls his thralls to be. Spenser.
When some dreadful thunderclap is nigh,
The winged fire shoots swiftly through the sky;
Strikes and consumes ere scarce it does appear,
And, by the sudden ill, prevents the fear. Dryden.
When suddenly the thunderclap was heard,
It took us unprepar'd, and out of guard. Dryden.
- THUNDERER. n. s. [from thunder.] The power that thunders.
How dare you, ghosts,
Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt you know,
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts? Shakespeare.

Had the old Greeks discover'd your abode,
Crete hadn't been the cradle of their god;
On that small island they had look'd with scorn,
And in Great Britain thought the thunderer born.

Waller.

When the bold Typhæus
Forced great Jove from his own heav'n to fly,
The lesser gods, that shar'd his prosp'rous state,
All suffer'd in the exil'd thunderer's fate.

Dryden.

THUNDERING.* n. s. [from thunder.]

1. The emission of thunder.

Entreat the Lord, that there be no more mighty thunderings and hail.

Exod. ix. 28.

2. The act of publishing any threat; any loud or violent noise.

That church shall always have enemies, and shall still be tormented in the sea of this world with the thunderings of Antichrist. Bp. Hooper, Confess. of Chr. Faith, (1584,) § 52.

THUNDEROUS.† adj. [from thunder.] Producing thunder.

Rushing with thundrous roar.

Sylvester, Du Bart. (1621,) p. 420.

Look in and see each blissful deity,
How he before the thunderous throne doth lie.

Milton, Vac. Ex.

THUNDERSHOWER. n. s. [thunder and shower.] A rain accompanied with thunder.

The conceit is long in delivering, and at last it comes like a thundershower, full of sulphur and darkness, with a terrible crack.

Stillingfleet.

In thundershowers the winds and clouds are oftentimes contrary to one another, especially if hail falls, the sultry weather below directing the wind one way, and the cold above the clouds another.

Derham, Physico-Theol.

THUNDERSTONE. n. s. [thunder and stone.] A stone fabulously supposed to be emitted by thunder;
thunderbolt.

Fear no more the lightning flash,

Nor th' all-dreaded thunderstone.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

To THUNDERSTRIKE. v. a. [thunder and strike.]

1. To blast or hurt with lightning.

I remained as a man thunderstricken, not daring, nay not able, to behold that power.

Sidney.

The overthrown he rais'd, and as a herd
Of goats, or timorous flock, together throng'd,
Drove them before him thunderstruck.

Milton, P. L.

With the voice divine

Nigh thunderstruck, the exalted man, to whom
Such high attest was given, a while survey'd
With wonder.

Milton, P. R.

'Tis said that thunderstruck Enceladus
Lies stretch'd supine.

Addison.

2. To astonish with any thing terrible.

Fears from our hearts tooke

The very life; to be so thunderstrooke

With such a voice.

Chapman.

The act of fuming with incense; the act of burning incense.

The way of thurification,

To make fumigation.

Skelton, Poems, p. 230.

Some semblance of an idolatrous thurification.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 3. C. 3.

The several acts of worship which were required to be performed to images are processions, genuflections, thurifica- tions, deosculations, and oblations.

Stillingfleet.

THURSDAY. n. s. [thorsgday, Danish; from thor.]

Thor was the son of Odin; yet, in some of the northern parts, they worshipped the Supreme Deity under his name, attributing the power over all things, even the inferior deities, to him. Stilling- fleet. The fifth day of the week.

THUS. adv. [ðar, Saxon.]

1. In this manner; in this wise.

It cannot be that they who speak thus, should thus judge.

Hooker.

The knight him calling, asked who he was,
Who lifting up his head, him answer'd thus.

Spenser.

I return'd with similar proof enough,

With tokens thus and thus.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

To be thus is nothing;

But to be safely thus.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I have sinned against the Lord, and thus and thus have I done.

Jos. vii. 23.

The Romans used a like wise endeavour, and whiles in a higher, in a wiser strain, making concord a deity; thus seeking peace, not by an oath, but by prayer.

Holyday.

That the principle that sets on work these organs, is nothing else but the modification of matter thus or thus posited, is false.

Hale.

Beware, I warn thee yet, to tell thy griefs

In terms becoming majesty to hear:

I warn thee thus, because I know thy temper

Is insolent.

Dryden, Don Sebast.

Thus in the triumphs of soft peace I reign.

Dryden.

All were attentive to the godlike man,

When from his lofty couch he thus began.

Dryden, Æn.

2. To this degree; to this quantity.

A counsellor of state in Spain said to his master, I will tell your majesty thus much for your comfort, your majesty hath but two enemies; whereof the one is all the world, and the other your own ministers.

Bacon.

Even thus wise, that is, thus peaceable, were very Heathens;
thus peaceable among themselves, though without grace; thus peaceable by wise nature very like grace.

Holyday.

He said, thus far extend, thus far thy bounds.

Milton, P. L.

Thus much concerning the first earth, and its production and form.

Burnet, Theory.

No man reasonably pretends to know thus much, but he must pretend to know all things

Tillotson.

This you must do to inherit life; and if you have come up

thus far, firmly persevere in it.

Wake.

To THWACK.† v. a. [ðaccian, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — If it be from the Saxon word, it should seem to be ironically, for that means to touch lightly. To thack is the old English word: "This carter thakketh his horse upon the croupe." Chaucer, Fr. Tale.] To strike with something blunt and heavy; to thresh; to bang; to belabour;

A ludicrous word.

He shall not stay;

We'll thwack him hence with distaffs.

Shakspeare.

Nick fell foul upon John Bull, to smatch the cudgel he had in his hand, that he might thwack Lewis with it.

Arbutnot.

These long fellows, as slightly as they are, should find their jackets well thwack'd.

Arbutnot.

THWACK. n. s. [from the verb.] A heavy hard blow.

But Talgol first with hardy thwack

Twice bru'd his head, and twice his back.

Hudibras.

They place several pots of rice, with cudgels in the neighbourhood of each pot; the monkeys descend from the trees, take up the arms, and belabour one another with a storm of thwacks.

Addison, Frecholder.

THWAITE.* n. s. [some take it for a pasture, from the Dutch kwoit. Camden. Twaite, Norm. Fr.
Kelham.] Any plain parcel of ground, from which wood has been grubbed up, enclosed and converted into tillage: a northern word.

It being a stony and mountainous country, is not every where so fit for tillage or meadow; but in several parts and parcels, as they are marked by nature, differing in form and quality of soil, or otherwise enclosed by the inhabitants from the barren waste of the fells, such parts or parcels are now and were of old called thwaits, sometimes with the addition of their quality; as Brachenthwaite, of brackens or fern growing there; Stonethwaite, of rocks; and such like.

Nicolson and Burn, Hist. of Cumberland, p. 14.

THWART.† adj. [ðwɔ̃n, Saxon; dwaers, Teut. obliquus; thwer, Icel. transversus, oppositus. Serenius.]

1. Transverse; cross to something else.

This else to several spheres thou must ascribe,

2. Perverse; inconvenient; mischievous. [thairs, Goth. iratus; ðpeon, Sax. thwere, Icel. contrarius, rebellis. Serenius.]

If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen; that it may live,
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

THWART.* adv. [from the adjective.] Obliquely.

Yet whether thwart or flatly it did lyte,
The tempered steele did not into his braynepan byte.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. vi. 30.

To THWART. v. a.

1. To cross; to lie or come cross any thing.

Swift as a shooting star
In autumn thwarts the night. Milton, P. L.
Yon stream of light, a thousand ways
Upward and downward thwarting and convolv'd. Thomson.

2. To cross; to oppose; to traverse; to contravene.

Some sixteen months and longer might have staid,
If crooked fortune had not thwarted me. Shakespeare.

Lesser had been
The thwartings of your dispositions, if
You had not shew'd how you were dispos'd
Ere they lack power to cross you. Shakespeare, Coriol.

The understanding and will then never disagreed; for the proposals of the one never thwarted the inclinations of the other. South.

The rays both good and bad, of equal pow'r,
Each thwarting other made a mingled hour. Dryden.

In vain did I the godlike youth deplore,
The more I begg'd, they thwarted me the more. Addison.

Neptune aton'd, his wrath shall now refrain,
Or thwart the synod of the gods in vain. Pope, Odys.

By thwarting passions tost, by cares oppress,
He found the tempest pictur'd in his breast. Young.

To THWART. v. n. To be in opposition to.

It is easy to be imagined what reception any proposition shall find, that shall at all thwart with these internal oracles.
Locke.

THWA'RTING.† n. s. [from thwart.] The act of crossing; the act of opposing.

Socrates knew before he married her, that his Xantippe was a scold unsufferable; yet he wittingly did marry her, to exercise his patience, that, by the practice of enduring her shrewish heats, he might be able to brook all companies; the brawls, the scorn, the sophisms, and the petulancies of rude and unskilful men; the frettings, the thwartings, and the excruciations of life. Feltham, Res. ii. 57.

THWA'RTINGLY. adv. [from thwarting.] Oppositely; with opposition.

THWA'RTNESS.* n. s. [from thwart.] Untowardness; perverseness.

Can any man be so unreasonable as to defend it lawful, upon some unkind usages or thwartness of disposition, for a parent to abandon and forsake his child, or the son to cast off his parent? much less therefore may it be thus betwixt an husband and wife: "They two are one flesh."

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 2.

To THWITE.* v. a. [ðwɪtan, Sax.] To cut, chip, or hack with a knife: used in the north, and is in the old dictionary of Huloet.

A bow — full even —

And it was painted well and thwitten. Chaucer, Rom. R. 933.

THWI'TTLE.* n. s. [hwɪtel, Sax. whence our whittle; but thwittle is the older English word. See To THWITE.] A kind of knife: this is also a northern word.

A Sheffield thwitel bare he in his hose. Chaucer, Reve's Tale.

THY. pronoun. [ðin, Saxon.] Of thee; belonging to thee; relating to thee: the possessive of thou. See THOU.

Whatever God did say,
Is all thy clear and smooth uninterrupted way. Cowley.

Th' example of the heavenly lark,
Thy fellow poet Cowley mark. Cowley.

These are thy works, parent of good. Milton, P. L.

THYSE'LF. pronoun reciprocal. [thy and self.]

1. It is commonly used in the oblique cases, or following the verb.

Come high or low,
Thyself and office deftly show. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
It must and shall be so; content thyself. Shakespeare.

2. In poetical or solemn language it is sometimes used in the nominative.

These goods thyself can on thyself bestow. Dryden.

THYINE wood. n. s. A precious wood.

The merchandize of gold and all thyine wood are departed from thee. Rev. xviii. 12.

THYME. n. s. [thym, Fr. thymus, Lat.] A plant.

The thyme hath a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper-lip is erect, and generally split in two, and the under-lip is divided into three parts; out of the flower-cup arises the pointal, accompanied by four embryos, which afterward become so many seeds, inclosed in a husk, which before was the flower-cup; to these marks must be added hard ligneous stalks, and the flowers gathered into heads. Miller.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme. Dryden.

THYMY.* adj. [from thyme.] Abounding with thyme.

Guide my way
Through fair Lyceum's walk, the green retreats
Of Academus, and the thymy vale,
Where oft enchanted with Socratic sounds
Ilissus pure devolv'd his tuneful stream
In gentler murmurs. Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 1.

The scudding hare
Draws to her dew-sprent seat, o'er thymy heaths,
A path as gently waving. Mason, Eng. Gard. B. 2.

TIAR.† } n. s. [tiare, Fr. tiara, Lat. Dr. Johnson-
TIARA. } son. — The Saxons had tȳn in a similar sense; and tiar is much older than the time of Milton, Dr. Johnson's earliest authority.] A dress for the head; a diadem.

His [the pope's] triple tiare and crowne evince the same.
Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. (1616), p. 165.

His back was turn'd, but not his brightness hid;
Of beaming sunny rays a golden tiar
Circled his head. Milton, P. L.

This royal robe, and this tiara wore
Old Priam, and this golden sceptre bore
In full assemblies. Dryden, Æn.

A tiar wreath'd her head with many a fold,
Her waist was circled with a zone of gold. Pope.
Fairer she seem'd, distinguish'd from the rest,
And better mien disclos'd, as better drest:
A bright tiara round her forehead ty'd,
To juster bounds confin'd its rising pride. Prior.

To TICE.† v. a. [from entice. Dr. Johnson. — This is an old English verb, and is also used in Scotland. Mr. Chalmers observes, that Dr. Johnson gives no derivation of entice, to which he refers tice; and that the roots of both are probably tihcan, Sax. suadere, sollicitare. Dr. Jamieson notices this Saxon etymon, as also Fr. altiser, Ital. tizzare, accendere, together with the Arm. tis, a train, and Su. Goth. tassa, to incite. But it is, no doubt, merely an abbreviation of the old French enticer, which is the origin, as I have shewn, of our entice.] To draw; to allure.

These two have tic'd me hither to this place.

Titus Andronicus.

What is in your lip
To tice the enamour'd soul to dwell with more Ambition, than the yet unwither'd blush
That speaks the innocence of mine?

Beaum. and Fl. Coronation.

Lovely enchanting language, sugar-cane,
Honey of roses, whither wilt thou fly?
Hath some fond lover tic'd thee to thy bane?
And wilt thou leave the church, and love a sty?

Herbert.

TICEMENT.* n. s. [enticement, old French.] Allurement. Obsolete.

Huloet.

TICK.† n. s. [This word seems contracted from ticket, a tally on which debts are scored. Dr. Johnson. — It is certainly a contraction of ticket, the ancient word for trust, or score; which Mr. Malone considers to have been the token given by the creditor to the debtor, to ascertain the debt. "You may swim in twentie of their boates over the water upon ticket." Dekker, Gull's Hornebooke, 1609. "Taking up arms and ammunition from the States United, with whom they went on ticket, and long days of payment, for want of ready money for their satisfaction." Heylin, Hist. of the Presbyterians, 1670. p. 437.]

1. Score; trust.

If thou hast the heart to try't,
I'll lend thee back thyself awhile,
And once more for that carcase vile
Fight upon tick.

Hudibras.

When the money is got into hands that have bought all that they have need of, whoever needs any thing else must go on tick, or barter for it.

Locke.

You would see him in the kitchen weighing the beef and butter, paying ready money, that the maids might not run a tick at the market.

Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

2. [tique, Fr. teke, Dutch.] The louse of dogs or sheep.

Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

3. The case which holds the feathers of a bed.

To TICK. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run on score.

2. To trust; to score.

The money went to the lawyers; council won't tick.

Arbuthnot.

To TICK.* v. a. [tikken, Dutch.] To note by regular vibration, as a watch or clock.

I do not suppose that the ancient clocks ticked or noticed the seconds.

Tollet, Note on Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

TICK.* n. s. [from the verb.] The sound made in ticking.

Its noise is more agreeable to the leisurely and constant tick of the death-watch

Ray, Rem. p. 324.

Dimities, tickens, checks, and the like stuffs.

Guthrie, England.

TICKET. n. s. [etiquet, Fr.] A token of any right or debt, upon the delivery of which admission is granted, or a claim acknowledged.

There should be a paymaster appointed, of special trust, which should pay every man according to his captain's ticket, and the account of the clerk of his band.

Spenser.

In a lottery with one prize, a single ticket is only enriched, and the rest are all blanks.

Collier on Envy.

Let fops or fortune fly which way they will,
Disdains all loss of tickets or codille.

Pope.

To TICKET.* v. a. [from the noun; tiqueté, Fr. ticketed. Cotgrave and Sherwood.] To distinguish by a ticket.

In that lottery a few glittering prizes, 1000, 5000, 10,000 pounds among an infinity of blanks, drew troops of adventurers; who, if the whole fund had been equally ticketed, would never have come in.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 40.

To TICKLE. v. a. [titillo, Lat.]

1. To affect with a prurient sensation by slight touches.

Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant

Can tickle where she wounds.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

The mind is moved in great vehemency only by tickling some parts of the body.

Bacon.

There is a sweetness in good verse, which tickles even while it hurts; and no man can be heartily angry with him who pleases him against his will.

Dryden.

It is a good thing to laugh at any rate; and if a straw can tickle a man, it is an instrument of happiness.

Dryden.

2. To please by slight gratifications.

Dametas, that of all manners of stile could best conceive of golden eloquence, being withal tickled by Musidorus's praises, had his brain so turned, that he became slave to that which he that sued to be his servant offered to give him.

Sidney.

Expectation tickling skittish spirits,

Sets all on hazard.

Shakspeare.

Such a nature

Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow

Which it trends on at noon.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

I cannot rule my spleen;

My scorn rebels, and tickles me within.

Dryden.

Dunce at the best; in streets but scarce allow'd

To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd.

Dryden.

A drunkard, the habitual thirst after his cups drives to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health, and perhaps of the joys of another life, the least of which is such a good as he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine.

Locke.

To TICKLE. v. n. To feel titillation.

He with secret joy therefore

Did tickle inwardly in every vein,

And his false heart, fraught with all treason's store,

Was fill'd with hope, his purpose to obtain.

Spenser.

TICKLE.† adj. [I know not whence to deduce the sense of this old word.] Tottering; unfixed; unstable; uncertain; easily overthrown.

The world is now full tikel sickerly.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

When the last O Neal began to stand upon some tickle terms, this fellow, called baron of Dunganon, was set up to beard him.

Spenser on Ireland.

Thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milk-maid, if she be in love, may sigh it off.

Shakspeare.

The state of Normandy

Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone.

Shakspeare.

Courtiers are but tickle things to deal withal.

Beaum. and Fl. Rule a Wife.

TICKLENESS.* n. s. [from tickle.] Unsteadiness; uncertainty.

Hoard hath hate; and climbing, tikleness.

Chaucer, Balade of Gode Counsaile.

Fortune false — none feed

To stand with stay, and forswear tikleness.

Mir. for Mag. p. 429.

TICKLER.* n. s. [from tickle.] One that tickles.

Scott.

TICKLING.* n. s. [from tickle.] The act of affecting by slight touches; the act of pleasing by slight gratifications.

Aspiring sons,
Who with these hourly ticklings grow so pleas'd,
And wantonly conceited of themselves. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

TICKLISH. adj. [from tickle.]

1. Sensible to titillation; easily tickled.

The palm of the hand, though it hath as thin a skin as the other parts, yet is not ticklish, because it is accustomed to be touched. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Tottering; uncertain; unfixed.

Ireland was a ticklish and unsettled state, more easy to receive distempers and mutations than England was. Bacon.

Did it stand upon so ticklish and tottering a foundation as some men's fancy hath placed it, it would be no wonder should it frequently vary. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. Difficult; nice.

How shall our author hope a gentle fate,
Who dares most impudently not translate;
It had been civil in these ticklish times,
To fetch his fools and knaves from foreign climes. Swift.

TICKLISHNESS. n. s. [from ticklish.] The state of being ticklish.

TICKTACK.† n. s. [trictrac, Fr.] A game at tables. See also TRICKTRACK.

Tick-tack sets a man's intentions on their guard. Errors in this and war can be but once amended.

Hall, Horæ Vacivæ, (1646), p. 149.
And that those pretended tumults were chastised by their own army for new tumults, is not proved by a game at ticktack with words; Tumults and Armies, Armies and Tumults; but seems more like the method of a justice irrational than divine. Milton, Eiconocl. § 26.

TID. adj. [tyðber, Sax.] Tender; soft; nice.

TIDBIT. n. s. [tid and bit.] A dainty.

To TIDDER.} v. a. [from tid.] To use tenderly; to
To TIDDLE.} fondle.

TIDE. n. s. [tib, tyd, Saxon; tijd, Dutch and Icelandic.]

1. Time; season; while.

There they alight in hope themselves to hide
From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs a tide. Spenser.

They two forth passing,
Receiv'd those two fair brides, their love's delight,
Which, at the appointed tide,
Each one did make his bride. Spenser.

What hath this day deserv'd,
That it in golden letter should be set
Among the high tides in the kalendar. Shakespeare, K. John.
At New-year's tide following the king chose him master of the horse. Wotton.

2. Alternate ebb and flow of the sea.

That motion of the water called tides is a rising and falling of the sea: the cause of this is the attraction of the moon, whereby the part of the water in the great ocean which is nearest the moon, being most strongly attracted, is raised higher than the rest; and the part opposite to it being least attracted, is also higher than the rest; and these two opposite rises of the surface of the water in the great ocean following the motion of the moon from East to West, and striking against the large coasts of the continents, from thence rebound back again, and so make floods and ebbs in narrow seas and rivers. Locke.

3. Commotion; violent confluence.

As in the tides of people once up there want not stirring winds to make them more rough, so this people did light upon two ringleaders. Bacon, Hen. VII.

4. Stream; course.

Thou art the ruins of the noblest man,
That ever lived in the tide of times. Shakespeare.
The rapid currents drive
Towards the retreating sea their furious tide. Milton.
But let not all the gold which Tagus hides,
And pays the sea in tributary tides,

Be bribe sufficient to corrupt thy breast,
Or violate with dreams thy peaceful rest. Dryden.

Continual tide

Flows from th' exhilarating fount. Philips.

To TIDE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To drive with the stream.

They are tided down the stream of looseness. Feltham, Res. ii. 8.

Their images, the relics of the wreck,
Torn from the naked poop, are tided back
By the wild waves, and rudely thrown ashore. Dryden.

To TIDE. v. n. To pour a flood; to be agitated by the tide.

When, from his dint, the foe still backward shrunk,
Wading within the Ouse, he dealt his blows,
And sent them, rolling, to the tiding Humber. Philips.

TIDEGATE. n. s. [tide and gate.] A gate through which the tide passes into a bason. Bailey.

TIDESMAN. n. s. [tide and man.] A tidewater or customhouse officer, who watches on board of merchant-ships till the duty of goods be paid and the ships unloaded. Bailey.

TIDEWAITER. n. s. [tide and wait.] An officer who watches the landing of goods at the customhouse. Employments will be in the hands of Englishmen; nothing left for Irishmen but vicarages and tidewaiters' places. Swift.

TIDILY. adv. [from tidy.] Neatly; readily.

TIDINESS. n. s. [from tidy.] Neatness; readiness.

TIDINGS. n. s. [tiban, Saxon, to happen, to betide; tidende, Icelandic.] News; an account of something that has happened; incidents related.

When her eyes she on the dwarf had set,
And saw the signs that deadly tidings spake,
She fell to ground for sorrowful regret. Spenser.

I shall make my master glad with these tidings. Shakespeare.
They win

Great numbers of each nation to receive,
With joy, the tidings brought from heaven. Milton, P. L.
Portius, thy looks speak somewhat of importance:

What tidings dost thou bring? methinks I see Unusual gladness sparkling in thy eyes. Addison.

The messenger of these glad tidings, by whom this covenant of mercy was proposed and ratified, was the eternal son of his bosom. Rogers.

TIDY.† adj. [tidt, Icelandic, frequens. The primary sense is from the Sax. tib, tide, season. Wicliffe uses tidful in this sense: "tidful fruit." James, v. 7. So tydigh, Teut. tempestivus, maturus.]

1. Seasonable; timely.

If weather be faire and tidie, thy grain
Make speedilie carriage, for feare of a raine. Tusser.
What a hap had I,

And what a tydie fortune, when my fate
Plung me upon this bear-whelp! Beaum. and Fl. Tam. Tamed.

2. Neat; ready. [tidig, Su. Goth. decorus, decens.]

Whenever by yon barley-mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay, Past.

3. It seems to be here put by mistake or irony for untidy. Dr. Johnson. — Rather perhaps ironically for small. The word is applied to Falstaff. Tidy is used in the north, according to Grose, for small.

Thou whoreson tidy Bartholomew boar-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting? Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

To TIE. v. a. [tīan, tīgan, Sax.]

1. To bind; to fasten with a knot.

Tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them. 1 Sam. vi. 7.

Thousands of men and women, tied together in chains, were, by the cruel Turks, enforced to run as fast as their horses. Knolles, Hist.

T I E

2. To knit; to complicate.

We do not tie this knot with an intention to puzzle the argument; but the harder it is tied, we shall feel the pleasure more sensibly when we come to loose it. Burnet.

3. To hold; to fasten; to join so as not easily to be parted.

In bond of virtuous love together tied,
Together serv'd they, and together died. Fairfax.

The intermediate ideas tie the extremes so firmly together, and the probability is so clear, that assent necessarily follows it. Locke.

Certain theorems resolve propositions which depend on them, and are as firmly made out from thence, as if the mind went afresh over every link of the whole chain that ties them to first self-evident principles. Locke.

4. To hinder; to obstruct: with up, intensive.

Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me wail,
Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak. Shakspeare.

Melantius stay,
You have my promise, and my hasty word
Restrains my tongue, but ties not up my sword. Waller.

Honour and good-nature may tie up his hands; but as these would be very much strengthened by reason and principle, so without them they are only instincts. Addison.

5. To oblige; to constrain; to restrain; to confine.

Although they profess they agree with us touching a pre-script form of prayer to be used in the church, they have declared that it shall not be prescribed as a thing whereunto they will tie their ministers. Hooker.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake; he'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Cannot God make any of the appropriate acts of worship to become due only to himself? cannot he tie us to perform them to him? Stillington.

They tie themselves so strictly to unity of place, that you never see in any of their plays a scene change in the middle of an act. Dryden.

Not tied to rules of policy, you find
Revenge less sweet than a forgiving mind. Dryden.

No one seems less tied up to a form of words. Locke.
The mind should, by several rules, be tied down to this, at first, uneasy task; use will give it facility. Locke.

They have no uneasy expectations of what is to come, but are ever tied down to the present moment. Atterbury.

A healthy man ought not to tie himself up to strict rules, nor to abstain from any sort of food in common use. Arbuthnot.

6. It may be observed of tie, that it has often the particles up and down joined to it, which are, for the most part, little more than emphatical, and which, when united with this word, have at least consequentially the same meaning.

TIE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Knot; fastening. See TYE.

2. Bond; obligation.

The rebels that had shaken off the great yoke of obedience, had likewise cast away the lesser tie of respect. Bacon.

No forest, cave, or savage den,
Holds more pernicious beasts than men;
Vows, oaths, and contracts, they devise,
And tell us they are sacred ties. Waller.

3. A knot of hair.

The well-sworn ties an equal homage claim,
And either shoulder has its share of fame. Young.

TIER. n. s. [tiere, tierie, old Fr. tuyer, Dutch.] A row; a rank.

Fornovius, in his choler, discharged a tier of great ordnance amongst the thickest of them. Knolles.

TIERCE. n. s. [tiers, tiercier, Fr.] A vessel holding the third part of a pipe.

Go now deny his tierce. B. Jonson.

Wit, like tierce claret, when't begins to pall,
Neglected lies, and 's of no use at all;
But in its full perfection of decay
Turns vinegar, and comes again in play. Dorset.

T I G

TIERCET. n. s. [from tiers, Fr.] A triplet; three lines.

TIFF. n. s. [A low word, I suppose without etymology.]

1. Liquor; drink.

I, whom griping penury surrounds,
And hunger, sure attendant upon want,
With scanty offals, and small acid tiff,
Wretched repast! my meagre corps sustain. Philips.

TIFFANY. n. s. [tiffer, to dress up, old Fr. Skinner.] Very thin silk.

The smook of sulphur will not black a paper, and is commonly used by women to whiten tiffanics. Brown.

TIG.* n. s. [from tekan, Goth. to touch.] A play, in which children try to touch each other last.

TIGE. n. s. [in architecture.] The shaft of a column from the astragal to the capital. Bailey.

TIGER. n. s. [tigre, Fr. tigris, Lat.] A fierce beast of the leonine kind.

When the blast of war blows in your ear,
Then imitate the action of the tiger:
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Has the steer
At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
E'er plow'd for him? Thomson, Spring.

TIGHT.† adj. [dicht, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — From the Sax. tygan, to tie. Mr. H. Tooke. — In the Sax. tygan, to bind, perhaps we see the true origin of the English tight, as signifying neat, generally traced to Teut. dicht, solidus. It seems merely q. d. tied close, well knit. Dr. Jamieson.]

1. Tense; close; not loose.

If the centre holes be not very deep, and the pikes fill them not very tight, the strength of the string will alter the centre holes. Muson, Mech. Ex.

I do not like this running knot, it holds too tight; I may be stifled all of a sudden. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

Every joint was well grooved; and the door did not move on hinges, but up and down like a sash, which kept my closet so tight that very little water came in. Swift.

2. Free from fluttering rags; less than neat.

O Thomas, I'll make a loving wife;
I'll spin and card, and keep our children tight. Gay.
Drest her again genteel and neat,
And rather tight than great. Swift.

3. Handy; adroit.

My queen's a squire
More tight at this than thou. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

A tight maid, ere he for wine can ask,
Guesses his meaning, and unloils the flask. Dryden, Juv.
The girl was a tight clever wench as any. Arbuthnot.

TIGHT.* pret. of To tie. Obsolete.

And thereunto a great long chaine he tight,
With which he drew him forth even in his own despiight. Spenser, F. Q.

To TIGHTEN. v. a. [from tight.] To straiten; to make close.

TIGHTER. n. s. [from tighten.] A riband or string by which women straiten their cloaths.

TR'IGHTLY.† adv. [from tight.]

1. Closely; not loosely.
2. Neatly; not idly; briskly; cleverly; adroitly.

Hold, sirrah, bear you these letters tightly;
Sail, like my pinnace, to these golden shores.

Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

Handle your pruning-knife with dexterity: tightly, I say, go tightly to your business; you have cost me much.

Dryden, Don Sebast.

TR'IGHTNESS. n. s. [from tight.]

1. Closeness; not looseness.

The bones are inflexible, which arises from the greatness of the number of corpuscles that compose them, and the firmness

They break up counters, doors and tills,

And leave the empty chests in view.

Swift.

TILL.† prep. [til, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Mr.
Horne Tooke has said, that we always use from
(and from only) for the beginning either of time or motion: but for the termination we apply sometimes to, and sometimes till: to, indifferently either to place or time; but till to time only, and never to place. Thus we may say, from morn to night, or from morn till night: but we cannot say, from Turkey till England. Div. of Purley, i. 348. — Mr. Tooke had forgotten our old language, and knew not that till is commonly used in the sense of to, in the north of England. "They all gon home
til Athens." Chaucer, Kn. Tale. Dr. Johnson was also a stranger to this employment of the word.]

1. To the time of.

His study is his till-yard, and his loves
Are brazen images of canonized saints. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been sworn brother to him; and he never saw him but once in the till-yard, and then he broke his head. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Images representing the forms of Hercules, Apollo, and Diana, he placed in the till-yard at Constantinople. Knolles.

The spouses of Hippolyte the queen,
What tills and tourneys at the feast were seen. Dryden.

In tills and tournaments the valiant strove,
By glorious deeds to purchase Emma's love. Prior.

4. A thrust.

His majesty seldom dismissed the foreigner, till he had entertained him with the slaughter of two or three of his liege

VOL. V.

subjects, whom he very dextrously put to death with the tilt of his lance. Addison, Frecholder.

5. Inclination forward: as, the vessel is a tilt, when it is inclined that the liquor may run out. [from tillen, Dutch. See the verb.]

To TILT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover like a tilt of a boat.

2. To point as in tilts.

Ajax interpos'd

His seven-fold shield, and screen'd Laertes' son,
When the insulting Trojans urg'd him sore
With tilted spears. Philips.

Now horrid slaughter reigns,
Sons against fathers tilt the fatal lance,
Careless of duty, and their native grounds
Distain with kindred blood. Philips.

3. [tillen, Dutch.] To turn up so as to run out; as, the barrel is tilted; that is, leaned forward.

To TILT.† v. n.

1. To run in tilts or tournaments.

To describe races and games,
Or tilting furniture, emblazon'd shields. Milton, P. L.

2. To fight with rapiers.

Friends all but even now; and then, but now—
Swords out and tilting one at other's breasts,
In opposition bloody. Shakspeare, Othello.

Scow'ring the watch grows out of fashion wit:

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,
Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chicken-hearted,
To fright the ladies first, and then be parted. Dryden.

It is not yet the fashion for women of quality to tilt. Collier.
Satire's my weapon, but I'm too discreet

To run a muck, and tilt at all I meet. Pope.

3. To rush as in combat; to strike as in combat.

There stood a pile
Of aged rocks, torn from the neighbouring isle,
And girt with waves, against whose naked breast
The surges tilted. Browne, Brit. Past. B. ii. S. i.
Some say the spirits tilt so violently, that they make holes where they strike. Collier.

4. To play unsteadily.

The floating vessel swam
Uplifted; and secure with beaked prow
Rode tilting o'er the waves. Milton, P. L.

The fleet swift tilting o'er the surges flew,
Till Grecian cliffs appear'd. Pope, Odys.

5. To fall on one side.

As the trunk of the body is kept from tilting forward by the muscles of the back, so from falling backward by those of the belly. Grew, Cosmol.

TILTER. n. s. [from tilt.] One who tilts; one who fights.

A puisny tilter, that spurs his horse on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose. Shakspeare, As you like it.

He us'd the only antique philters,
Deriv'd from old heroick tilters. Hudibras.

If war you chuse, and blood must needs be spilt here,
Let me alone to match your tilter. Granville.

TILTH.† n. s. [from till; Sax. tilð.] Husbandry; culture; tillage; tilled ground; cultivated land. Dr. Johnson has mistakenly considered the word in Milton as an adjective; which Mr. Mason also has remarked.

Bourn; bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none;
No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil, Shakspeare, Tempest.

Her plenteous womb
Expresseth its full tilth and husbandry. Shakspeare.

Give the fallow lands their seasons and their tilth. Drayton.
He beheld a field,

Part arable and tilth; whereon were sheaves
New reap'd. Milton, P. L.

TIMBER.† n. s. [timber, Sax. from timbrjan, to build; timbrian, Goth. the same.]

1. Wood fit for building.

I learn'd of lighter timber cotes to frame,
Such as might save my sheep and me from shame. Spenser.
For the body of the ships no nation doth equal England for the oaken timber wherewith to build them; but there must be a great providence used, that our ship-timber be not unnecessarily wasted. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

The straw was laid below,
Of chips and sere wood was the second row;
The third of greens, and timber newly fell'd. Dryden.

There are hardly any countries that are destitute of timber of their own growth. Woodward.

Upon these walls they plant quick and timber trees, which thrive exceedingly. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Who set the twigs, shall he remember,
That is in haste to sell the timber?
And what shall of thy woods remain,
Except the box that threw the main? Prior.

2. The main trunk of a tree.

We take
From every tree, lop, bark, and part o'the timber,
And though we leave it with a root thus hackt,
The air will drink the sap. Shakspeare.

3. The main beams of a fabrick.

4. Materials, ironically.

Such dispositions are the very errors of human nature, and yet they are the fittest timber to make politicks of, like to knee timber, that is good for ships to be tossed, but not for houses that shall stand firm. Bacon.

To T<sup>Y</sup>MBER. v. n. [from the noun.] To light on a tree. A cant word.

The one took up in a thicket of brush-wood, and the other timbered upon a tree hard by. L' Estrange.

To T<sup>Y</sup>MBER. v. a. To furnish with beams or timber.

T<sup>Y</sup>MBERED. † adj. [from timber; timbré, Fr.] Built;
formed; contrived.

His bark is stoutly timber'd, and his pilot
Of very expert and approv'd allowance. Shakspeare, Othello.
A goodly timber'd fellow;

Valiant, no doubt. Beaum. and Fl. Mad Lover.

He left the succession to his second son; not because he thought him the best timbered to support it. Wotton.

Many heads that undertake learning were never squared nor timbered for it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

T<sup>Y</sup>MBERSOW. n. s. A worm in wood; perhaps the wood louse.

Divers creatures, though they be loathsome to take, are of this kind; as earth worms, timbersows, snails. Bacon.

TIMBREL. † n. s. [Dr. Johnson gives the French timbre, as the derivation. But timbre means the bell of a clock, or a hall-bell. Timbrel is perhaps a corruption of tambour, or tambourine, written also timburine.] A kind of musical instrument played by pulsation.

The damsels they delight,
When they their timbrels smite,
And thereunto dance and carol sweet. Spenser, Epithal.

In their hands sweet timbrels all upheld on hight. Spenser.

Praise with timbrels, organs, flutes;
Praise with violins and lutes. Sandys, Paraph.

For her through Egypt's fruitful clime renown'd,
Let weeping Nilus hear the timbrel sound. Pope, Statius.

T<sup>Y</sup>MBRELL. \ adj.* [from timbrel.] Sung to the sound of the timbrel.

In vain with timbrell'd anthems dark
The sable-stoled sorcerers bear his worshipt ark.
Milton, Ode Nativ.

T<sup>Y</sup>MBURINE. \ n. s.* See TAMBOURINE.

TIME. † n. s. [tim, tima, Sax. tima, Icel. tym, Erse;
timme, Swedish.]

1. The measure of duration.

This consideration of duration, as set out by certain periods, and marked by certain measures or epochs, is that which most properly we call time. Locke.

Time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand,
But with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps the incomer. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Come what come may,
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day. Shakspeare.
Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross exhalament, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scale. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Time, which consisteth of parts, can be no part of infinite duration, or of eternity; for then there would be infinite time past to-day, which to-morrow will be more than infinite.
Time is one thing, and infinite duration is another. Grew.

2. Space of time.

Daniel desired that he would give him time, and that he would shew him the interpretation. Dan. ii. 16.

If a law be enacted to continue for a certain time, when that time is elapsed, the law ceaseth without any farther abrogation. White.

He for the time remain'd stupidly good. Milton.
No time is allowed for digressions. Swift.

3. Interval.

Pomanders, and knots of powders, you may have continually in your hand; whereas perfumes you can take but at times.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. Life considered as employed, or destined to em- ployment.

A great devourer of his time, was his agency for men of quality. Fell, Life of Hammond.

All ways of holy living, all instances, and all kinds of virtue, lie open to those who are masters of themselves, their time,
and their fortune. Law.

5. Season; proper time.

To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose.
Ecclus. iii. 1.

They were cut down out of time, whose foundation was overflowed with a flood. Job, xxii. 16.

He found nothing but leaves on it; for the time of figs was not yet. St. Mar. xi. 13.

Knowing the time, that it is high time to awake out of sleep.
Rom. xiii. 11.

Short were her marriage joys; for in the prime
Of youth her lord expir'd before his time. Dryden.

I hope I come in time, if not to make,
At least, to save your fortune and your honour. Dryden.

The time will come when we shall be forced to bring our evil ways to remembrance, and then consideration will do us little good. Calamy, Sermon.

6. A considerable space of duration; continuance; process of time.

Fight under him, there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade:

And when in service your best days are spent,
In time you may command a regiment. Dryden, Juv.

In time the mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, ideas of reflection. Locke.

One imagines, that the terrestrial matter which is showered down along with rain enlarges the bulk of the earth, and that it will in time bury all things under ground. Woodward.

I have resolved to take time, and, in spite of all misfortunes,
'to write you, at intervals, a long letter. Swift.

7. Age; part of duration distinct from other parts.

They shall be given into his hand until a time and times.
Dan. vii. 25.

If we should impute the heat of the season unto the cooperation of any stars with the sun, it seems more favourable for our times to ascribe the same unto the constellation of Leo.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

The way to please being to imitate nature, the poets and the painters, in ancient times, and in the best ages, have studied her. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

8. Past time.

I was the man in th' moon when time was. Shakspeare.

9. Early time. In this sense time seems, as Mr. Bag- shaw also has observed, barbarously employed like plenty for plentiful. Ray writes timely enough:

"Many words, had they come timely enough, might have been useful to me." Pref. to his Collect. of Engl. Words.

Stanley at Bosworth field, though he came time enough to save his life, yet he staid long enough to endanger it. Bacon.
If they acknowledge repentance and a more strict obedience to be one time or other necessary, they imagine it is time enough yet to set about these duties. Rogers.

10. Time considered as affording opportunity.

The earl lost no time, but marched day and night. Clarendon.
He continued his delights till all the enemies' horse were passed through his quarters; nor did then pursue them in any time. Clarendon.

I would ask any man that means to repent at his death, how he knows he shall have an hour's time for it.

Wh. Duty of Man.

Time is lost, which never will renew,
While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
Surveying nature. Dryden, Virg.

11. Particular quality of some part of duration.

Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky. Shakespeare.

All the prophets in their age, the times
Of great Messiah sing. Milton, P. L.

If any reply, that the times and manners of men will not bear such a practice, that is an answer from the mouth of a professed time server. South.

12. Particular time.

Give order, that no sort of person
Have, any time, recourse unto the princes. Shakespeare.

When that company died, what time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men. Num. xxvi. 10.

The worst on me must light, when time shall be. Milton, P. L.

A time will come when my maturer muse,
In Cæsar's wars a nobler theme shall chuse. Dryden.

These reservoirs of snow they cut, distributing them to several shops, that from time to time supply Naples. Addison.

13. Hour of childbirth.

She intended to stay till delivered; for she was within one month of her time. Clarendon.

The first time I saw a lady dressed in one of these petticoats, I blamed her for walking abroad when she was so near her time; but soon I found all the modish part of the sex as far gone as herself. Addison, Spect.

14. Repetition of any thing, or mention with reference to repetition.

Four times he cross'd the car of night. Milton, P. L.

Many times I have read of the like attempts begun, but never of any finished. Heylin.

Every single particle would have a sphere of void space around it many hundred thousand million million times bigger than the dimensions of that particle. Bentley.

Lord Oxford, I have now the third time mentioned in this letter, expects you. Swift.

15. Musical measure.

Musick do I hear!
Ha, ha! keep time. How sour sweet musick is
When time is broke, and no proportion kept. Shakespeare.

You by the help of tune and time
Can make that song which was but rhyme. Waller.

On their exalted wings
To the celestial orbs they climb,
And with the harmonious spheres keep time. Denham.

Heroes who o'ercome, or die,
Have their hearts hung extremely high;
The strings of which in battle's heat
Against their very corslets beat;
Keep time with their own trumpet's measure,
And yield them most excessive pleasure. Prior.

To TIME. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adapt to the time; to bring or do at a proper time.

There is no greater wisdom than well to time the beginnings and onsets of things. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It is hard to believe that where his most numerous miracles were afforded, they should all want the advantage of the congruous timings to give them their due weight and efficacy. Hammond.

The timing of things is a main point in the dispatch of all affairs. L' Estrange.

This 'tis to have a virtue out of season. Dryden.

Mercy is good, but kings mistake its timing. Dryden.
A man's conviction should be strong, and so well timed, that worldly advantages may seem to have no share in it. Addison.

2. To regulate as to time.

To the same purpose old Epopeus spoke,
Who overlook'd the oars, and tim'd the stroke. Addison.

3. To measure harmonically.

He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was tim'd with dying cries. Shakespeare, Coriol.

TIMEFUL. adj. [time and full.] Seasonable; timely; early.

If this arch politician find in his pupils any remorse, any feeling of God's future judgements, he persuades them that God hath so great need of men's souls, that he will accept them at any time, and upon any condition; interrupting, by his vigilant endeavours, all offer of timeful return towards God. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

TIMEKEEPER.* } n. s. A watch or clock that keeps TIMEPIECE. } good time. Ash.

This rate will now be used for finding the longitude by the time-keeper. Cook and King's Voyage.

Messieurs Wales and Bailey made observations on Drake's Island to ascertain the latitude, longitude, and for putting the time-pieces or watches in motion. Cook's Voyage.

TIMELESS.† adj. [from time.]

1. Unseasonable; done at an improper time.

Nor fits it to prolong the heavenly feast
Timeless, indecent, but retire to rest. Pope, Odys.

Hence you phantastick postillers in song,
My text defeats your art, 'tis nature's tongue,
Scorns all her tinsoil'd metaphors of pelf,
Illustrated by nothing but herself. Cleaveland.

She, tinsell'd o'er in robes of varying hues,
With self-applause her wild creation views,
Sees momentary monsters rise and fall,
And with her own fool's colours gilds them all. Pope.

TINT. n. s. [teinte, Fr. tinta, Ital.] A dye; a colour.

Whether thy hand strike out some free design,
Where life awakes, and dawns at ev'ry line;
Or blend in beauteous tint the colour'd mass,
And from the canvas call the mimic face. Pope.

The virtues of most men will only blow,
Like coy auriculas, in Alpine snow:
Transplant them to the equinoctial line,
Their vigour sickens, and their tints decline. Harte.

Though it be allowed that elaborate harmony of colouring, a brilliancy of tints, a soft and gradual transition from one to another, present to the eye what an harmonious concert of music does to the ear, it must be remembered, that painting is not merely a gratification of sight. Reynolds.

To TINT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To tinge; to colour. Modern.

TINTAMA'R.* n. s. [tintamarre, old French; from marre, a mattock; "pour houer la vigne, Gr. μαρρὸν: c'est de là qu'on fait venir tintamarre, à cause du bruit que font quelquefois les vigneronns en tintant sur leur marre." Menage, and Morin. Cotgrave calls it "a clashing or crashing, a rustling or jingling noise made in the fall of wooden stuff, or vessels of metal; also, a black santus, the loud wrangling, or jangling outcries of scolds or scolding fellows; any extreme or horrible din."] A confused noise; a hideous outcry. The word is noticed by Coles in his Dict. 1685.

Squalling hautboys, false-stopped violoncellos, buzzing bassoons,—all ill-tuned. The tintamarre, which this kind of squeaking and scraping and grumbling produces, I will not pain my reader by bringing stronger to his recollection.

Tithe so as thy cattle the lord do not strike.

Tusser.

TITHEFRE'E. * adj. Exempt from payment of tithe.

All estates subject to tithes were transmitted, or purchased, subject to this incumbrance; for which the purchaser must have paid a greater price, and the farmer a higher rent, if they had been tithe-free.

Abp. Hort, Charge to the Clergy.

TITHER. n. s. [from tithe.] One who gathers tithes.

TITHING. † n. s. [tīdīng, Saxon.]

1. Tithing is the number or company of ten men with their families knit together in a society, all of them being bound to the king for the peaceable and good behaviour of each of their society: of these companies there was one chief person, who, from his office, was called (toothingman) tithingman; but now he is nothing but a constable.

Cowel.

Poor Tom, who is whipt from tithing to tithing, and stock punished and imprisoned.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Tithe; tenth part due to the priest.

Though vicar be bad, or the parson evil,
Go not for thy tithing thyself to the devil.

Tusser.

TITHINGMAN. n. s. [tīking and man.] A petty peace-officer; an under-constable.

His hundred is not at his command further than his prince's service; and also every tithingman may controul him.

To TITILLATE. v. n. [titillo, Lat.] To tickle.

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct to ev'ry atom just,
The pungent grains of titillating dust.

Pope.

TITILLATION. n. s. [titillation, French; titillatio, Lat. from titillate.]

1. The act of tickling.

Tickling caused laughter: the cause may be the emission of the spirits, and so of the breath, by a flight from titillation.

Bacon.

2. The state of being tickled.

In sweets, the acid particles seem so attenuated in the oil as only to produce a small and grateful titillation.

Arbuthnot.

3. Any slight or petty pleasure.

The delights which result from these nobler entertainments our cool thoughts need not be ashamed of, and which are dogged by no such sad sequels as are the products of those titillations, that reach no higher than the senses.

Glanville.

TITLARK. n. s. A bird. See TIT, and TITMOUSE.

The smaller birds do the like in their seasons; as the leverock, titlark, and linnet.

Walton.

TITTLE. † n. s. [titul, Saxon; titelle, old Fr. titulus, Latin.]

1. A general head comprising particulars.

Three draw the experiments of the former four into titles and tables for the better drawing of observations; these we call compilers.

Bacon.

Among the many preferences that the laws of England have above others, I shall single out two particular titles, which give a handsome specimen of their excellencies above other laws in other parts or titles of the same.

Hale.

2. An appellation of honour.

VOL. V.

To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His mansion, and his titles, in a place
From whence himself does fly.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Man over men

He made not lord: such title to himself
Reserving.

Milton, P. L.

3. A name; an appellation.

My name's Macbeth.

— The devil himself could not pronounce a title

More hateful to mine ear.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Ill worthy I such title should belong

To me transgressor.

Milton, P. L.

4. The first page of a book, telling its name, and generally its subject; an inscription.

This man's brow, like to a title leaf,

Foretels the nature of a tragick volume.

Shakspeare.

Our adversaries encourage a writer who cannot furnish out so much as a title page with propriety.

Swift.

Others with wishful eyes on glory look,

When they have got their picture towards a book;

Or pompous title, like a gaudy sign

Meant to betray dull sots to wretched wine.

Young.

5. A claim of right.

Let the title of a man's right be called in question; are we not bold to rely and build upon the judgment of such as are famous for their skill in the laws?

Hooker.

Is a man impoverished by purchase? it is because he paid his money for a lye, and took a bad title for a good.

South.

'Tis our duty

Such monuments, as we can build, to raise;

Lest all the world prevent what we should do,

And claim a title in him by their praise.

Dryden.

If there were no laws to protect them, there were no living in this world for good men; and in effect there would be no laws, if it were a sin in them to try a title, or right themselves by them.

Kettlewell.

To revenge their common injuries, though you had an undoubted title by your birth, you had a greater by your courage.

Dryden.

Conti would have kept his title to Orange.

Addison.

O the discretion of a girl! she will be a slave to any thing that has not a title to make her one.

Southern.

To TITTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To entitle; to name; to call.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives

Religious, titled them the sons of God,

Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame,

Ignobly!

Milton, P. L.

TITLELESS. † adj. [from title.] Wanting a name or appellation. Not now in use.

A titleless tiraunt

And an outlaw.

Chaucer, Mancip. Tale.

He was a kind of nothing, titleless,

Till he had forg'd himself a name o' th' fire

Of burning Rome.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

We should have been pleased to have seen our own names at the bottom of the titlepage.

Dryden.

TITMOUSE, or tit. n. s. [tijt, Dutch, a chick, or small bird; titlingier, Icelandick, a little bird: tit signifies little in the Teutonick dialects.] A small bird.

The nightingale is sovereign of song,

Before him sits the titmouse silent by,

And I unfit to thrust in skilful throng,

Should Colin make judge of my foolerie.

Spenser.

The titmouse and the peckers' hungry brood,

And Progne with her bosom stain'd in blood.

Dryden.

To TITTER. † v. n. [formed, I suppose, from the sound. Dr. Johnson. — Rather perhaps from teitr, Icel. very merry.] To laugh with restraint; to laugh without much noise.

In flow'd at once a gay embroider'd race,

And tit ring push'd the pedants off the place.

Pope.

The swain, mistrustless of his smutted face,
While secret laughter titter'd round the place.
Goldsmith, Deserted Village.

TIT'TER.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A restrained laugh.

The belle's shrill titter, and the squire's broad stare.
Neville, Imit. of Juv. p. 84.

2. I know not what it signifies in Tusser.

From wheat go and rake out the titters or tine,
If care be not forth, it will rise again fine. Tusser.

TIT'TLE.† n. s. [I suppose from tit. Dr. Johnson.—

German, tuttele, punctum, apex, ab obsoleto Anglo-Sax. ðyban, figere, pungere. Wachter, and Sernius.] A small particle; a point; a dot.

In the particular which concerned the church, the Scotch would never depart from a tittle. Clarendon.

Angels themselves disdaining

To approach thy temple, give thee in command
What to the smallest tittle thou shalt say
To thy adorers. Milton, P. R.

They thought God and themselves linked in so fast a covenant, that although they never performed their part, God was yet bound to make good every tittle of his. South.

Ned Fashion hath been bred about court, and understands to a tittle all the punctilios of a drawing-room. Swift.

You are not advanced one tittle towards the proof of what you intend. Waterland.

TIT'TLETATTLE.† n. s. [A word formed from tattle by a ludicrous reduplication.]

1. Idle talk; prattle; empty gabble.

As the foe drew near
With love, and joy, and life, and dear,
Our don, who knew this tittletattle,
Did, sure as trumpet, call to battle. Prior.

For every idle tittletattle that went about, Jack was suspected for the author. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

2. An idle talker.

Impertinent tittle-tattles, who have no other variety in their discourse than that of talking slower or faster. Tatler, No. 157.

To TIT'TLETATTLE.† v. n. [from tattle.] To prate idly.

You must be tittle-tattling before all our guests!
Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

TIT'TLETA'TTLING.† n. s. The act of prating idly.

You are full in your tittletattlings of Cupid: here is Cupid, and there is Cupid: I will tell you now what a good old woman told me. Sidney.

To TIT'TUBATE.* v. n. [titubo, Lat.] To stumble.

This is an old verb in Cockeram's vocabulary.

Dr. Johnson uses it in one of his definitions of to trip.

TIT'TUBA'TION. n. s. [titubo, Lat.] The act of stumbling.

TIT'TULAR. adj. [titulaire, Fr. from titulus, Lat.]

Nominal; having or conferring only the title.

They would deliver up the kingdom to the king of England to shadow their rebellion, and to be titular and painted head of those arms. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Thrones, virtues, powers,
If these magnifick titles yet remain,
Not merely titular. Milton, P. L.

Both Valerius and Austin were titular bishops. Ayliffe.

TIT'TULARITY. n. s. [from titular.] The state of being titular.

Julius, Augustus, and Tiberius, with great humility received the name of imperator; but their successors retain the same even in its titularity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TIT'TULARLY.* adv. [from titular.] Nominally; by title only.

The church representative is a general council; not titularly so, as the conventicle of Trent; but plenarily true, general, and lawful. Mowntagu, App. to Cæs. p. 116.

TIT'TULARY. adj. [titulaire, Fr. from titulus, Lat.]

1. Consisting in a title.

The malecontents of his kingdom have not been base nor titulary impostors, but of an higher nature. Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. Relating to a title.

William the Conqueror, howsoever he used the power of a conqueror to reward his Normans, yet mixed it with a titulary pretence grounded upon the Confessor's will. Bacon.

TIT'TULARY. n. s. [from the adj.] One that has a title or right.

The persons deputed for the celebration of these masses were neither titularies nor perpetual curates, but persons entirely conductitious. Ayliffe, Parergon.

Tr'vy. A word expressing speed, from tantivy, the note of a hunting-horn.

In a bright moon-shine while winds whistle loud,
Tivy, tivy, tivy, we mount and we fly,
All rocking in a downy white cloud:
And lest our leap from the sky should prove too far,
We slide on the back of a new-falling star. Dryden.

TO.† adv. [to, Saxon; te, Dutch.]

1. A particle coming between two verbs, and noting the second as the object of the first.

The delay of our hopes teaches us to mortify our desires. Smalridge.

2. It notes the intention.

4. After an adjective, it notes its object.

We ready are to try our fortunes
To the last man. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The lawless sword his children's blood shall shed,
Increas'd for slaughter, born to beg their bread. Sandys.

5. Noting futurity.

It is not blood and bones that can be conscious of their own hardness and redness; and we are still to seek for something else in our frame that receives those impressions. Bentley.

6. { To and again. } Backward and forward.

Ismay binds and looseth souls condemn'd to woe,
And sends the devils on errands to and fro. Fairfax.

The spirits perverse
With easy intercourse pass to and fro,
To tempt or punish mortals. Milton, P. L.

Dress it not till the seventh day, and then move the joint to and fro. Wise man, Surgery.

Masses of marble, originally beat off from the strata of the neighbouring rocks, rolled to and again till they were rounded to the form of pebbles. Woodward on Fossils.

The winds in distant regions blow,
Moving the world of waters to and fro. Addison.

The mind, when turn'd adrift, no rules to guide,
Drives at the mercy of the wind and tide;

Fancy and passion toss it to and fro,
A while torment, and then quite sink in woe. Young.

7. Quite; entirely; much; very: preceding a verb, participle, or adjective: formerly much in use, now obsolete. Swift is the last whom I find to have used it, in a passage of no great delicacy. Dr. Johnson has overpassed this usage of to; the knowledge of which is necessary in order to understand our ancient writers.

Shronke with heat the ladies eke to-brent. Chaucer, Fl. and Leaf.

Such myster saying me seemeth to-mirke. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Let them all encircle him about,
And, fairy-like, to-pinch the unclean knight. Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

To. preposition.

1. Noting motion towards: opposed to from.

With that she to him afresh, and surely would have put out his eyes. Sidney.

And to't they go like lightning. Shakespeare.

Give not over so; to him again, entreat him,
Kneel down before him. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

I'll to him again in the name of Brook; he'll tell me all his purpose. Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

I'll to the woods among the happier brutes:
Come, let's away. Smith.

2. Noting accord or adaptation.

Thus they with sacred thought
Mov'd on in silence to soft pipes. Milton, P. L.

3. Noting address or compellation.

To you, my noble lord of Westmorland.
— I pledge your grace. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Here's to you all, gentlemen, and let him that's good natur'd in his drink pledge me. Denham, Sophy.

Now to you, Raymond: can you guess no reason Why I repose such confidence in you? Dryden.

4. Noting attention or application.

Turn out, you rogue! how like a beast you lie:
Go buckle to the law. Dryden, Juv.

Sir Roger's kindness extends to their children's children. Addison.

5. Noting addition or accumulation.

Wisdom he has, and to his wisdom courage;
Temper to that, and unto all success. Denham, Sophy.

6. Noting a state or place whither any one goes.

Take you some company and away to horse. Shakespeare.
He sent his coachman's grandchild to prentice. Addison.

7. Noting opposition.

No foe unpunish'd in the fighting field,
Shall dare thee foot to foot with sword and shield. Dryden.

8. Noting amount.

There were to the number of three hundred horse, and as many thousand foot English. Bacon, War with Spain.

9. Noting proportion.

Enoch, whose days were, though many in respect of ours, yet scarce as three to nine in comparison of theirs with whom he lived. Hooker.

With these bars against me,
And yet to win her — all the world to nothing. Shakespeare.

Twenty to one offend more in writing too much than too little; even as twenty to one fall into sickness rather by overmuch fulness than by any lack. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

The burial must be by the smallness of the proportion as fifty to one; or it must be holpen by somewhat which may fix the silver never to be restored when it is incorporated. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

With a funnel filling bottles; to their capacity, they will all be full. B. Jonson.

Physicians have two women-patients to one man. Graunt.
When an ambassador is dispatched to any foreign state, he shall be allowed to the value of a shilling a day. Addison.

Among the ancients the weight of oil was to that of wine as nine to ten. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Supposing them to have an equal share, the odds will be three to one on their side. Swift.

10. Noting possession or appropriation.

Still a greater difficulty upon translators rises from the peculiarities every language hath to itself. Felton.

11. Noting perception.

The flower itself is glorious to behold,
Sharp to the taste. Dryden, Virg.

12. Noting the subject of an affirmation.

I trust, I may not trust thee; for thy word
Is but the vain breath of a common man:
Believe me, I do not believe thee, man;
I have a king's oath to the contrary. Shakespeare, K. John.

13. In comparison of.

All that they did was piety to this. B. Jonson.
There is no fool to the sinner, who every moment ventures his soul. Tillotson.

14. As far as.

Some Americans, otherwise of quick parts, could not count to one thousand, nor had any distinct idea of it, though they could reckon very well to twenty. Locke.

Coffee exhales in roasting to the abatement of near one-fourth of its weight. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

15. Noting intention.

This the consul sees, yet this man lives!
Partakes the publick cares; and with his eye
Marks and points out each man of us to slaughter. B. Jonson.

16. After an adjective it notes the object.

Draw thy sword in right.
I'll draw it as apparent to the crown,
And in that quarrel use it to the death. Shakespeare.
Fate and the dooming gods are deaf to tears. Dryden.
All were attentive to the godlike man,
When from his lofty couch he thus began. Dryden.

17. Noting obligation.

The Rabbins subtly distinguish between our duty to God, and to our parents. Holyday.
Almanzor is taxed with changing sides, and what tie has on him to the contrary? He is not born their subject, and he is injured by them to a very high degree. Dryden.

18. Respecting.

He's walk'd the way of nature;
And to our purposes he lives no more. Shakespeare.
The effects of such a division are pernicious to the last degree, not only with regard to those advantages which they give the common enemy, but to those private evils which they produce in every particular. Addison, Spect.

19. Noting extent.

From the beginning to the end all is due to supernatural grace. Hammond.

20. Towards.

She stretch'd her arms to heav'n. Dryden.

21. Noting presence.

She still beareth him an invincible hatred, and revileth him to his face. Swift.

22. Noting effect; noting consequence.

Factions carried too high are much to the prejudice of the authority of princes. Bacon.
He was wounded transverse the temporal muscle, and bleeding almost to death. Wiseman.
By the disorder in the retreat, great numbers were crowded to death. Clarendon.

Ingenious to their ruin, ev'ry age
Improves the act and instruments of rage. Waller.

Under how hard a fate are women born,
Priz'd to their ruin, or expos'd to scorn! Waller.

To prevent the aspersion of the Roman majesty, the offender was whipt to death. Dryden.

Thus, to their fame, when finish'd was the fight,
The victors from their lofty steeds alight. Dryden.

Oh frail estate of human things,
Now to our cost your emptiness we know. Dryden.

A British king obliges himself by oath to execute justice in mercy, and not to exercise either to the total exclusion of the other. Addison.

The abuse reigns chiefly in the country, as I found to my vexation when I was last there in a visit I made to a neighbour. Swift.

Why with malignant eulogies increase
The people's fears, and praise me to my ruin? Smith.
It must be confessed to the reproach of human nature, that this is but too just a picture of itself. Broome on the Odyssey.

23. After a verb to notes the object.

Give me some wine; fill full.
I drink to th' general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Had the methods of education been directed to their right end, this so necessary could not have been neglected. Locke.

This lawfulness of judicial process appears from these legal courts erected to minister to it in the apostles' days. Kettlewell.
Many of them have exposed to the world the private misfortunes of families. Pope.

24. Noting the degree.

This weather-glass was so placed in the cavity of a small receiver, that only the slender part of the pipe, to the height of four inches, remained exposed to the open air. Boyle.

Tell her thy brother languishes to death. Addison.

A crow, though hatched under a hen, and who never has seen any of the works of its kind, makes its nest the same, to the laying of a stick, with all the nests of that species. Addison.

If he employs his abilities to the best advantage, the time will come when the Supreme Governor of the world shall proclaim his worth before men and angels. Addison, Spect.

25. Before day, to notes the present day; before morrow, the day next coming; before night, either the present night, or night next coming.

Banquo, thy soul's flight,

If it find heav'n, must find it out to night. Shakespeare.

To day they chas'd the boar. Otway.

This ought rather to be called a full purpose of committing sin to day, than a resolution of leaving it to morrow. Calamy.

26. To day, to night, to morrow, are used, not very properly, as substantives in the nominative and other cases.

To morrow, and to morrow, and to morrow,

Creeps in this petty pace from day to day;

And all our yesterdays have lighted fools

The way to dusky death. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The father of Solomon's house will have private conference with one of you the next day after to morrow. Bacon.

To day is ours, why do we fear?

To day is ours, we have it here;

Let's banish bus'ness, banish sorrow,

To the gods belongs to morrow. Cowley.

To morrow will deliver all her charms

Into my arms, and make her mine for ever. Dryden.

For what to morrow shall disclose,

May spoil what you to night propose:

England may change, or Cloe stray;

Love and life are for to day. Prior.

TOAD. n. s. [taðe, Saxon.] A paddock; an animal resembling a frog; but the frog leaps, the toad crawls: the toad is accounted venomous, perhaps without reason.

From th' extremest upward of thy head,

To the descent and dust below thy foot,

A most toad-spotted traitor. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

I had rather be a toad,

And live upon the vapour of a dungeon,

Than keep a corner in the thing I love

For other's use. Shakespeare, Othello.

In the great plague there were seen, in divers ditches about London, many toads that had tails three inches long, whereas toads usually have no tails. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In hollow caverns vermin make abode,

The hissing serpent, and the swelling toad. Dryden.

TO'ADEATER.* n. s. A contemptuous term of modern times for a fawning parasite, a servile sycophant.

I was reduced to be as miserable a toadeater as any in Great Britain, which in the strictest sense of a word is a servant, except that the toadeater has the honour of dining with my lady, and the misfortune of receiving no wages.

Sir C. Hanbury Williams.

TO'ADFISH. n. s. A kind of sea-fish.

TO'ADFLAX. n. s. A plant.

TO'ADISH.* adj. [from toad.] Venomous; like a toad.

Your toadish tongue would never have sought to have envenomed virtue. Stafford, Niobe, P. II. (1611), p. 76.

A speckled, toadish, or poison-fish, as the seamen from experience named it. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 384.

TO'ADSTONE. n. s. [toad and stone.] A concretion supposed to be found in the head of a toad.

The toadstone presumed to be found in the head of that animal is not a thing impossible. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO'ADSTOOL. n. s. [toad and stool.] A plant like a mushroom.

The grisly todestool grown there mought I see,
And loathed paddocks lording on the same.

Spenser.

Another imperfect plant like a mushroom, but sometimes as broad as a hat, called toadstool, is not esculent. Bacon.

To TOAST.† v. a. [toste, old French, Lacombe; torreo, tostum, Latin.]

1. To dry or heat at the fire.

The earth whereof the grass is soon parched with the sun, and toasted, is commonly forced earth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To allure mice I find no other magick than to draw out a piece of toasted cheese. Brown.

2. To name when a health is drunk. See the noun.

Several popish gentlemen toasted many loyal healths.

Addison.

We'll try the empire you so long have boasted;

And if we are not prais'd, we'll not be toasted. Prior.

To TOAST.* v. n. To give a toast or health to be drunk.

Let not both houses of parliament have law dictated to them by the Constitutional, the Revolution, and the Unitarian societies. These insect reptiles, whilst they go only caballing and toasting, only fill us with disgust.

Burke, Sp. on the Pet. of the Unitarians.

TOAST.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Bread dried before the fire.

You are both as rheumatick as two dry toasts; you cannot one bear with another's infirmities. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Every third day take a small toast of manchet, dipped in oil of sweet almonds new drawn, and sprinkled with loaf sugar.

Bacon, Phys. Rem.

2. Bread dried and put into liquor.

Where's then the saucy boat

Co-rival'd greatness? or to harbour fled,

Or made a toast for Neptune? Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

Some squire, perhaps, you take delight to rack;

Whose game is whisk, whose treat a toast in sack. Pope.

3. A celebrated woman whose health is often drunk.

Dr. Johnson — This was at first the meaning; the reason of which is now given in the example from the Tatler. It is now applied to publick characters, or private friends, whose healths we propose to drink.

It happened that, on a publick day, a celebrated beauty of those times [K. Charles II.] was in the Cross-Bath, [at Bath,] and one of the crowd of her admirers took a glass of the water, in which the fair one stood, and drank her health to the company. There was in the place a gay fellow half fuddled, who offer'd to jump in, and swore though he liked not the liquor, he would have the toast. He was opposed in his resolution; yet this whim gave foundation to the present honour which is done to the lady we mention in our liquor, who has ever since been called a toast. Tatler, No. 24.

I shall likewise mark out every toast, the club in which she was elected, and the number of votes that were on her side.

Addison.

Say, why are beauties prais'd and honour'd most,

The wise man's passion, and the vain man's toast?

Why deck'd with all that land and sea afford,

Why angels call'd, and angel-like ador'd? Pope.

To'ASTER. n. s. [from toast.] One who toasts.

We simple toasters take delight

To see our women's teeth look white;

And ev'ry saucy ill-bred fellow

Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow. Prior.

TOBA'CCO.† n. s. [from Tobacco or Tobago in America. It is said not to have been known in Europe before 1560.]

The flower of the tobacco consists of one leaf, is funnel-shaped, and divided at the top into five deep segments, which expand like a star; the ovary becomes an oblong roundish membranaceous fruit, which is divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, and is filled with small roundish seeds. Miller.

T O D

Whether it divine tobacco were,
Or panachæa. Spenser, F. Q. iii. v. 22.

It is a planet now I see;
And, if I err not, by his proper
Figure, that's like a tobacco-stopper. Hudibras.

Bread or tobacco may be neglected; but reason at first recommends their trial, and custom makes them pleasant. Locke.

Salts are to be drained out of the clay by water, before it be fit for the making tobacco-pipes or bricks. Woodward.

TOBACCONING.* adj. Smoking tobacco.

Neither was it any news on this guild-day to have the cathedral, now open on all sides, to be filled with musketeers, waiting for the major's return, drinking and tobaccoing as freely as if it had been turned alehouse. Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

TOBACCONIST.† n. s. [from tobacco.] A preparer and vender of tobacco.

Hence it is, that the lungs of the tobaccoist are rotted.
B. Jonson, Barth. Fair.

TO'CSIN.* n. s. [tocsein, old Fr. "cloche d'alarme; de Lat. tangere signum." Roquefort.] An alarm-bell.

The priests went up into the steeple, and rang the bells backward, which they call tockaine, whereupon the people of the suburbs flocked together. Fulke, Answ. to P. Frarine, (1580,) p. 52.

TOD.† n. s. [totte haar, a lock of hair, German.
Skinner. I believe rightly; totte, Swed. mani-pulus lini aut lanæ. Serenius. Mr. G. Chalmers notices tod as Saxon also, denoting a quantity of wool. Gloss. Sir Dav. Lyndsay's Works.]

1. A bush; a thick shrub. Obsolete.

Within the ivie tod,
(There shrouded was the little god.)

I heard a busy bustling. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. A certain weight of wool, twenty-eight pounds.
Every 'leven wether tods; every tod yields—pound and odd shilling. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

3. A fox: a common word in Scotland. Mr. Chalmers thinks the animal may have been so named from his bushy tail.

The wolf, the tod, the brock,
Or other vermin. B. Jonson, Pan's Anniv.

To Tod.* v. n. To weigh; to produce a tod: the word, in the following passage, has been rightly expounded to mean, that the wool of eleven sheep would weigh a tod. Ritson.

Every 'leven wether tods; every tod yields—pound and odd shilling. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Dealers in wool say, twenty sheep ought to tod fifty pounds of wool. Dr. Farmer.

To To'DDLE.* v. n. [See To DADDLE.] To saunter about: it implies feebleness, quasi tottle. North.
Pegge.

To'DDY.* n. s.

1. A tree in the East Indies.

The toddy tree is not unlike the date or palm.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 29.

2. Liquor extracted from the tree.

The wine, or toddy, is got by piercing the tree, and putting a jar or pitcher under, so as the liquor may distil into it.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 29.

Toddy—is a liquor wholesome enough, if moderately drunk; yet excess disposes the body to dangerous fluxes.
Ibid. p. 34.

3. In low language, a kind of punch, or mixture of spirits and water.

T O I

TOE. n. s. [ta, Saxon; teen, Dutch.] The divided extremities of the feet; the fingers of the feet.

Come all you spirits,
And fill me from the crown to the toe, topful
Of direst cruelty. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Sport that wrinkled care derides,
And laughter holding both his sides;
Come and trip it as you go,
On the light fantastick toe. Milton, L' All.

Last to enjoy her sense of feeling,
A thousand little nerves she sends Quite to our toes, and fingers' ends. Prior.

TOFO'RE. adv. [tofo'ran, Saxon.] Before. Obsolete.

It is an epilogue to make plain
Some obscure precedence that hath tofore been said. Shakspeare.

TOFO'RE.* prep. [tofo'p, Sax.] Before. Obsolete.

So shall they depart the manor with the corn and the bacon
tofore him that hath won it. Spectator.

He, toil'd with works of war, retir'd himself
To Italy. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

TOIL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Labour; fatigue.

They live to their great, both toil and grief, where the blas-phemies of Ariens are renewed. Hooker.

Not to irksome toil, but to delight
He made us. Milton, P. L.

The love of praise, howe'er conceal'd by art,
Reigns more or less, and glows in ev'ry heart;
The proud to gain it toils and toils endure,
The modest shun it, but to make it sure. Young.

2. [toile, toiles, Fr. tela, Lat.] Any net or snare woven or meshed.

She looks like sleep,
As she would catch another Antony
In her strong toil of grace. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

He had so placed his horsemen and footmen in the woods, that he shut up the Christians as it were in a toil. Knolles.

All great spirits
Bear great and sudden change with such impatience
As a Numidian lion, when first caught,
Endures the toil that holds him. Denham, Sophy.

A fly falls into the toil of a spider.
Fantastick honour, thou hast fram'd a toil
Thyself, to make thy love thy virtues spoil. Dryden.

Subsides into a calm. Smollett, Regicide.

TOILSOME. adj. [from toil.] Laborious; weary.

This were it toilsome, yet with thee were sweet.
Milton, P. L.

While here we dwell,
What can be toilsome in these pleasant walks? Milton, P. L.
The law of the fourth commandment was not agreeable to the state of innocence; for in that happy state there was no toilsome labour for man or beast. White.

Absent or dead, still let a friend be dear,
A sigh the absent claims, the dead a tear;
Recal those nights that clos'd thy toilsome days,
Still hear thy Parnel in his living lays. Pope.

TOILSOMENESS. n. s. [from toilsome.] Wearisomeness;
laboriousness.

TOKAY.* n. s. [from Tokay, in Hungary.] A kind of wine.

The wine generally known in foreign countries by the name of tokay, is a particular kind;—it is here called "ausbruche," and is made by mixing a portion of luscious half-dried and shrivelled grapes with the common ones. Townson, Trav. in Hungary.

TOKEN.† n. s. [taikns, Goth. tacn, Sax. teycken,

Where death is sure. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

TOLD. pret. and part. pass. of tell. Mentioned; related.

The acts of God to human ears
Cannot, without process of speech, be told. Milton, P. L.

To TOLE.† v. a. [This seems to be some barbarous provincial word. Dr. Johnson.—The word is old and well authorized, though Dr. Johnson condemns it, and cites an example only from Locke.
Yet under to toll, he notices Bacon's use of the word, not without hesitation however, for invite.
Tole and toll are indeed the same word, differently spelt; meaning, in this sense, drawing on or out by degrees. See the etymology of TOLL.] To train; to draw by degrees; to decoy.

They tole nuns out of cloisters.
Fulke, Answ. to P. Frarine, (1580,) p. 19.

Voices calling me in dead of night
To make me follow, and so tole me on,
Through mire and standing pools, to find my ruin.

Fletcher, Faithf. Shepherdess.
I will not fail to give ye, readers, a present taste of him from his title, hung out like a tolling sign-post to call passengers, not simply a confutation, but "a modest confutation," with a laudatory of itself obtruded in the very first word.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.
He can tole on the tame, well-natured, easily seducible.
Hammond, Works, iv. 470.

Whatever you observe him to be more frighted at than he should, tole him on to by insensible degrees, till at last he masters the difficulty. Locke.

TOLE'DO.* n. s. [from Toledo, in Spain.] A sword of the finest Toledo temper. Swinburne.

You sold me a rapier; you told me it was a toledo.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

TO'LERABLE. adj. [tolerable, French; tolerabilis,
Latin.]

1. Supportable; that may be endured or supported.

T O L

Yourselves, who have sought them, ye so excuse, as that ye would have men to think ye judge them not allowable, but tolerable only, and to be borne with, for the furtherance of your purposes, till the corrupt estate of the church may be better reformed. Hooker.

It shall be more tolerable for Sodom in the day of judgement than for that city. St. Matth. x. 15.

Cold and heat scarce tolerable. Milton, P. L.

There is nothing of difficulty in the external performance, but what hypocrisy can make tolerable to itself. Tillotson.

2. Not excellent; not contemptible; passable.

The reader may be assured of a tolerable translation. Dryden.

Princes have it in their power to keep a majority on their side by any tolerable administration, till provoked by continual oppressions. Swift.

TOLERABLENESS. n. s. [from tolerable.] The state of being tolerable.

TOLERABLY. adv. [from tolerable.]

Sometimes are found in these laxer strata bodies that are still tolerably firm. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The person to whom this head belonged laughed frequently, and on particular occasions had acquitted himself tolerably at a ball. Addison, Spect.

TOLERANCE. n. s. [tolerancia, Lat. tolerance, Fr.] Power of enduring; act of enduring.

Diogenes one frosty morning came into the market-place shaking, to shew his tolerance; many of the people came about him, pitying him: Plato passing by, and knowing he did it to be seen, said, If you pity him indeed, let him alone to himself. Bacon, Apophth.

There wants nothing but consideration of our own eternal weal, a tolerance or endurance of being made happy here, and blessed eternally. Hammond on Fundamentals.

It admits of no tolerance, no intercommunity of sentiments.

Lowth to Warburton, p. 13.

TOLERANT. adj. [tolerans, Lat.] Favourable to toleration.

We know and lament his [Gibbon's] eagerness to throw a veil over the deformities of the heathen theology, to decorate with all the splendour of panegyric the tolerant spirit of its votaries, to degrade by disingenuous insinuation or by sarcastic satire the importance of revelation, to exhibit in the most offensive features or distortion the weaknesses and the follies of its friends, and to varnish over the cruelties and exalt the wisdom of its merciless and unrelenting enemies.

Professor White, Sermon 3.

TO TOLERATE. v. a. [tolero, Lat. tolerer, Fr.] To allow so as not to hinder; to suffer; to pass uncensured.

Inasmuch as they did resolve to remove only such things of that kind as the church might best spare, retaining the residue; their whole counsel is, in this point, utterly condemned, as having either proceeded from the blindness of those times, or from negligence, or from desire of honour and glory, or from an erroneous opinion that such things might be tolerated for a while. Hooker.

We shall tolerate flying horses, harpies, and satyrs, for these are poetical fancies, whose shaded moralities requite their substantial falsities. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Crying should not be tolerated in children. Locke.

We are fully convinced that we shall always tolerate them, but not that they will tolerate us. Swift.

TOLERA'TION. n. s. [tolero, Lat.] Allowance given to that which is not approved.

I shall not speak against the indulgence and toleration granted to these men. South.

TOLL. n. s. [This word seems derived from tollo, Lat. tol, Saxon; tol, Dutch; told, Danish; toll, Welsh; taille, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — May we not much more probably derive toll, pecunia adnumerata, from tell, adnumerare, as dole from deal? The toll of a bell seems to be, ictus et pulsus certis statisque temporibus lentè pulsati, mensurati, adnumerati. And thus to tole, a word used by Locke, (which Dr. Johnson thinks provincial and barbarous,) and by Bacon spelt toll, may be easily understood to signify, to produce an effect by slow, insensible degrees. Bp. Burgess, Ess. on the Study of Antiq. 2d ed. p. 71. Mr. H. Tooke considers both toll as an excise, and the toll of a bell, as the participle of tilian, Sax. to lift up; applying it to the former as “a part lifted off, or taken away!” Serenius is inclined to the derivation from tell; noticing the Su. Goth. taela, to reckon.]

1. An excise of goods; a seizure of some part for permission of the rest.

Toll, in law, has two significations: first, a liberty to buy and sell within the precincts of a manor, which seems to import as much as a fair or market; secondly, a tribute or custom paid for passage. Cowel.

Empsom and Dudley the people esteemed as his horse-leaches, bold men, that took toll of their master's grist. Bacon.

The same Prusias joined with the Rhodians against the Byzantines, and stopped them from levying the toll upon their trade into the Euxine. Arbutnot.

2. The sound made by the bell being tolled.

The toll of a bell is its being lifted up, which causes that sound we call its toll. H. Tooke, Div. of Parl. ii. 180.

TO TOLL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To pay toll or tallage.

I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for him: for this, I'll none of him. Shakspeare, All's Well.

Where, when, by whom, and what y' were sold for, And in the open market toll'd for? Hudibras.

2. To take toll or tallage.

The meale the more yeeldeth, if servant be true, And miller that tolleth takes none but his due. Tusser.

3. To sound as a single bell.

The first bringer of unwelcome news Hath but a losing office; and his tongue Sounds ever after as a sullen bell, Remember'd tolling a departed friend. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Toll, toll,

Gentle bell, for the soul

Of the pure ones. Denham.

You love to hear of some prodigious tale,

The bell that toll'd alone, or Irish whale. Dryden.

With horns and trumpets now to madness swell, Now sink in sorrows with a tolling bell. Pope, Dunciad.

TO TOLL. v. a.

1. To make a bell sound with solemn pauses.

Our going to church at the tolling of a bell, only tells us the time when we ought to go to worship God. Stillingfleet.

When any one dies, then by tolling or ringing of a bell the same is known to the searchers. Graunt.

2. To call by sound.

They give their bodies due repose at night: When hollow murmurs of their evening bells Dismiss the sleepy swains, and toll them to their cells. Dryden.

3. To notify by sound.

Slow tolls the village clock the drowsy hour. Beattie.

4. To take toll of; to collect.

T O M

Like the bee, tolling from every flower
The virtuous sweets. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

5. To take away; to vacate; to annul. A term only used in the civil law: in this sense the o is short, in the former long.

An appeal from sentence of excommunication does not suspend it, but then devolves it to a superior judge, and tolls the presumption in favour of a sentence. Ayliffe.

6. To take away, or perhaps to invite. See To TOLE.

The adventitious moisture which hangeth loose in a body, betrayeth and tolleth forth the innate and radical moisture along with it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

- To'LLBOOTH.* † n. s. [toll and booth.] A prison: so Dr. Johnson, from Ainsworth, defines it, without example. But it is properly a custom-house, an exchange.

He saw Matheu sitting in a tolbothe. Wicliffe, St. Matt. ix.

Those other disciples were from the fishing-boat; this from the toll-booth. Bp. Hall, Contempl. Matthew called.

- To To'LLBOOTH.* v. a. To imprison in a tollbooth.

To these what did he give? why a hen,
That they might tolbooth Oxford men. Bishop Corbet.

- To'LLDISH.* n. s.* [toll and dish.] A vessel by which the toll of corn for grinding is measured.

If thou beest a true man, then quoth the miller,
I swear by my toll-dish, I'll lodge thee all night.

Old Ballad, King and Miller of Mansfield.

Take your toll-dish with ye. Beaum. and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

- To'LLER.* n. s.* [from toll.]

1. One who collects tribute or taxes; a toll-gatherer. Obsolete. Barret.

2. One who tolls a bell.

- To'LLGATHERER.† n. s.* [toll and gather.] The officer that takes toll.

Matheu — fro the office of a tolgaderer was clepid to God. Wicliffe, St. Matt. Prol.

Toll-gatherers are every day ready to search and exact a customary tribute. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 43.

- To'LSEY. n. s.* The same with tolbooth. Dict.

- TOLUTATION. n. s.* [toluto, Lat.] The act of pacing or ambling.

They move per latera, that is, two legs of one side together, which is tolutation or ambling. Brown, Vulg. Err.

They rode, but authors having not Determin'd whether pace or trot,
(That is to say, whether tolutation,
As they do term't, or succussion,)
We leave it. Hudibras.

- TOMB. n. s.* [tombe, tombeau, Fr. tumba, low Lat.]

A monument in which the dead are enclosed.

Methinks, I see thee, now thou art below,

As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakespeare.

Time is drawn upon tombs an old man bald, winged, with a sithe and an hour-glass. Peacham on Drawing.

Poor heart! she slumbers in her silent tomb,
Let her possess in peace that narrow room. Dryden.

- To Tomb. v. a.* [from the noun.] To bury; to entomb.

Souls of boys were there,
And youths, that tomb'd before their parents were. May.

- To'MBLESS. adj.* [from tomb.] Wanting a tomb; wanting a sepulchral monument.

Lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them. Shakespeare.

- To'MBOY.† n. s.* [Tom a diminutive of Thomas, and boy. Dr. Johnson. — Verstegan derives it from tumbe; [tumbepe, Sax. a dancer;] hereof we yet

T O N

call a wench, that skippeth or leapeth like a boy, a tomboy.] A mean fellow; sometimes a wild coarse girl.

A lady
Fasten'd to an empery, to be partner'd
With tomboys, hir'd with that self-exhibition
Which your own coffers yield! Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Ye filly,
Ye tit, ye tomboy! Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

- To'MBSTONE.* n. s.* [tomb and stone.] A stone laid over the dead; a stone placed in memory of the dead.

The secret wound with which I bleed,
Shall lie wrapt up ev'n in my herse;
But on my tombstone thou shalt read
My answer to thy dubious verse. Prior.

I passed a whole afternoon in the church-yard, the cloisters, and the church, amusing myself with the tombstones and inscriptions. Addison, Spect. No. 26.

- TOME. n. s.* [French; τομὸς, Gr.]

1. One volume of many.

2. A book.
All those venerable books of Scripture, all those sacred tomes and volumes of holy writ, are with such absolute perfection framed. Hooker.

- TOMTIT. n. s.* A titmouse; a small bird.

You would fancy him a giant when you looked upon him,
and a tomtit when you shut your eyes. Spectator.

- TON. }* In the names of places, are derived from the TUN. } Saxon tun, a hedge or wall, and this seems to be from bun, a hill, the towns being anciently built on hills for the sake of defence and protection in times of war. Gibson's Camden.

- TON. n. s.* [tonne, Fr. See TUN.] A measure or weight.

Spain was very weak at home, or very slow to move, when they suffered a small fleet of English to fire, sink, and carry away, ten thousand ton of their great shipping. Bacon.

- STONE. n. s.* [ton, Fr. tonus, Lat.]

1. Note; sound.

Sounds called tones are ever equal. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
The strength of a voice or sound makes a difference in the loudness or softness, but not in the tone. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
In their motions harmony divine
So smooths her charming tones, that God's own ear Listens delighted. Milton, P. L.

2. Accent; sound of the voice.

Palamon replies;
Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.
Each has a little soul he calls his own,
And each enunciates with a human tone. Harte.

3. A whine; a mournful cry.

Made children, with your tones, to run for't,
As bad as bloody-bones, or Lunsford. Hudibras.

4. A particular or affected sound in speaking.

Drinking too great quantities of this decoction may weaken the tone of the stomach. Arbuthnot.

- To TONE.* v. a.* [from the noun.] To utter in an affected tone.

Shutting the eyes, distorting the face, and speaking through the nose, cannot so properly be called preaching, as toning of a sermon. South, vol. iv. S. i.

- To'NED.* adj.* [from tone.] Having tone.

An animal ovation! such as holds
No commerce with our reason, but subsists
On juices, through the well-toned tubes well strain'd. Young, Night Th.

- TONG. n. s.* [See TONGS.] The catch of a buckle.
This word is usually written tongue, but, as its office is to hold, it has probably the same original with tongs, and should therefore have the same orthography.

Their hilts were burnish'd gold, and handle strong
Of mother pearl, and buckled with a golden tong. Spenser.

TONGS. n. s. [tanz, Saxon; tang, Dutch.] An instrument by which hold is taken of any thing; as of coals in the fire.

Another did the dying brands repair
With iron tongs, and sprinkled oft the same
With liquid waves. Spenser.

They turn the glowing mass with crooked tongs;
The fiery work proceeds. Dryden, Æn.

Get a pair of tongs like a smith's tongs, stronger and toothed.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

TONGUE.† n. s. [tunz, Saxon; tonghe, Dutch; tugg, pronounced tung, M. Goth. from dingen, Germ. to speak, according to Wachter, who notices an assertion that the Latin lingua, the tongue, was anciently dingua. Others cite the Gr. φῶγγος, a voice, a sound, from φῶγγουμαι, to speak.]

1. The instrument of speech in human beings.

My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
And ev'ry tongue brings in a sev'ral tale,
And ev'ry tale condemns me for a villain. Shakespeare.

Who with the tongue of angels can relate. Milton, P. L.
They are tongue-valiant, and as bold as Hercules where there's no danger. L' Estrange.

My ears still ring with noise, I'm vex'd to death,
Tongue-kill'd, and have not yet recover'd breath. Dryden.

Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might,
In threats the foremost; but the lag in fight. Dryden.

There have been female Pythagoreans, notwithstanding that philosophy consisted in keeping a secret, and the disciple was to hold her tongue five years together. Addison, Guard.

Though they have those sounds ready at their tongue's end, yet there are no determined ideas. Locke.

I should make but a poor pretence to true learning, if I had not clear ideas under the words my tongue could pronounce.

Watts on the Mind.

2. The organ by which animals lick.

They hiss for hiss return'd with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton, P. L.

3. Speech; fluency of words.

He said; and silence all their tongues contain'd. Chapman.
Much tongue and much judgment seldom go together; for talking and thinking are too quite differing faculties.

L' Estrange.

First in the council-hall to steer the state,
And ever foremost in a tongue debate. Dryden, Æn.

4. Power of articulate utterance.

Parrots, imitating human tongue,
And singing-birds in silver cages hung. Dryden.

5. Speech, as well or ill used.

Give me thy hand; I am sorry I beat thee: but, while thou liv'st, keep a good tongue in thy head. Shakespeare.

So brave a knight was Tydeus, of whom a sonne is sprong, Inferiour farre in martiall deeds, though higher in his tongue.

Chapman.

On evil days though fallen and evil tongues. Milton, P. L.

6. A language.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee, whose tongue
thou shalt not understand. Deut. xxvii. 49.

With wondrous gifts endu'd,
To speak all tongues and do all miracles. Milton, P. L.

So well he understood the most and best
Of tongue that Babel sent into the West;
Spoke them so truly, that he had, you'd swear,
Not only liv'd, but been born every where. Cowley.

An acquaintance with the various tongues is nothing but a relief against the mischiefs which the building of Babel introduced.

Watts.

7. Speech as opposed to thoughts or action.

Let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth. 1 John, iii. 18.

VOL. V.

Isa. xi. 15.

10. A small point: as, the tongue of a balance.

11. To hold the TONGUE. To be silent.

'Tis seldom seen that senators so young
Know when to speak, and when to hold their tongue. Dryden.

Whilst I live I must not hold my tongue,
And languish out old age in his displeasure. Addison.

To TONGUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To chide; to scold.

But that her tender shame
Will not proclaim against her maiden loss,
How might she tongue me. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

To TONGUE.† v. n. To talk; to prate.

'Tis still a dream; or else such stuff, as madmen
Tongue, and brain not. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Let his clack be set a-going, and he shall tongue it as impetuously as the arrantest hero of the play.

Dryden, Grounds of Crit.

To'NGUED. adj. [from tongue.] Having a tongue.

Tongu'd like the night-crow. Donne.

To'NGUELESS. adj. [from tongue.]

1. Wanting a tongue; speechless.

What tongueless blocks, would they not speak? Shakespeare.

Our grave,

Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth. Shakespeare.

That blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries,
Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth,

To me, for justice. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

2. Unnamed; not spoken of.

One good deed, dying tongueless,

Slaughters a thousand waiting upon that. Shakespeare.

To'NGUEPAD. n. s. [tongue and pad.] A great talker.

She who was a celebrated wit at London is, in that dull part of the world, called a tonguepad. Tatler.

To To'NGUETIE.* v. a. [tongue and tie.] To render unable to speak.

That extreme modesty, and bashfulness, which ordinarily tongueties us in all good company.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. i.

To'NGUETIED. adj. [tongue and tie.]

1. Having an impediment of speech.

They who have short tongues, or are tonguetied, are apt to fall short of the appulse of the tongue to the teeth, and oftener place it on the gums, and say t and d instead of th and dh; as moder for mother. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

2. Unable to speak freely from whatever cause.

Love, and tonguetied simplicity,
In least speak most to my capacity. Shakespeare.

He spar'd the blushes of the tonguetied dame. Tickell.

To'NICK.† } adj. [tonique, Fr. τελῶ, Gr.]

To'NICAL. }

1. Being extended; being elastick.

Station is no rest, but one kind of motion relating unto that which physicians, from Galen, do name extensive or tonical.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

They [the muscles] can readily perform whatsoever motion the organ is capable of; — pronation, supination, the tonick motion, &c. Smith on Old Age, p. 62.

2. Relating to tones or sounds.

To the judicious performance upon this solemn instrument, [the organ,] my observations now naturally recur. In point of tonic power, I presume it will be allowed preferable to all others.

Mason on Ch. Musick, p. 42.

To'NICKS.* n. s. Medicines to strengthen the tone.

To'NNAGE. n. s. [from ton.] A custom or impost due for merchandise brought or carried in tons from or to other nations, after a certain rate in every ton.

Cowel.

Tonnage and poundage upon merchandizes were collected, refused to be settled by act of parliament. Clarendon.

TO'NSIL. n. s. [tonsille, Fr. tonsilla, Lat.]

Tonsils or almonds are two round glands placed on the sides of the basis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces, with which they are covered; each of them hath a large oval sinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it there are a great number of lesser ones, which discharge themselves, through the great sinus, of a mucous and slippery matter, into the fauces, larynx, and oesophagus, for the moistening and lubricating these parts. Quincy.

TO'NSILE.* adj. [tonsilis, Lat.] That may be clipped. On the green, Broider'd with crisped knots, the tonsile yews
Wither and fall. Mason, Eng. Gard. B. 2.

TO'NSURE. n. s. [tonsure, Fr. tonsura, Lat.] The act of clipping the hair; the state of being shorn.

The vestals, after having received the tonsure, suffered their hair to come again, being here full grown, and gathered under the veil. Addison.

TONTINE.* n. s. [from Tonti, an Italian, who is said to have first formed the scheme of these life-annuities.] Annuity on survivorship. Chambers.

TO'NY.* n. s. A simpleton: a ludicrous word.

A companion fit
For all the keeping tonies of the pit. Dryden.
When a man plays the fool or the extravagant, presently he's a tony. Who drew this or that ridiculous piece? tony. Such or such a one was never well taught: No, he had a tony to his master. L'Estrange, Tr. of Quevedo.

Too. adv. [to, Sax.]

1. Over and above; overmuch; more than enough. It is used to augment the signification of an adjective or adverb to a vicious degree.

Your father's rough and stern,
His will too strong to bend, too proud to learn. Cowley.
Groundless prejudices and weaknesses of conscience, instead of tenderness, mislead too many others, too many, otherwise good men. Sprat, Serm.

It is too much to build a doctrine of so mighty consequence upon so obscure a place of Scripture. Locke.
These ridiculous stories abide with us too long, and too far influence the weaker part of mankind. Watts.

2. It is sometimes doubled to encrease its emphasis; but this reduplication always seems harsh, and is therefore laid aside.

Oh, that this too too solid flesh would melt. Shakspeare.
Sometimes it would be full, and then
Oh! too too soon decrease again;
Eclipse'd sometimes, that 'twou'd so fall,
There wou'd appear no hope at all. Suckling.

3. Likewise; also.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate;
And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.
Let on my cup no wars be found,
Let those incite to quarrels too,
Which wine itself enough can do. Oldham.

The arriving to such a disposition of mind as shall make a man take pleasure in other men's sins, is evident from the text and from experience too. South.

It is better than letting our trade fall for want of current pledges, and better too than borrowing money of our neighbours. Locke.

A courtier and a patriot too.
Let those eyes that view
The daring crime, behold the vengeance too. Pope.

Took, the preterite, and sometimes the participle passive of take.

Thy soldiers

All levied in my name, have in my name

Took their discharge.

He is God in his friendship as well as in his nature, and therefore we sinful creatures are not took upon advantages, nor consumed in our provocations. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
South, Serm.

Suddenly the thunder-clap

Took us unprepared.

The same device enclosed the ashes of men or boys, maids or matrons; for when the thought took, though at first it received its rise from such a particular occasion, the ignorance of the sculptors applied it promiscuously. Dryden.

This took up some of his hours every day.

The riders would leap them over my hand; and one of the emperor's huntsmen, upon a large courser, took my foot, shoe and all. Addison.
Spectator.

Leaving Polybus, I took my way

To Cyrrha's temple.

Swift.
Pope, Statius.

TOOL. n. s. [tol, tool, Sax.]

1. Any instrument of manual operation.

In mulberries the sap is towards the bark only, into which if you cut a little it will come forth; but if you pierce it deeper with a tool it will be dry. Bacon.

They found in many of their mines more gold than earth; a metal, which the Americans not regarding, greedily exchanged for hammers, knives, axes, and the like tools of iron. Heylin.

Arm'd with such gardening tools as art, yet rude,

Guiltless of fire, had form'd. Milton, P. L.
The ancients had some secret to harden the edges of their tools. Addison.

2. A hireling; a wretch who acts at the command of another.

He'd choose

To talk with wits in dirty shoes;
And scorn the tools with stars and garters,
So often seen caressing Chartres. Swift.

TOOM.* adj. [tom, Dan. and Swed. the same.] Empty: still a northern word. Wicliffe, toom or tume.

A toom purse makes a bleit merchant. Yorkshire Proverb.

To TOOT. † v. n. [Of this word, in this sense, I know not the derivation: perhaps tootan, Saxon, contracted from to-pitan, to know or examine. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. Mason objects to this, and gives to-tean, to attract, as the origin; supporting it by a remark, that tradesmen at Tunbridge Wells, meeting company on their way thither, to solicit their custom, were called tooters. Pegge has made a similar remark upon this mode of solicitation; to which he prefixes an observation, that sown pease or beans, when they first appear above ground, are said, in Derbyshire, to toot; and to tout, in the canting dictionary, signifies to look up sharp. Anonym. vii. 64. Mr. Mason's to-tean, to attract, has however no connection with our old word toot: nor perhaps has Dr. Johnson's to-pitan. But it may surely be referred to the Sax. totian, eminere tanquam cornu in fronte, as indeed Mr. Mason has referred it, forgetting what he had said of toot, under the verb tote in his Supplement, which is the very word before us in its ancient orthography.]

1. To pry; to peep; to search narrowly and slyly; to look about. It is still used in the provinces, otherwise obsolete.

Then toted I into a taverne, and there I aspyede

Two frere Carmes.

Pierce Pl. Crede, (ed. 1553,) sign. B. iii. Peeping, tootyng, and gasyng at that thing, whiche the priest held up in his hands.

Abp. Cranmer, Def. of the Sacr. fol. 101. a.

I cast to go a shooting,
Long wand'ring up and down the land,
With bow and bolts on either hand,
For birds in bushes tooting.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. It was used in a contemptuous sense, which I do not fully understand. Dr. Johnson. — To toot is also to sound, to make a noise; which is the sense overpassed by Dr. Johnson. [tuta, Su. Goth. tuyten, Teut. the same; tuyte, a horn.]

Toting and piping upon the destroyed organ pipes.

Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

That wisecrack deserves of all other to wear a tooting horn.

Howell, Lett. iv. 7.

3. To stand out; to be prominent: this seems to be the meaning.

Though perhaps he had never a shirt to his back, yet he would have a tooting huge swelling ruff about his neck.

Howell, Lett. i. iii. 32.

To TOOT. * v. a.

1. To look into; to see.

Then turned I agen, when I had all ytoted.

Pierce Pl. Crede, sign. B. i.

2. To sound.

Jockie, say what might he be
That sits on yonder hill,
And tooteth out his notes of glee?

W. Browne, Shep. Pipe.

To'OTER. * n. s. [from toot.] One who plays on a pipe or horn.

Come, father Rosin, with your fiddle now,
And two tall toters: Flourish to the masque.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

TOOTH. † n. s. plural teeth. [tunthus, M. Goth. toð, Sax. Vox antiquissima, et plurimis linguis communis. Serenius.]

The teeth are the hardest and smoothest bones of the body; about the seventh or eighth month they begin to pierce the edge of the jaw: the dentes incisivi, or fore teeth of the upper jaw, appear first, and then those of the lower jaw: after them come out the canini or eye teeth, and last of all the molars or grinders: about the seventh year they are thrust out by new teeth, and if these teeth be lost they never grow again; but some have shed their teeth twice: about the one-and-twentieth year the two last of the molars spring up, and they are called dentes sapientiae.

Quincy.

Avaunt, you curs!

Be thy mouth or black or white,
Tooth that poisons if it bite.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Desert deserves with characters of brass
A fortified residence against the tooth of time,
And rasure of oblivion.

Shakspeare.

The teeth alone among the bones continue to grow in length during a man's whole life, as appears by the unsightly length of one tooth when its opposite happens to be pulled out.

Ray on the Creation.

2. Taste; palate.

These are not dishes for thy dainty tooth;
What, hast thou got an ulcer in thy mouth?
Why stand'st thou picking?

Dryden.

3. A tine, prong, or blade, of any multifold instrument.

The priest's servant came while the flesh was in seething,
with a flesh hook of three teeth.

1 Sam. ii. 13.

I made an instrument in fashion of a comb, whose teeth, being in number sixteen, were about an inch and an half broad, and the intervals of the teeth about two inches wide.

Newton, Opt.

4. The prominent part of wheels, by which they catch upon correspondent parts of other bodies.

The edge whereon the teeth are is always made thicker than the back, because the back follows the edge.

Moron.

In clocks, though the screws and teeth be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled will hardly move, though you clog them with never so much weight; but apply a little oil they whirl about very swiftly with the tenth part of the force.

Ray.

5. TOOTH and nail. With one's utmost violence; with every means of attack or defence.

In their myters they beare the figure of both testaments, whose verities they impugn with tooth and nail.

Bale on the Rev. P. II. (1550.) e. viii.

A lion and bear were at tooth and nail which should carry off a fawn.

L' Estrange.

6. To the TEETH. In open opposition.

It warms the very sickness in my heart,

That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,

Thus diddest thou.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

The action lies

In his true nature, and we ourselves compell'd,

Ev'n to the teeth and forehead of our faults,

To give in evidence.

Shakspeare.

The way to our horses lies back again by the house, and then we shall meet 'em full in the teeth.

Dryden.

7. To cast in the TEETH. To insult by open exprobration.

A wise body's part it were not to put out his fire, because his fond and foolish neighbour, from whom he borrowed wherewith to kindle it, might cast him therewith in the teeth, saying, Were it not for me thou would'st freeze, and not be able to heat thyself.

Hooker.

8. In spite of the TEETH. Notwithstanding threats expressed by shewing teeth; notwithstanding any power of injury or defence.

The guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies.

Shakspeare.

The only way is not to grumble at the lot they must bear in spite of their teeth.

L' Estrange.

9. To shew the TEETH. To threaten.

When the law shews her teeth, but dares not bite,
And South-Sea treasures are not brought to light.

Young.

To TOOTH. v. a. [from tooth.]

1. To furnish with teeth; to indent.

Then saws were tooth'd, and sounding axes made.

Dryden.

The point hooked down like that of an eagle; and both the edges toothed, as in the Indian crow.

Grew, Mus.

Get a pair of tongs like a smith's tongs, stronger and toothed at the end.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To lock in each other.

It is common to tooth in the stretching course two inches with the stretcher only.

Moron, Mech. Ex.

To'OTHACHE. n. s. [tooth and ache.] Pain in the teeth.

There never yet was the philosopher
That could endure the toothache patiently,
However at their ease they talk'd like gods.

Shakspeare.

He that sleeps feels not the toothache.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

I have the toothache.

— What, sigh for the toothache!

Which is but an humour or a worm.

Shakspeare.

One was grown desperate with the toothache.

Temple.

To'OTHDRAWER. n. s. [tooth and draw.] One whose business is to extract painful teeth.

Nature with Scots, as toothdrawers, hath dealt,
Who use to string their teeth upon their belt.

Cleveland.

When the teeth are to be dislocated, a toothdrawer is consulted.

Wiseman, Surgery.

To'OTHEd. † adj. [from tooth.]

1. Having teeth.

Prompt. Parv.

2. Sharp like a tooth.

So I charm'd their ears,
That, calf-like, they my lowing follow'd, through
Tooth'd briers, sharp furzes, pricking goss, and thorns.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

TOOTHFUL.* adj. [tooth and full.] Toothsome: not in use, but the true word in Massinger, as Mr. Gifford has observed.

What dainty relish on my tongue
This fruit hath left! some angel hath me fed:
If so toothful, I will be banqueted. Massinger, Virg. Martyr.

TOOTHLESS.* adj. [tooth and less, Saxon.] Wanting teeth; deprived of teeth.

Deep-dinted wrinkles on her cheek she draws,
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryden.
They are fed with flesh minced small, having not only a sharp head and snout, but a narrow and toothless snout. Ray.

TOOTHPICK. } n. s. [tooth and pick.] An instru-TOOTHPICKER. } ment by which the teeth are cleansed from any thing sticking between them.

I will fetch you a toothpicker from the farthest inch of Asia.
Shakespeare, Much Ado.

He and his toothpick at my worship's mess. Shakespeare.
Preserve my woods, whereof, if this course hold, there will hardly be found in some places enough to make a toothpick.

Howell, Engl. Tears.
If toothpicks of the lentisc be wanting, of a quill then make a toothpick. Sandys.

Lentisc is a beautiful ever-green, and makes the best toothpickers. Mortimer, Husbandry.

TOOTHSOME. adj. [from tooth.] Palatable; pleasing to the taste.

Some are good to be eaten while young, but nothing toothsome as they grow old. Carew.

TOOTHSOMENESS. n. s. [from toothsome.] Pleasantness to the taste.

TOOTHWORT. n. s. [denturia, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

TOOTHY.* adj. [from tooth.] Toothed; having teeth.

The woof and warp unite press'd by the toothy slay.
Crowall, Ov. Met. 6.

TOP. n. s. [topp, Welsh; top, Saxon; top, Dutch and Danish; toppr, a crest, Icelandick.]

1. The highest part of any thing.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats,
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Vailing her high top lower than her ribs. Shakespeare.

He wears upon his baby brow the round
And top of sovereignty. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Here is a mount, whose toppe seems to despise
The farre inferiour vale that underlies:

Who, like a great man rais'd aloft by fate,
Measures his height by others mean estate. Brown.

Here Sodom's towers raise their proud tops on high,
The tow'rs as well as men outbrave the sky. Cowley.

Thou nor on the top of old Olympus dwell'st. Milton, P. L.
One poor roof, made of poles meeting at the top, and covered with the bark of trees. Heylin.

That government which takes in the consent of the greatest number of the people, may justly be said to have the broadest bottom; and if it terminate in the authority of one single person, it may be said to have the narrowest top, and so makes the firmest pyramid. Temple.

So up the steepy hill with pain.
The weighty stone is rowl'd in vain;
Which having touch'd the top recoils,
And leaves the labourer to renew his toils. Granville.

Marine bodies are found upon hills, and at the bottom only such as have fallen down from their tops. Woodward.

2. The surface; the superficies.

Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth hurt all things that grow by them, especially such trees as spread their roots near the top of the ground. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Shallow brooks that flow'd so clear,
The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.

3. The highest place.

He that will not set himself proudly at the top of all things, but will consider the immensity of this fabrick, may think, that in other mansions there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

What must he expect, when he seeks for preferment, but universal opposition, when he is mounting the ladder, and every hand ready to turn him off when he is at the top? Swift.

4. The highest person.

How would you be,
If he, which is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are? Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

5. The utmost degree.

Zeal being the top and perfection of so many religious affections, the causes of it must be most eminent. Sprat.

If you attain the top of your desires in fame, all those who envy you will do you harm; and of those who admire you few will do you good. Pope.

The top of my ambition is to contribute to that work. Pope.

6. The highest rank.

Take a boy from the top of a grammar school, and one of the same age bred in his father's family, and bring them into good company together, and then see which of the two will have the more manly carriage. Locke on Education.

7. The crown of the head.

All the stor'd vengeance of Heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! Shakespeare, K. Lear.

'Tis a per'lous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakespeare.

8. The hair on the crown of the head; the forelock.

Let's take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees
The inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakespeare.

9. The head of a plant.

The buds made our food are called heads or tops, as cabbage heads. Watts, Logick.

10. [top, Danish.] An inverted conoid which children set to turn on the point, continuing its motion with a whip.

Since I pluck't geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what it was to be beaten till lately. Shakespeare.

For as whipp'd tops, and bandied balls,
The learned hold, are animals:
So horses they affirm to be
Mere engines made by geometry. Hudibras.

As young striplings whip the top for sport
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden.

Still humming on their drowsy course they keep,
And lash'd so long, like tops, are lash'd asleep. Pope.

A top may be used with propriety in a similitude by a Virgil, when the sun may be dishonoured by a Mævius. Broome.

11. Top is sometimes used as an adjective to express lying on the top, or being at the top.

The top stones, laid in clay are kept together. Mortimer.

To TOP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To rise aloft; to be eminent.

Those long ridges of lofty and topping mountains which run east and west, stop the evagation of the vapours to the north and south in hot countries. Derham, Phys. Theol.

Some of the letters distinguish themselves from the rest, and top it over their fellows; these are to be considered as letters and as cyphers. Addison on Medals.

2. To predominate.

The thoughts of the mind, and powers of the body, are uninterruptedly employed that way by the determinations of the will, influenced by that topping uneasiness while it lasts. Locke on Power, ii. 21. § 38.

3. To excel.

But write thy best and top, and in each line
Sir Formal's oratory will be thine. Dryden.

To TOP. v. a.

1. To cover on the top; to tip; to defend or decorate with something extrinsick on the upper part.

T O P

- The glorious temple rear'd
Her pile, far off appearing like a mount
Of alabaster, topp'd with golden spires. Milton, P. R.
To him the fairest nymphs do show
Like moving mountains topt with snow. Waller.
There are other churches in the town, and two or three palaces, which are of a more modern make, and built with a good fancy: I was shown the little notre dame; that is handsomely designed, and topp'd with a cupola. Addison.
Top the bank with the bottom of the ditch. Mortimer.
2. To rise above.
A gourd planted by a large pine, climbing by the boughs twined about them, till it topped and covered the tree. L'Estrange.
3. To outgo; to surpass.
He's poor in no one fault, but stor'd with all.
— Especially, in pride.
— And topping all others in boasting. Shakspeare.
So far he topp'd my thought,
That I in forgery of shapes and tricks
Come short of what he did. Shakspeare.
I am, cries the envious, of the same nature with the rest:
why then should such a man top me? where there is equality of kind, there should be no distinction of privilege. Collier.
4. To crop.
Top your rose trees a little with your knife near a leaf bud.
Evelyn, Kalendar.
5. To rise to the top of.
If ought obstruct thy course, yet stand not still,
But wind about till thou hast topp'd the hill. Denham.
6. To perform eminently: as, he tops his part. This word, in this sense, is seldom used but on light or ludicrous occasions.
- TO'PARCH. † n. s. [toparque, old French; τοπαρχία and αρχή, Gr.] The principal man in a place.
They are not to be conceived potent monarchs, but toparchs, or kings of narrow territories. Brown, Vulg. Err.
- TO'PARCHY. † n. s. [from toparch; toparchie, old French.] Command in a small district.
Four several kings swaying their ebony sceptres in each top- archy. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 22.
- TO'PAZ. n. s. [topase, Fr. topazius, low Lat.] A yellow gem.
The golden stone is the yellow topaz. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Can blazing carbuncles with her compare?
The tophas sent from scorched Meroe?
Or pearls presented by the Indian sea? Sandys, Paraph.
With light's own smile the yellow topaz burns. Thomson.
- TO TOPE. v. n. [topff, German, an earthen pot;
toppen, Dutch, to be mad. Skinner prefers the latter etymology; tope, Fr.] To drink hard; to drink to excess.
If you tope in form and treat,
'Tis the sour sauce to the sweet meat,
The fine you pay for being great. Dryden.
- TO'PER. † n. s. [from tope.] A drunkard.
But I no topers envy; for my mien
Is always gay, and my complexion green. Cowley Englished.
- TO'PFUL. adj. [top and full.] Full to the top; full to the brim.
'Tis wonderful
What may be wrought out of their discontent;
Now that their souls are topful of offence. Shakspeare.
Till a considerable part of the air was drawn out of the receiver, the tube continued topful of water as at first. Boyle.
One was ingenious in his thoughts and bright in his language; but so topful of himself, that he let it spill on all the company. Watts, Impr. of the Mind.
Fill the largest tankard-cup topfull. Swift.

- TOPH.* } n. s. [tophus, Latin.] A kind of sand-TO'PHUS.* } stone.
A native arch she drew
With pumice and light tofusses, that grew. Sandys, Ov. Met. 3.
In the construction of this vault, the principle of using freestone for the ribs, and toph for the pannels, has not been followed. Archæol. vol. xvii. p. 80.
- TOPHA'CEOUS. adj. [from tophus, Lat.] Gritty; stony.
Acids mixed with them precipitate a tophaceous chalky matter, but not a cheesy substance. Arbuthnot.
- TOPHE'AVY. adj. [top and heavy.] Having the upper part too weighty for the lower.
A roof should not be too heavy nor too light; but of the two extremes a house topheavy is the worst. Wotton on Architecture.
Topheavy drones, and always looking down,
As over-ballasted within the crown,
Mutt'ring betwixt their lips some mystick thing. Dryden.
These topheavy buildings, reared up to an invidious height, and which have no foundation in merit, are in a moment blown down by the breath of kings. Davenant.
As to stiff gales topheavy pines bow low
Their heads, and lift them as they cease to blow. Pope.
- TO'PHET. n. s. [-תפח Heb. a drum.] Hell: a scriptural name.
The pleasant valley of Hinnom, tophet thence
And black Gehenna call'd, the type of hell. Milton, P. L.

or clipping.
No topiary hedge of quickset
Was e'er so neatly cut or thickset. Bulter, Rem.
- TO'PICAL. adj. [from τόπος.]
1. Relating to some general head.
2. Local; or confined to some particular place.
Topical or probable arguments, either from consequence of Scripture, or from human reason, ought not to be admitted or credited, against the consentient testimony and authority of the ancient Catholick church. White.
An argument from authority is but a weaker kind of proof;
it being but a topical probation, and an inartificial argument,
depending on naked asseveration. Brown.
Evidences of fact can be no more than topical and probable.
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.
What then shall be rebellion? shall it be more than a to- pical sin, found indeed under some monarchical medicines?
Holyday.
3. Applied medicinally to a particular part.
A woman, with some unusual hemorrhage, is only to be cured by topical remedies. Arbuthnot.
- TO'PICALLY. adv. [from topical.] With application to some particular part.
This topically applied becomes a phænigmus, or rubifying medicine, and is of such fiery parts, that they have of themselves conceived fire and burnt a house. Brown, Vulg. Err.
- TO'PICK. n. s. [topique, Fr. τόπος.]
1. Principle of persuasion.
Contumacious persons, who are not to be fixed by any principles, whom no topics can work upon. Wilkins.
I might dilate on the difficulties, the temper of the people, the power, arts, and interest of the contrary party; but those are invidious topicks, too green in remembrance. Dryden.
Let them argue over all the topicks of divine goodness and human weakness, and whatsoever other pretences sinking sinners catch at to save themselves by, yet how trifling must be their plea! South, Serm.
The principal branches of preaching are, to tell the people what is their duty, and then convince them that it is so: the topicks for both are brought from Scripture and reason. Swift.

T O P

2. A general head; something to which other things are referred.

All arts and sciences have some general subjects, called topicks, or common places; because middle terms are borrowed, and arguments derived from them for the proof of their various propositions. Watts, Logick.

3. Things as are externally applied to any particular part.

In the cure of strumæ, the topicks ought to be discutient. Wiseman, Surgery.

TO'PKNOT. n. s. [top and knot.] A knot worn by women on the top of the head.

This arrogance amounts to the pride of an ass in his trappings; when 'tis but his master's taking away his topknot to make an ass of him again. L'Estrange.

TO'PLESS.† adj. [from top.]

1. Having no top.

He sent abroad his voice,
Which Pallas far off echo'd; who did betwixt them hoise
Shrill tumult to a topless height. Chapman, Iliad.
Loud Fame calls ye,
Pitch'd on the topless Appennine, and blows
To all the under world. Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

2. Supreme; sovereign.

Sometime, great Agamemnon,
Thy topless deputation he puts on. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.
Make their strengths totter, and their topless fortunes
Unroot and reel to ruin. Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

TO'PMAN. n. s. [top and man.] The sawer at the top.

The pit-saw enters the one end of the stuff, the topman at the top, and the pitman under him, the topman observing to guide the saw exactly in the line. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

TO'PMOST. adj. [An irregular superlative formed from top.] Uppermost; highest.

A swarm of bees,
Unknown from whence they took their airy flight,
Upon the topmost branch in clouds alight. Dryden, Æn.
From steep to steep the troops advanc'd with pain,
In hopes at last the topmost cliff to gain;
But still by new ascents the mountain grew,
And a fresh toil presented to their view. Addison.
Men pil'd on men with active leaps arise,
And build the breathing fabrick to the skies;
A sprightly youth above the topmost row,
Points the tall pyramid, and crowns the show. Addison.

TOPO'GRAPHER.† n. s. [τόπος and γράφω, Gr.] One who writes descriptions of particular places.

Although one should read all the topographers that ever writ of, or anatomized, a town or country.

Howell, Instr. For. Trav. (1642.) p. 5.

TOPOGRA'PHICAL.* } adj. [from topography.] De-
TOPOGRA'PHICK. } scribing particular places.

It were requisite to have a book of the topographical description of all places, through which he passeth.

Howell, Instr. For. Trav. p. 31.

I may the better present you the topographic description of this mighty empire. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 58.

TOPO'GRAPHY. n. s. [topographie, Fr. τόπος and γράφω, Gr.] Description of particular places.

That philosophy gives the exactest topography of the extramundane spaces. Glanville, Sceptis.

The topography of Sulmo in the Latin makes but an awkward figure in the version. Cromwell.

TO'PPING. adj. [from top.] Fine; noble; gallant. A low word.

The topping fellow I take to be the ancestor of the fine fellow. Taller.

T O R

To TO'PPLE. v. n. [from top.] To fall forward; to tumble down.

Though bladed corn be lodged and trees blown down;
Though castles topple on their warders heads. Shakspeare.
The wisest aunt telling the saddest tale,
Sometime for three-foot stool mistaketh me;
Then slip I from her quite, down topples she. Shakspeare.

To To'PPLE.* v. a. To throw down.

Unruly wind—

Shakes the old beldame earth, and topples down
Steeple and moss-grown towers. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.
Alas, my Lord God, how small matters trouble me! every petty occurrence is ready to rob me of my peace, so as, methinks, I am like some little cockboat in a rough sea, which every billow topples up and down, and threatens to sink! I can chide this weak pusillanimity in myself; but it is thou Lord that must redress it.

Bp. Hall, Breath. of a Devout Soul, § 34.

TOP-PROUD. adj. [top and proud.] Proud in the highest degree.

This top-proud fellow,

By intelligence I do know
To be corrupt and treasonous. Shakspeare.

TO'PSAIL. n. s. [top and sail.] The highest sail.

Contentenus meeting with the Turk's galleys, which would not vail their topsails, fiercely assailed them. Knolles.

2. A high pointed rock or hill, whence tor in the initial syllable of some local names.

This haughty mountain, by indulgent fame
Preferr'd to a wonder, Mam tor has to name. Cotton, Wond. of the Peake, p. 42.

TORCH. n. s. [torche, Fr. torcia, Italian; intortitium, low Latin.] A wax light generally supposed to be bigger than a candle.

Basilius knew, by the wasting of the torches, that the night also was far wasted. Sidney.

Here lies the dusky torch of Mortimer, Choak'd with ambition of the meaner sort. Shakspeare.

They light the nuptial torch, and bid invoke Hymen. Milton, P. L.

Never was known a night of such distraction;
Noise so confus'd and dreadful: torches gliding
Like meteors, by each other in the streets. Dryden.

I'm weary of my part;
My torch is out; and the world stands before me
Like a black desert at th' approach of night. Dryden.

When men of infamy to grandeur soar,
They light a torch to shew their shame the more. Young.

TO'RCHEBEARER. n. s. [torch and bear.] One whose office is to carry a torch.

He did in a genteel manner chastise their negligence, with making them, for that night, the torchbearers. Sidney.

TO'RCHER. n. s. [from torch.] One that gives light.

T O R

Ere the horses of the sun shall bring
Their fiery torcher his diurnal ring. Shakspcarc.

TO'RLIGHT. n. s. [torch and light.] Light kindled to supply the want of the sun.

When the emperor Charles had clasped Germany almost in his fist, he was forced to go from Isburg, and, as if in a mask, by torchlight, to quit every foot he had gotten. Bacon.

If thou like a child didst fear before,
Being in the dark, where thou didst nothing see;
Now I have brought thee torchlight fear no more. Davies.

TO'RWORT.* n. s. The name of a plant.

A stately stalk shot up of torchwort high.
More, Life of the Soul, ii. 59.

Bryskett, Mourn. Muse of Thestylis.

All the loud noises which torment the air.

They, soaring on main wing,
Tormented all the air. Milton, P. L.

TORMENT.† n. s. [tourment, Fr.]

1. Any thing that gives pain, as disease.

They brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and he healed them, St. Matthew.

2. Pain: misery; anguish.

The more I see

Pleasures about me, so much more I feel Torment within me. Milton, P. L.

3. Penal anguish; torture.

No prisoners there, enforc'd by torments, cry;
But fearless by their old tormentors lie. Sandys, Paraph.

Not sharp revenge, nor hell itself can find
A fiercer torment than a guilty mind,
Which day and night doth dreadfully accuse,
Condemns the wretch, and still the charge renews. Dryden.

4. [tormentum, Lat.] An engine of war to cast stones or darts. Not in use.

All torments of war, which we call engines, were first invented by kings or governors of hosts. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 21.

TORME'NTER.† } n. s. [from torment.]

He called to me for succour, desiring me at least to kill him, to deliver him from those tormentors. Sidney.

2. One who inflicts penal tortures.

No prisoners there, enforc'd by torments, cry,
But fearless by their old tormentors lie. Sandys on Job.

Let his tormenter, conscience, find him out. Milton, P. R.

Had'st thou full power to kill,
Or measure out his torments by thy will;

T O R

Yet, what could'st thou, tormentor, hope to gain?

Thy loss continues unrepaid by pain. Dryden, Juv.

The commandments of God being conformable to the dictates of right reason, man's judgment condemns him when he violates any of them; and so the sinner becomes his own tormentor. South, Serm.

The ancient martyrs passed through such new inventions and varieties of pain as tired their tormentors. Addison.

TO'RMMENTIL. n. s. [tormentille, Fr. tormentilla, Lat.]

Septfoil. A plant.

The root of tormentil has been used for tanning of leather, and accounted the best astringent in the whole vegetable kingdom. Miller.

Refresh the spirits externally by some epithemata of balm, bugloss, with the powder of the roots of tormentil. Wiseman.

Their torpescient soul
Clenches their coin. Shenstone.

TORPID. adj. [torpidus, Lat.] Numbed; motionless; sluggish; not active.

Without heat all things would be torpid and without motion. Ray on the Creation.

The sun awakes the torpid sap. Thomson, Spring.

TORPIDITY.* n. s. [from torpid.] Torpor; state of being torpid.

I requested Mr. Cornish to send up a dozen of bats in their state of torpidity. Daines Barrington, Ess. ii.

Sir W. Bellers happened to stop at a fisherman's house in Cornwall, whose net had been much torn by a large clod of earth, which, upon being examined, was very full of swallows, that awaked from their torpidity upon being brought near the fire. Ibid. Ess. v.

TO'RPIDNESS. n. s. [from torpid.] The state of being torpid.

Though the object about which it is exercised be poor, little, and low, yet a man hath this advantage by the exercise of this faculty about it, that it keeps it from rest and torpidness, it enlargeth and habituates it for a due improvement even about nobler objects. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

TO'RPITUDE. n. s. [from torpid.] State of being motionless; numbness; sluggishness.

Some, in their most perfect state, subsist in a kind of torpitude or sleeping state. Derham.

TORPOR. n. s. [Latin.] Dulness; numbness; inability to move; dulness of sensation.

Motion discusses the torpor of solid bodies, which, beside their motion of gravity, have in them a natural appetite not to move at all. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

TORREFACTION.† n. s. [torrefaction, Fr. torrefacio, Lat.] The act of drying by the fire.

Here was not a scorching and blistering, but a vehement and full torrefaction. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 188.

If it have not a sufficient insolation it looketh pale; if it be sunned too long it suffereth torrefaction. Brown.

When torrefied sulphur makes bodies black, why does torrefaction make sulphur itself black? Boyle on Colours.

To TORREFY. v. a. [torrifier, Fr. torrefacio, Lat.] To dry by the fire.

In the sulphur of bodies torrefied consist the principles of inflammability. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The Africans are more peculiarly scorched and torrefied from the sun by addition of dryness from the soil. Brown.

Divers learned men assign, for the cause of blackness, the sooty steam of adust or torrefied sulphur. Boyle on Colours.

Torrefied sulphur makes bodies black; I desire to know why torrefaction makes sulphur itself black? Boyle.

Another clyster is composed of two heminae of white wine, half a hemina of honey, Egyptian nitre torrefied a quadrant. Arbuthnot on Coins.

TORRENT. n. s. [torrent, Fr. torrens, Lat.]

1. A sudden stream raised by showers.

The near in blood,
Forsake me like the torrent of a flood. Sandys on Job.

Will no kind flood, no friendly rain,
Disguise the marshal's plain disgrace;
No torrents swell the low Mohayne,
The world will say he durst not pass. Prior.

2. A violent and rapid stream; tumultuous current.

Not far from Caucasus are certain steep falling torrents, which wash down many grains of gold, as in many other parts of the world; and the people there inhabiting use to set many fleeces of wool in these descents of waters, in which the grains of gold remain, and the water passeth through, which Strabo witnesseth to be true. Raleigh.

The memory of those, who, out of duty and conscience, opposed that torrent which did overwhelm them, should not lose the recompence due to their virtue. Clarendon.

When shrivell'd herbs on withering stems decay,
The wary ploughman, on the mountain's brow,
Undams his watery stores, huge torrents flow,
Temp'ring the thirsty fever of the field. Dryden, Georg.
Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age. Pope.

TORRENT. adj. [torrens, Lat.] Rolling in a rapid stream.

Fierce Phlegeton,
Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage. Milton, P. L.

TORRID. adj. [torride, Fr. torridus, Lat.]

1. Parched; dried with heat.

Galen's commentators mention a twofold dryness; the one concomitated with a heat, which they call a torrid tabes; the other with a coldness, when the parts are consumed through extinction of their native heat. Harvey on Consump.

2. Burning; violently hot.

This with torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milton, P. L.

3. It is particularly applied to the regions or zone between the tropicks.

Columbus first
Found a temperate in a torrid zone;
The feverish air fann'd by a cooling breeze. Dryden.
Those who amidst the torrid regions live,
May they not gales unknown to us receive?
See daily showers rejoice the thirsty earth,
And bless the flowery buds succeeding birth. Prior.

TORSE. n. s. [In heraldry.] A wreath.

TORSEL. n. s. [torse, Fr.] Any thing in a twisted form.

When you lay any timber on brickwork, as torsels for mantle trees to lie on, or lintols over windows, lay them in loam. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

TO'RSION. n. s. [torsio, Lat.] The act of turning or twisting.

TORT.† n. s. [tort, Fr. tortum, low Lat.] Mischief; injury; calamity. Obsolete.

Then gan triumphant trumpets sound on high,
That sent to Heaven the echoed report
Of their new joy, and happy victory
Against him that had been long oppress with tort,
And fast imprisoned in sieged fort. Spenser.

He dreadful bad them come to court,
For no wild beasts should do them any tort. Spenser.

Your disobedience and ill managing
Of actions, lost for want of due support,
Refer I justly to a further spring,
Spring of sedition, strife, oppression, tort. Fairfax.

How can any of us see the body of our blessed Saviour broken, and his blood poured out, and withal think and know that his own sins are guilty of this tort offered to the Son of God, the Lord of life, and not feel his heart touched with a sad and passionate apprehension of his own vileness? Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 197.

TO'RTILE. adj. [tortilis, Lat.] Twisted; wreathed.

TO'RTION. n. s. [tortus, Lat.] Torment; pain. Not in use.

All purgers have a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tortion in the stomach and belly. Bacon.

TO'RTIOUS.† adj. [from tort.] Injurious; doing wrong.

Ne ought he car'd whom he endamaged
By tortious wrong, or whom bereav'd of right. Spenser, F. Q.

TO'RTIVE. adj. [tortus, Lat.] Twisted; wreathed.

Knots by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain
Tortive and errant from his course of growth. Shakespeare.

TORTOISE. n. s. [tortue, Fr.]

1. An animal covered with a hard shell: there are tortoises both of land and water.

In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stult. Shakespeare.

A living tortoise being turned upon its back, not being able to make use of its paws for the returning of itself, because they could only bend towards the belly, it could help itself only by its neck and head; sometimes one side, sometimes another, by pushing against the ground, to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out where the inequality of the ground might permit it to roll its shell. Ray on the Creation.

2. A form into which the ancient soldiers used to throw their troops, by bending down and holding their bucklers above their heads so that no darts could hurt them.

Their targets in a tortoise cast, the foes
Secure advancing, to the turrets rose. Dryden, Æn.

TORTUOSITY.† n. s. [from tortuous.]

1. Wreath; flexure.

These the midwife contriveth unto a knot close unto the body of the infant, from whence ensueth that tortuosity, or complicated nodosity, called the navel. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Crookedness; depravity.

He discerneth the uprightness of godliness, and the tortuosity of wickedness. Granger on Eccl. (1621), p. 63.

TORTUOUS.† adj. [tortueux, Fr. from tortuosus, tortus, Lat.]

1. Twisted; wreathed; winding.

So vary'd he, and of his tortuous train
Aqueous vapours, like a dry wind, pass through so long and tortuous a pipe of lead. Boyle.

2. Mischievous. Thus I explain it, on supposition that it is derived from tort, wrong; but it may mean crooked: as we say, crooked ways for bad practices, crooked being regularly enough opposite to right. This in some copies is tortious, and therefore from tort. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson here means the passage, which I have cited under tortious; and I remember no edition of Spenser in which tortuous is the reading. Mr. Mason would have done well to restrain his flippancy, in remarking that “this second sense, with all that Johnson says about it, is much ado about nothing.” For tortuous means crooked, mischievous, as I have shewn tortuosity to mean crookedness, perverseness: and thus in the following passage:

What tortuous planets, or malevolent
Conspiring power?

Lodge, Looking-Glasse for England, (1598,) sign. E. 4. b.

TORTURE. n. s. [torture, Fr. tortura, Lat.]

1. Torments judicially inflicted; pain by which guilt is punished, or confession extorted.

Hecate
Then led me trembling through those dire abodes,
And taught the tortures of th’ avenging gods. Dryden.

2. Pain; anguish; pang.

Better be with the dead,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless extasy. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Ghastly spasm or racking torture. Milton, P. L.

To TORTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To punish with tortures.

Hipparchus my enfranchis’d bondman,
He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture. Shakspeare.
The scourge inexorable and the torturing hour
Call us to penance. Milton, P. L.

2. To vex; to excruciate; to torment.

Still must I cherish the dear, sad remembrance,
At once to torture, and to please my soul. Addison, Cato.

3. To keep on the stretch.

The bow tortureth the string continually, and thereby holdeth it in a continual trepidation. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

TORTURER. n. s. [from torture.] He who tortures; tormenter.

I play the torturer by small and small,
To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken. Shakspeare.
When king Edward the second was amongst his torturers, the more to disgrace his face, they shaved him, and washed him with cold water; the king said, Well, yet I will have warm water, and so shed abundance of tears. Bacon, Apoph.

TORTURINGLY.* adv. [from To torture.] So as to torment or punish.

An host of furies
Could not have baited me more torturingly.
Beaum. and Fl. Laws of Candy.

TORTUROUS.* adj. [from torture.] Tormenting; occasioning torture.

Sad melancholy, like the drowned earth, lies at the bottom;
whence care, and grief, and discontent, torturous suspicion, and horrid fear, are washed up by the unquiet watery desire.
More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 196.

Therefore they make the admission torturous, take time in the initiation, set a seal on the tongue, and instruct the Epoptæ for five years, to raise a high opinion of them by delay and expectation. Bp. Lavington, Enth. of Meth. P. iii. p. 330.

TORTVITY.† n. s. [tortvitas, Lat.] Sourness; severity of countenance. Not used. Cockeram.

TORTVOUS. adj. [tortvus, Lat.] Sour of aspect; stern; severe of countenance. Not used.

That tortvus sour look produced by anger, and that gay and pleasing countenance accompanying love. Derham.

TORY.† n. s. [A cant term, derived, I suppose, from an Irish word signifying a savage. Dr. Johnson. — “Great heats and animosities were created by these Petitioners and Abhorrrers, and they occasioned many feuds and quarrels in private conversations; and about the same time, (1680,) and from the same cause, arose the pernicious terms and distinctions of Whig and Tory, both exotic names, which the parties invidiously bestowed upon each other; all that adhered to the interest of the crown and lineal succession were by the contrary party branded with the title given to the Irish robbers; and they, in return, gave the others the appellation of Whig, or Sour Milk, formerly appropriated to the Scotch Presbyterians and rigid Covenanters.” Echard, Hist. p. 988. Tories, robbers, and rapparees, are always joined together in the Irish Acts of Parliament. Tories were so called from the Irish word toree, give me [your money]. The opponents of government in 1681, and 1682, &c. affected to think all, who were attached to the crown, papists; and therefore called them tories, i. e. vile papists and robbers. Malone. — The character of the tories, or robbers, is thus noticed by Glanville, long before the political distinction existed: “Let such men quit all pretences to civility and breeding; they are ruder than tories and wild Americans!” Serm. 4to. p. 212.] One who adheres to the ancient constitution of the state, and the apostolical hierarchy of the church of England: opposed to a whig.

The knight is more a tory in the country than the town, because it more advances his interest. Addison.

This protestant zealot, this English divine,
In church and in state was of principles sound;
Was truer than steel to the Hanover line,
And griev’d that a tory should live above ground. Steele.

To confound his hated coin,
All parties and religions join,
Whigs, tories. Swift.

TORYISM.* n. s. The notions of a tory.

Nothing would illustrate the subject better than an enquiry into the rise and progress of our late parties; or a short history of toryism and whiggism from their cradle to their grave, the introductory account of their genealogy, and descent.
Bolingbroke on Parties, Lett. 2.

To TOSE. v. n. [of the same original with tease.] To comb wool.

To TOSS. v. a. [tassen, Dutch; tasser, French, to accumulate; Minsheu. Θαῶραι, Gr. to dance; Meric Casaubon. Tosen, German, to make a noise; Skinner: perhaps from to us, a word used by those who would have any thing thrown to them.] Pret. tossed or tost; part. pass. tossed or tost.

1. To throw with the hand, as a ball at play.

With this she seem’d to play, and, as in sport,
Toss’d to her love in presence of the court. Dryden.
A shepherd diverted himself with tossing up eggs and catching them again. Addison.

2. To throw with violence.

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head. Shakspeare.
Vulcanos discharge forth with the fire not only metallick and mineral matter, but huge stones, tossing them up to a very great height in the air. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. To lift with a sudden and violent motion.

Behold how they toss their torches on high,
How they point to the Persian abodes. Dryden.
I call’d to stop him, but in vain:
He tost his arm aloft, and proudly told me,

He would not stay. Addison, Cato.
So talk too idle buzzing things;
Toss up their heads, and stretch their wings. Prior.

4. To agitate; to put into violent motion.

The getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro. Prov. xxi. 6.

Things will have their first or second agitation; if they be not tossed upon the arguments of counsel, they will be tossed upon the waves of fortune, and be full of inconstancy, doing and undoing. Bacon, Ess.

I have made several voyages upon the sea, often being tossed in storms. Addison, Spect.

5. To make restless; to disquiet.

She did love the knight of the red cross,
For whose dear sake so many troubles her did toss. Spenser.
Calm region once

6. To keep in play; to tumble over.

That scholar should come to a better knowledge in the Latin tongue than most do, that spend four years in tossing all the rules of grammar in common schools. Ascham.

To Toss. v. n.

1. To fling; to winch; to be in violent commotion.

Galen tells us of a woman patient of his whom he found very weak in bed, continually tossing and tumbling from one side to another, and totally deprived of her rest. Harvey.

To toss and fling, and to be restless, only frets and enrages our pain. Tillotson.

And thou, my sire, not destin'd by thy birth,
To turn to dust and mix with common earth,
How wilt thou toss and rave, and long to die,
And quit thy claim to immortality! Addison, Ovid.

They throw their person with a hoyden air
Across the room, and toss into the chair. Young.

2. To be tossed.

Your mind is tossing on the sea,
There where your argosies
Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakespeare.

3. To Toss up. To throw a coin into the air, and wager on what side it shall fall.

I'd try if any pleasure could be found,
In tossing up for twenty thousand pound. Bramston.

Toss. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of tossing.

The discus that is to be seen in the hand of the celebrated Castor at Don Livio's is perfectly round; nor has it any thing like a sling fastened to it, to add force to the toss. Addison.

2. An affected manner of raising the head.

His various modes from various fathers follow;
One taught the toss, and one the new French wallow:
His sword-knot this, his cravat that designed. Dryden.

There is hardly a polite sentence in the following dialogues which doth not require some suitable toss of the head. Swift.

To'sSEL. n. s. See TASSEL.

Tie at each lower corner a handful of hops with a piece of packthread to make a tossel, by which you may conveniently lift the bag when full. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To'sSER.† n. s. [from toss.]

1. One who throws; one who flings and writhes.

2. Whoever or whatever agitates.

I did expect,
Instead of Mars, the storm-goaler Eolus,
And Juno proffering her Deiopeia
As satisfaction to the blustering god
To send his tossers forth. Beaum. and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

To'sSING.* n. s. [from toss.] Violent commotion.

I am full of tossings to and fro unto the dawning of the day. Job, vii. 4.

In stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, [in the margin, tossings to and fro.] 2 Cor. vi. 5.

After many workings and tossings of my thoughts. Hartlib, Tr. of Comenius, p. 47.

Dire was the tossing, deep the groans: Despair
Tended the sick, busiest from couch to couch. Milton, P. L.

To'sSPOT.† n. s. [toss and pot.] A toper and drunkard.

Tossspots still had drunken head. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

To'sT. preterite and part. pass. of toss.

TO'TAL. adj. [totus, Lat. total, Fr.]

1. Whole; complete; full.

They set and rise;
Lest total darkness should by night regain
Her old possession, and extinguish life. Milton, P. L.

If all the pains that, for thy Britain's sake,
My past has took, or future life may take,
Be grateful to my queen; permit my pray'r,
And with this gift reward my total care. Prior.

2. Whole; not divided.

Either to undergo
Myself the total crime; or to accuse
My other self, the partner of my life. Milton, P. L.

TOTALITY.† n. s. [totalité, Fr.] Complete sum; whole quantity.

Identity, diversity; possibility, act; totality, parts, &c. are but wise cautions against ambiguities of speech. Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. 2.

So much for totality, that common, and essential character to every legitimate composition. Harris, Philolog. Inq.

TO'TALLY. adv. [from total.] Wholly; fully; completely.

The sound interpreters expound this image of God, of natural reason; which, if it be totally or mostly defaced, the right of government doth cease. Bacon, Holy War.

The obdurate sinner, that hath long hardened his own heart against God, thereby provokes him totally to withdraw all inward grace from him. Hammond.

Charity doth not end with this world, but goes along with us into the next, where it will be perfected; but faith and hope shall then totally fail; the one being changed into sight, the other into enjoyment. Atterbury, Sermon.

TO'TALNESS.* n. s. [from total.] Entireness.

To TOTE.* See To TOOT.

To'OTHER, contracted for the other.

As bad the one as t'other. Farnaby.

To TO'TTER.† v. n. [touteren, Teut. to tremble; tittra, Icel. the same.] To shake so as to threaten a fall; to stagger.

What news, in this our tottering state?
— It is a reeling world indeed, my lord;
And I believe will never stand upright. Shakspeare.
As a bowing wall shall ye be, and as a tottering fence. Ps. lxii. 3.

The foes already have possess'd the wall,
Troy nods from high, and totters to her fall. Dryden.

To'TTERY.† } adj. [from totter.] Shaking; unsteady;
To'TTY } dizzy. Neither of these words is used, except in vulgar language: as totty-headed for giddy-headed.

Siker thy head very tottie is,
So on thy corbe shoulder it leans amisse. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

To TOUCH.† v. a. [toucher, Fr. doubtless from the M. Goth. tekan, to touch.]

1. To perceive by the sense of feeling.

Nothing but body can be touch'd or touch. Creech.

2. To handle slightly, without effort or violence.

In the middle of the bridge there is a draw-bridge made with such artifice, that the sentinel discovering any force approaching, may, by only touching a certain iron with his foot, draw up the bridge. Brown, Trav.

3. To reach with any thing, so as that there be no space between the thing reached and the thing brought to it.

He brake the withs as a thread of tow is broken when it toucheth the fire. Judg. xvi. 9.

Him thus intent, Ithuriel with his spear
Touch'd lightly.

Milton, P. L.

4. To come to; to attain.

Their impious folly dar'd to prey
On herds devoted to the god of day;
The god vindictive doom'd them never more,
Ah men unblest'd! to touch their natal shore.

Pope, Odys.

5. To try as gold with a stone.

When I have suit,
Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,
It shall be full of poize and difficulty,
And fearful to be granted.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Words so debas'd and hard, no stone
Was hard enough to touch them on.

Hudibras.

6. To relate to.

In ancient times was publicly read first the scripture, as, namely, something out of the books of the prophets of God;
some things out of the apostles' writings; and, lastly, out of the holy evangelists some things which touched the person of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Hooker.

The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;
Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

7. To meddle with; not totally to forbear.

He so light was at legerdmain,
That what he touch'd came not to light again.

Spenser.

8. To affect.

What of sweet
Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this.

Milton, P. L.

9. To move; to strike mentally; to melt.

I was sensibly touched with that kind impression.
The tender sire was touch'd with what he said,
And flung the blaze of glories from his head,
And bid the youth advance.

Addison, Ovid.

10. To delineate or mark out.

Nature affords at least a glimm'ring light:
The lines, though touch'd but faintly, are drawn right.

Pope.

11. To censure; to animadvert upon. Not used.

Doctor Parker, in his sermon before them, touched them for their living so near, that they went near to touch him for his life.

Hayward.

12. To infect; to seize slightly.

Pestilent diseases are bred in the summer; otherwise those touched are in most danger in the winter.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

13. To bite; to wear; to have an effect on.

Its face must be very flat and smooth, and so hard, that a file will not touch it, as smiths say, when a file will not eat, or rase it.

Morson, Mech. Ex.

14. To strike a musical instrument.

They touch'd their golden harps, and prais'd.
One dip the pencil, and one touch the lyre.

Milton, P. L.

Pope.

15. To influence by impulse; to impel forcibly.

No decree of mine,
To touch with lightest moment of impulse
His free will.

Milton, P. L.

16. To treat of perfunctorily.

This thy last reasoning words touch'd only.

Milton, P. L.

17. To TOUCH up. To repair, or improve by slight strokes, or little emendations.

What he saw was only her natural countenance touched up with the usual improvements of an aged coquette.

Addison.

To TOUCH. v. n.

1. To be in a state of junction so that no space is between them; as, two spheres touch only at points.

2. To fasten on; to take effect on.

Strong waters pierce metals, and will touch upon gold that will not touch upon silver.

Bacon.

3. To TOUCH at. To come to without stay.

The next day we touched at Sidon.
Oh fail not to touch at Peru;
With gold there our vessel we'll store.

Acts, xxvii. 3.

Conley.

Civil law and history are studies which a gentleman should not barely touch at, but constantly dwell upon.

Locke.

A fishmonger lately touched at Hammersmith.

Spectator.

4. To TOUCH on. To mention slightly.

The shewing by what steps knowledge comes into our minds, it may suffice to have only touched on.

Locke.

It is an use no body has dwelt upon; if the antiquaries have touched upon it, they immediately quitted it.

Addison.

5. To TOUCH on or upon. To go for a very short time.

He touched upon the Moluccoes.

Abbot.

Which monsters, lest the Trojan's pious host
Should bear, or touch upon th' enchanted coast,
Propitious Neptune steer'd their course by night.

Dryden.

I made a little voyage round the lake, and touched on the several towns that lie on its coasts.

Addison on Italy.

6. To TOUCH on or upon. To light upon in mental enquiries.

It is impossible to make observations in art or science which have not been touched upon by others.

Addison, Spect.

TOUCH.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Reach of any thing so that there is no space between the things reaching and reached.

No falsehood can endure

Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness.

Milton, P. L.

2. The sense of feeling.

O dear son Edgar,

Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say, I had eyes again.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The spirit of wine, or chemical oils, which are so hot in operation, are to the first touch cold.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

By touch the first pure qualities we learn,
Which quicken all things, hot, cold, moist and dry;
By touch, hard, soft, rough, smooth, we do discern;
By touch, sweet pleasure, and sharp pain we try.

Davies.

The spider's touch how exquisitely fine!

Feels at each thread, and lives along the line.

Pope.

The fifth sense is touch, a sense over the whole body.

Locke.

3. The act of touching.

The touch of the cold water made a pretty kind of shrugging come over her body, like the twinkling of the fairest among the fixed stars.

Sidney.

With one virtuous touch

The archchemick sun produces precious things.

Milton, P. L.

4. State of being touched.

The time was once when thou unurg'd wou'dst vow,
That never touch was welcome to thy hand,
Unless I touch'd.

Shakespeare.

5. Examination, as by a stone. Dr. Johnson. — A common kind of black marble, frequently made use of in ornaments, was formerly called touch. From its solidity and firmness it was also used as the test of gold; and from this use of it the name itself was taken. It seems to be the same with that anciently called basalt. Rev. Mr. Whalley's Note on the following passage in B. Jonson's Forest, II. "Show of touch or marble." — So Fuller, Worth. in Yorksh. "Vulgar eyes confound black marble, polished to the height, with touch, geat, (jet,) and ebony." Hence perhaps the phrase, as true as touch. "She — though true as touch, though daughter of a king," &c. Spenser, F. Q. i. iii. 2. See TOUCHSTONE.

To-morrow, good sir Michael, is a day

Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men

Must bide the touch.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Ah Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,

To try if thou be current gold indeed.

Shakespeare.

Albeit some of these articles were merely devised, yet the duke being of base gold, and fearing the touch, subscribed that he did acknowledge his offences.

Hayward.

6. Test; that by which any thing is examined.

The law-makers rather respected their own benefit than equity, the true touch of all laws.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

7. Proof; tried qualities.

Come my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
My friends of noble touch! when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. Shakspeare.

8. [Touche, Fr.] Single act of a pencil upon the picture.

Artificial strife
Lives in those touches, livelier than life. Shakspeare.

It will be the more difficult for him to conceive when he has only a relation given him, without the nice touches which make the graces of the picture. Dryden.

Never give the least touch with your pencil, till you have well examined your design. Dryden.

9. Feature; lineament.

Thus Rosalind of many parts
By heav'nly synod was devis'd;
Of many faces, eyes and hearts,
To have the touches dearest priz'd. Shakspeare, As you like it.
A son was copy'd from his voice so much,
The very same in every little touch. Dryden.

10. Act of the hand upon a musical instrument.

Here let the sounds of musick
Creep in our ears; soft stilness and the night
Become the touches of sweet harmony. Shakspeare.
Nor wanted power to mitigate and swage,
With solemn touches, troubled thoughts. Milton, P. L.

11. Power of exciting the affections.

Not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak to us. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

12. Something of passion or affection.

He which without our nature could not on earth suffer for the world, doth now also, by means thereof, both make intercession to God for sinners, and exercise dominion over all men, with a true, natural, and a sensible touch of mercy. Hooker.

He loves us not:
He wants the natural touch. Shakspeare.

13. Particular relation.

Speech of touch towards others should be sparingly used; for discourse ought to be as a field, without coming home to any man. Bacon, Essays.

14. [Touche, Fr.] A stroke.

Our kings no sooner fall out, but their mints make war upon one another; one meets sometimes with very nice touches of raillery. Addison on Medals.

Another smart touch of the author we meet with in the fifth page, where, without any preparation, he breaks out all on a sudden into a vein of poetry. Addison.

Though its error may be such,
As Knags and Burgess cannot hit,
It yet may feel the nicer touch
Of Wicherley's or Congreve's wit. Prior.
He gave the little wealth he had
To build a house for fools and mad;
To shew by one satyrick touch,
No nation wanted it so much. Swift.

15. Animadversion; censure.

I never bare any touch of conscience with greater regret.
King Charles.

Soon mov'd with touch of blame, thus Eve,
What words have pass'd thy lips, Adam, severe. Milton, P. L.

16. Exact performance of agreement.

Touch kept is commended, yet credit to keepe
Is pay and dispatch him, yet ever ye sleepe. Tusser.
Quoth Hudibras, thou offer'st much,
But art not able to keep touch. Hudibras.

I keep touch both with my promise to Philopolis, and with my own usual frugality in these kind of collations. More.
He was not to expect that so perfidious a creature should keep touch with him. L'Estrange.

17. A small quantity intermingled.

Madam, I have a touch of your condition,
That cannot brook the accent of reproof. Shakspeare.

This coming still nearer to an aspiration, a touch of it may perhaps be an ingredient in the rough guttural pronunciation of the Welsh and Irish. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

18. A hint; slight notice given.

The king your master knows their disposition very well;
a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon.

19. A cant word for a slight essay.

Print my preface in such a form as, in the booksellers' phrase, will make a sixpenny touch. Swift.

TO'UCHABLE. adj. [from touch.] Tangible; that may be touched.

TOUCH-HOLE. n. s. [touch and hole.] The hole through which the fire is conveyed to the powder in the gun.

In a piece of ordnance, if you speak in the touch-hole, and another lay his ear to the mouth of the piece, the sound is far better heard than in the open air. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

TO'UCHINESS. n. s. [from touchy.] Peevishness;
irascibility.

My friends resented it as a motion not guided with such discretion as the touchiness of those times required. King Charles.

TO'UCHING. prep. [This word is originally a participle of touch.] With respect, regard, or relation to. It has often the particle as before it, of which there seems to be no use. Touching is now obsolete, though more concise than the mode of speech now adopted.

Touching things which belong to discipline, the church hath authority to make canons and decrees, even as we read in the apostles' times it did. Hooker.

Touching our person, seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
Whose ruin you three sought, that to her laws
We do deliver you. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

The heavens and the earth remained in the same state in which they were created, as touching their substance, though there was afterwards added multiplicity of perfection in respect of beauty. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Touching the debt, he took himself to be acquitted thereof.
Hayward.

Socrates chose rather to die than renounce or conceal his judgment touching the unity of the Godhead. South.

TO'UCHING. adj. [from touch.] Pathetick; affecting;
moving.

TO'UCHINGLY. adv. [from touch.] With feeling emotion; in a pathetick manner.

This last fable shows how touchingly the poet argues in love affairs. Garth.

TO'UCHMENOT. n. s. [cucumis agrestis, Lat.] An herb.
Ainsworth.

TO'UCHSTONE. n. s. [touch and stone; pierre de touche, French.]

1. Stone by which metals are examined.

Chilon would say, that gold was tried with the touchstone, and men with gold. Bacon, Apophth.

If he intends to deal clearly, why does he make the touchstone faulty, and the standard uncertain? Collier.

2. Any test or criterion.

Is not this their rule of such sufficiency, that we should use it as a touchstone to try the orders of the church? Hooker.

The work, the touchstone of the nature, is;
And by their operations things are known. Davies.
Money serves for the touchstone of common honesty. L'Estrange.

Time is the surest judge of truth: I am not vain enough to think I have left no faults in this, which that touchstone will not discover. Dryden, Span. Friar.

TO'UCHWOOD. n. s. [touch and wood.] Rotten wood used to catch the fire struck from the flint.

A race of resolute stout trees they are, so abounding with metal and heat, that they quickly take fire, and become touchwood. Houell, Voc. For.

To make white powder, the powder of rotten willows is best; spunk, or touchwood prepared, might make it russet. Brown.

To'UCHY.† adj. [from touch.] Peevish; irritable; irascible; apt to take fire. Dr. Johnson calls this a low word, citing only Collier and Arbuthnot. It was in use long before their time, and is excellently authorized.

In such a touchy time as this I had almost had my share.

Sir Hen. Wotton, Dispatch in 1620, Rem. p. 500.

You are touchy without all cause.

Beaum. and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

Was ever such a touchy man heard of?

Beaum. and Fl. Nice Valour.

Extravagances, to which curious eyes and touchy tempers are apt to run.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handson. p. 49.

You are upon a touchy point, and therefore treat so nice a subject with proportionable caution.

Collier on Pride.

You are so touchy, and take things so hotly, I am sure there must be some mistake in this.

Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

TOUGH.† adj. [toh, Sax. from the Goth. tiuhan, ducere. Serenius.]

1. Yielding to flexure or extension without fracture; not brittle.

Of bodies some are fragile, and some are tough, and not fragile.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Stiff; not easily flexible.

The bow he drew,

And almost join'd the horns of the tough eugh.

Dryden.

Fate with nature's law would strive,

To shew plain-dealing once an age may thrive;

And when so tough a frame she could not bend,

Exceeded her commission to befriend.

Dryden.

3. Not easily injured or broken.

O sides you are too tough!

Will you yet hold?

Shakespeare.

A body made of brass the crone demands

For her lov'd nursing, strung with nerves of wire,

Tough to the last, and with no toil to tire.

Dryden.

4. Viscous; clammy; ropy; tenacious.

5. Difficult: this is an ancient usage of the word, and is still a colloquial one; as, a tough piece of business.

If that I speke of love, or make it tough.

Chaucer.

To TOUGHEN. v. n. [from tough.] To grow tough.

Hops off the kiln lay three weeks to cool, give and toughen, else they will break to powder.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

To TOUGHEN. v. a. To make tough.

TOUGHNESS.† n. s. [from tough; Sax. tohnneþre.]

1. Not brittleness; flexibility.

To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoct bodies in water for three days; but they must be such into which the water will not enter.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A well-temper'd sword is bent at will,

But keeps the native toughness of the steel.

Dryden.

2. Viscosity; tenacity; clamminess; glutinousness.

In the first stage the viscosity or toughness of the fluids should be taken off by diluents.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

3. Firmness against injury.

I confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness.

Shakespeare, Othello.

TOUPEE.† } n. s. [French, toupet. Dr. Johnson

TOUPET. } gives toupet, with an example from

Swift. "This is conformable to the etymology, but toupee is sometimes written; and any thing is preferable to a word so totally remote from English rules as toupet, since it is invariably spoken according to the other spelling." Nares, Elem. of Orthoep. p. 316.] A kind of foretop; natural or artificial hair particularly dressed on the forehead.

Remember second-hand toupees and repaired ruffles.

I see nothing but red heels below, high toupees and largely aspiring curls above, accompanied with the scent of amber.

Hist. of Duelling, (1770,) p. 101.

TOUR.† n. s. [tour, French.]

1. Ramble; roving journey.

I made the tour of all the king's palaces.

Addison.

Were it permitted, he'd make the tour of the whole system of the sun.

Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

2. Turn; revolution. In both these senses it is rather French than English.

First Ptolemy his scheme celestial wrought,

And of machines a wild provision brought;

Orbs centrick and eccentric he prepares,

Cycles and epicycles, solid spheres

In order plac'd, and with bright globes inlaid,

To solve the tours by heavenly bodies made.

Blackmore.

3. In Milton it is probably tower; elevation; high flight.

The bird of Jove, stoop'd from his airy tour,

Two birds of gayest plume before him drove.

Milton, P. L.

4. Turn; cast; manner.

The whole tour of the passage is this: a man given to superstition can have no security, day or night, sleeping or waking.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 18.

TO'URIST.* n. s. [from tour.] One who makes a tour or ramble. A modern word.

TOURN.* n. s.

1. The sheriff's turn, or court.

The sheriff's tourn decided in all affairs, civil and criminal.

Burke, Abridg. Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

2. A spinning-wheel. Exmore dialect.

Grose.

TO'URNAMENT.† } n. s. [tournamentum, low Latin;

TO'URNEY. } represéntia, torneamenta, hasting

ludia: Occurrit apud Cantacuzenum, lib. i. cap. 42.

Meursii Gloss. Græco-Barb.]

1. Tilt; just; military sport; mock encounter.

They might, under the pretence

Of tilts and tournaments,

Provide them horse and armour for defence.

Daniel.

For justs, tourneys, and barriers, the glories of them are the chariots, wherein challengers make their entry.

Bacon.

Whence came all those justs, tiltings, and tournaments, so much in use in these parts.

Temple, Miscell.

He liv'd with all the pomp he could devise,

At tilts and tournaments obtain'd the prize,

But found no favour in his lady's eyes.

Dryden.

2. Milton uses it simply for encounter; shock of battle.

With cruel tournament the squadrons join!

Where cattle pastur'd late, now scatter'd lies

With carcasses, and arms, the ensanguin'd field.

Milton, P. L.

To TO'URNEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To tilt in the lists.

An elfin born of noble state,

Well could he tourney, and in lists debate.

Spenser.

TO'URNIQUET. n. s. [French.] A bandage used in amputations, straitened or relaxed by the turn of a handle.

If the orifice does not readily appear, loosen the tourniquet, and the effusion of blood will direct you to it.

Sharp.

To TOUSE.† v. a. [probably of the same original with taw, tease, tose. Dr. Johnson. — This appears to be the case. See the example, now added, from Gower. To toze, is to pull abroad wool, &c. Exm. dialect. Grose.]

1. To pull; to tear; to haul; to drag: whence touser or towzer, the name of a mastiff.

What sheepe that is full of wooll,

Upon his back they tose and pull.

Gower, Conf. Am. Prol.

As a bear whom angry curs have towt'd,

Having off shak'd them and escap'd their hands,

Becomes more fell, and all that him withstands

Treads down and overthrowes.

Spenser.

Take him hence; to the rack with him:

We'll touse you joint by joint,

But we will know his purpose.

Shakespeare.

T O W

To touze such things as flutter,
To honest Bounce is bread and butter. Swift.
2. To disorder the hair. Cotgrave and Sherwood. It is yet used, in some places, for disordering the dress.
To TOWSE. * v. n. To tear; to rave.

She, struggling still with those
That 'gainst her rising pain their utmost strength oppose, Starts, tosses, tumbles, strikes, turns, touses, spurns and sprawls,
Casting with furious limbs her holders to the walls.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 7.
To TO'USLE. * v. a. The diminutive of touse in the second sense: a low expression.

Tow. n. s. [top, Saxon.] Flax or hemp beaten and combed into a filamentous substance.

Tow twisted round the handle of an instrument makes it easier to be held. Sharp.

To TOW. v. a. [teon, teohan, Saxon, to lead; toghen, old Dutch.] To draw by a rope, particularly through the water.

Thou knew'st too well
My heart was to thy rudder ty'd by the string,
And thou should'st tow me after. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
The seamen towed, and I shoved, till we arrived. Swift.

To WAGE. * n. s. [from tow; Fr. toilage.]

1. The act of towing. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.
2. Money paid for towing. Bailey.

To WLINE. * n. s. [Sax. toh-line.] The rope or chain used in towing.

To WARD. † } prep. [topand, topanber, Saxon.]
To WARDS. }

1. In a direction to.
He set his face toward the wilderness. Num. xxiv. 1.
2. With local tendency to.

The currents drive,
Tow'rds the retreating sea, their furious tide. Milton, P. L.

3. Near to: as, the danger now comes towards him.
4. With respect to; touching; regarding.

We brought them to as great peace between themselves, as love towards us for having made the peace. Sidney.

Repent you not,
As that the sin hath brought you to this shame,
Which sorrow's always tow'rds ourselves, not heaven?
Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

His heart relented towards her. Milton, P. L.
By our law, no good is to be left undone towards all, not the good of the tongue, the hand, the heart. South.

5. With ideal tendency to.
This was the first alarm England received towards any trouble, after it had enjoyed for so many years the most uninterrrupted prosperity. Clarendon.

6. Nearly; little less than.
I am towards nine years older since I left you. Swift.

7. This word used sometimes to have its two syllables separated from each other, and the noun governed put between them. Mason.

Whose streams run forth there to the salt sea-side,
Here back return, and to their spring ward go. Fairfax.
By our state I mean, what our condition is to God ward.

Wh. Duty of Man.

To WARD. † } adv. [It is doubtful whether in this use
To WARDS. } the word be adverb or adjective.]
Near; at hand; in a state of preparation.

What might be toward that this sweaty haste
Doth make the night joint labourer with the day. Shakespeare.
We have a foolish trifling banquet towards.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

To WARD. † adj. Ready to do or learn; not froward.
Why, that is spoken like a toward prince.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

To WARDLINESS. n. s. [from towardly.] Docility;

 coach, and made the tour of Holland in a trackscoute.

Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

TRACT. n. s. [tractus, Lat.]

1. Any kind of extended substance.

Heaven hides nothing from thy view,

Nor the deep tract of hell. Milton, P. L.

2. A region; a quantity of land.

Only there are some tracts which, by high mountains, are barred from air and fresh wind. Raleigh.
 Monte Circeo, by Homer called insula Æea, is a very high mountain joined to the main land by a narrow tract of earth. Addison.

3. Continuity; any thing protracted, or drawn out to length.

The myrtle flourisheth still; and wonderful it is that for so long a tract of time she should still continue fresh. Howell.

Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit, Improv'd by tract of time, and wing'd ascend Ethereal as we. Milton, P. L.

As in tract of speech a dubious word is easily known by the coherence with the rest, and a dubious letter by the whole word; so may a deaf person, having competent knowledge of language, by an acute sagacity by some more evident word discerned by his eye, know the sense. Holder.

4. Course; manner of process; unless it means, in this place, rather, discourse; explanation.

The tract of every thing
 Would, by a good discourser, lose some life
 Which action's self was tongue to. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

5. It seems to be used by Shakspeare for track.

The weary sun hath made a golden set,
 And, by the bright tract of his fiery car,
 Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow. Shakspeare.

 Hath tracted forth some salvage beasts trade. Spenser, F. Q. ii. vi. 39.

Speak to me, Muse, the man, who after Troy was sackt, Saw many towns and men, and could their manners tract. B. Jonson, Horace.

2. An ancient abbreviation of retract and protract: as, "to tract and speak of a thing again, retractare," Huloet; "to tract the time." Barret.

TRACTABILITY.* n. s. [tractabilité, old French. La-combe.] Capability of being managed.

TRA'CTABLE. adj. [tractabilis, Lat. traitable, Fr.]

1. Manageable; docile; compliant; obsequious; practicable; governable.

For moderation of those affections growing from the very natural bitterness and gall of adversity, the Scripture much alledgeth contrary fruit, which affliction likewise hath, whensoever it falleth on them that are tractable, the grace of God's Holy Spirit concurring therewith. Hooker.

Tractable obedience is a slave
 To each incensed will. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

If thou dost find him tractable to us,
 Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
 If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
 Be thou so too. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

As those who are bent to do wickedly will never want tempters to urge them on in an evil course; so those who yield themselves tractable to good motions, will find the spirit of God more ready to encourage them. Tillotson.

If a strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable, and quietly submit. Locke.

2. Palpable; such as may be handled.

The other measures are of continued quantity visible, and for the most part tractable; whereas time is always transient, neither to be seen nor felt. Holder on Time.

TRA'CTABLENESS. n. s. [from tractable.] The state of being tractable; compliance; obsequiousness.

It will be objected, that whatsoever I fancy of children's tractableness, yet many will never apply. Locke.

Though philosophical tractates make enumeration of authors, yet are their reasons usually introduced. Brown.

We need no other evidence than Glanville's tractate. Hale.

TRACTA'TION.* n. s. [tractatio, Lat.] Discussion of a subject.

A fit task for him, that intended a full tractation of the points controverted. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 387.

TRA'CTILE. adj. [tractus, Lat.] Capable to be drawn out or extended in length; ductile.

The consistences of bodies are very divers; fragile, tough; flexible, inflexible; tractile, or to be drawn forth in length, intractile. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

TRACTI'LITY. n. s. [from tractile.] The quality of being tractile.

Silver, whose ductility and tractility are much inferior to those of gold, was drawn out to so slender a wire, that a single grain amounted to twenty-seven feet. Derham

TRA'CTION. n. s. [tractus, Lat.] The act of drawing; the state of being drawn.

The malleus being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inwards to bring the terms of that line nearer in proportion as it is curved, and so gives a tension to the tympanum. Holder.

TRADE. n. s. [tratta, Ital.]

1. Traffick; commerce; exchange of goods for other goods, or for money.

Whosoever commands the sea, commands the trade; whosoever commands the trade of the world, commands the riches of the world, and consequently the world itself. Raleigh.
Trade increases in one place and decays in another. Temple.

2. Occupation; particular employment, whether manual or mercantile, distinguished from the liberal arts or learned professions.

Appoint to every one that is not able to live of his freehold a certain trade of life; the which trade he shall be bound to follow. Spenser on Ireland.

How dizzy! half way down
 Hangs one that gathers samphire, dreadful trade. Shakspeare.

I'll mountebank their loves, and come home below'd
 Of all the trades in Rome. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Fear and piety,
 Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
 Decline to your confounding contraries. Shakspeare.

The rude Equicolæ,
 Hunting their sport, and plundering was their trade. Dryden.
 Fight under him; there's plunder to be had;
 A captain is a very gainful trade. Dryden, Juv.

The whole division that to Mars pertains,
 All trades of death, that deal in steel for gains. Dryden.

The emperor Pertinax applied himself in his youth to a gainful trade; his father, judging him fit for a better employment, had a mind to turn his education another way; the son was obstinate in pursuing so profitable a trade, a sort of merchandise of wood. Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. Instruments of any occupation.

The shepherd bears
 His house and household gods, his trade of war,
 His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden, Virg.

Call some of young years to train them up in that trade; and so fit them for weighty affairs. Bacon.

5. Custom; habit; standing practice.

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade. Shakspeare.

6. Formerly trade was used of domestick, and traffick of foreign commerce.

To TRADE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To traffick; to deal; to hold commerce.

He commanded these servants to be called, to know how much every man had gained by trading. St. Luke, xix. 15.

Delos, a sacred place, grew a free port, where nations warring with one another resorted with their goods, and traded.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

Maximinus traded with the Goths in the product of his estate in Thracia.

Arbuthnot.

2. To act merely for money.

Saucy and overbold! how did you dare

To trade and traffick with Macbeth,

In riddles and affairs of death?

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. Having a trading wind.

They on the trading flood ply toward the pole.

Milton, P. L.

To TRADE. v. a. To sell or exchange in commerce.

They were thy merchants: they traded the persons of men and vessels of brass in thy market.

Ezek. xxvii. 13.

TRADE-WIND. n. s. [trade and wind.] The monsoon; the periodical wind between the tropicks.

Thus to the eastern wealth through storms we go,

But now, the Cape once doubled, fear no more;

A constant trade-wind will securely blow,

And gently lay us on the spicy shore.

Dryden.

His were the projects of perpetuum mobiles, and of increasing the trade-wind by vast plantations of reeds.

Arbuthnot.

Comfortable is the trade-wind to the equatorial parts, without which life would be both short and grievous.

Cheyne.

TRA'DED. adj. [from trade.] Versed; practised.

Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;

For villainy is not without such rheum:

And he long traded in it makes it seem

Like rivers of remorse and innocence.

Shakspeare.

Eyes and ears,

Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores

Of will and judgement.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

TRA'DEFUL. † adj. [trade and full.] Commercial; busy in traffick.

Ye *trade*ful merchants that with weary toil

Do seek most precious things to make your gain,

And both the Indies of their treasure spoil,

What needeth you to seek so far in vain.

Spenser.

Musing maid, to thee I come,

Hating the *trade*ful city's hum.

Dr. Warton, Ode to Solitude.

TRA'DER. n. s. [from trade.]

1. One engaged in merchandise or commerce.

Pilgrims are going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Now the victory's won,

We return to our lasses like fortunate traders,

Triumphant with spoils.

Dryden.

Many traders will necessitate merchants to trade for less profit, and consequently be more frugal.

Child on Trade.

That day traders sum up the accounts of the week.

Swift.

2. One long used in the methods of money getting; a practitioner.

TRA'DESFOLK. n. s. [trade and folk.] People employed in trades.

By his advice victuallers and tradesfolk would soon get all the money of the kingdom into their hands.

Swift.

TRA'DESMAN. n. s. [trade and man.] A shopkeeper.

A merchant is called a trader, but not a tradesman; and it seems distinguished in Shakspeare from a man that labours with his hands.

I live by the awl, I meddle with no tradesmen's matters.

Shakspeare.

They rather had beheld

Dissenting numbers pest'ring streets, than see

Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going

About their functions.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Order a trade thither and thence so as some few merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessities, may not grind them.

Bacon.

Tradesmen might conjecture what doings they were like to have in their respective dealings.

Graunt.

M. Jordain would not be thought a tradesman, but ordered some silk to be measured out to his partner's friends: now I give up my shop.

Prior.

From a plain tradesman with a shop, he is now grown a very rich country gentleman.

Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

Domesticks in a gentleman's family have more opportunities of improving their minds, than the ordinary tradesmen.

Swift.

Boastful and rough, your first son is a squire;

The next a tradesman, meek and much a liar.

Pope, Ep.

Penitens was a busy notable tradesman, very prosperous in his dealings, but died in the thirty-fifth year of his age.

Law.

TRADITION. † n. s. [tradition, French; traditio, Latin.]

1. The act or practice of delivering accounts from mouth to mouth without written memorials; communication from age to age.

To learn it we have tradition; namely, that so we believe, because both we from our predecessors, and they from theirs, have so received.

Hooker.

2. Any thing delivered orally from age to age.

They the truth

With superstitions and traditions taint,

Left only in those written records pure.

Milton, P. L.

It is well known to have been a general tradition amongst these nations, that the world was made and had a beginning.

Wilkins.

Our old solemnities

From no blind zeal, or fond tradition rise;

But, say'd from death, our Argives yearly pay

These grateful honours to the God of day.

Pope, Statius.

3. Traditional practice; old custom.

Throw away respect,

Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

4. The act of giving up; delivery: a latinism.

A deed takes effect only from the tradition or delivery.

Blackstone.

TRADITIONAL. adj. [from tradition.]

1. Delivered by tradition; descending by oral communication; transmitted by the foregoing to the following age.

Whence may we have the infallible traditional sense of Scripture, if not from the heads of their church?

Tillotson.

If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem the advantage lies on the side of children born from wealthy parents, the same traditional sloth and luxury which render their body weak, perhaps refining their spirits.

Swift.

2. Observant of traditions, or idle rites. Not used, nor proper.

God forbid

We should infringe the holy privilege

Of sanctuary!

— You are too senseless obstinate, my lord;

Too ceremonious and traditional.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

TRADITIONALLY. adv. [from traditional.]

1. By transmission from age to age.

There is another channel wherein this doctrine is traditionally derived from Saint John, namely, from the clergy of Asia.

Burnet, Theory.

2. From tradition without evidence of written memorials.

It crosseth the proverb, and Rome might well be built in a day, if that were true which is traditionally related by Strabo, that the great cities Anchiale and Tarsus were built by Sardanapalus both in one day.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

TRADITIONARY. adj. [from tradition.] Delivered by tradition; transmissive; handed down from age to age.

Suppose the same traditionary strain

Of rigid manners in the house remain,

Inveterate truth, an old plain Sabine's heart.

Dryden

Oral tradition is more uncertain, especially if we may take that to be the traditionary sense of texts of Scripture.

Tillotson.

The fame of our Saviour, which in so few years had gone through the whole earth, was confirmed and perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after ages.
Addison on the Chr. Relig.

TRADITIONER.* } n. s. [from tradition.] One who TRADITIONIST. } adheres to tradition.

The eastern traditioners mean by this a continual sadness and contristation of heart.

Gregory, Notes on Script. (ed. 1684,) p. 123.

We are not able to ascertain who the Masorites or traditionists were, that settled the present standard of the Hebrew Scriptures.
Pilkington, Remarks on Script. (1759,) p. 15.

TRADITIVE.† adj. [from traditive, Fr. from trado, Lat.]

Transmitted or transmissible from age to age.

The traditive interpretation and practice of the church.

Bp. Taylor on Confirmation.

Suppose we on things traditive divide,
And both appeal to Scripture to decide.

Dryden, Hind and Panther.

To TRADUCE. v. a. [from traduco, Lat. traduire, Fr.]

1. To censure; to condemn; to represent as blameable; to calumniate; to decry.

The best stratagem that Satan hath, who knoweth his kingdom to be no one way more shaken than by the publick devout prayers of God's church, is by traducing the form and manner of them, to bring them into contempt, and so slack the force of all men's devotion towards them.
Hooker.

Those particular ceremonies which they pretend to be so scandalous, we shall more thoroughly sift, when other things also traduced in the publick duties of the church are, together with these, to be touched.
Hooker.

Whilst calumny has such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth: as long as men are malicious and designing they will be traducing.
Gov. of the Tongue.

From that preface he took his hint; though he had the baseness not to acknowledge his benefactor, but instead of it to traduce me in libel.
Dryden, Fab.

2. To propagate; to encrease or continue by deriving one from another.

None are so gross as to contend for this,
That souls from bodies may traduced be;

Between whose natures no proportion is,
When root and branch in nature still agree.

Davies.

From these only the race of perfect animals were propagated and traduced over the earth.
Hale.

Some believe the soul is made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant: whether it be immediately created or traduced hath been the great ball of contention to the latter ages.
Glanville, Scepis.

TRADUCEMENT.† n. s. [from traduce.] Censure; obloquy.

Rome must know

The value of her own: 'twere a concealment

Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,

To hide your doings.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

If any take exceptions, — most of them are but traducements and pretensions.
Howell, Lett. iv. 23.

TRADUCER.† n. s. [from traduce.]

1. A false censurer; a calumniator.

St. Austin tells the traducers, that 'tis for want of a serious and solid casuistry, that they plunge themselves into such gross misrepresentations.
Biblioth. Bibl. (1720,) i. 323.

2. One who derives.

TRADUCIBLE. adj. [from traduce.] Such as may be derived.

Though oral tradition might be a competent discoverer of the original of a kingdom, yet such a tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws, because they are of a complex nature, and therefore not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages.
Hale.

To TRADUCT.* v. a. [from traduco, traductum, Lat.] To derive. Not now in use.

Consider our nature, as it is now depraved in us, and by the corrupt conduct of our sinful parents traducted unto us.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 281.

No soul of man from seed traducted is.

More, Pre-exist. of the Soul, st. 91.

TRADUCTION. n. s. [from traductio, Lat.]

1. Derivation from one of the same kind; propagation.

The patrons of traduction accuse their adversaries of affronting the attributes of God; and the asserters of creation impeach them of violence to the nature of things.
Glanville.

If by traduction came thy mind,

Our wonder is the less to find

A soul so charming from a stock so good;

Thy father was transfus'd into thy blood.

Dryden.

2. Tradition; transmission from one to another.

Touching traditional communication and traduction of truths connatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of them have had the help of that derivation.
Hale.

3. Conveyance; act of transferring.

Since America is divided on every side by considerable seas, and no passage known by land, the traduction of brutes could only be by shipping: though this was a method used for the traduction of useful cattle from hence thither, yet it is not credible that bears and lions should have so much care used for their transportation.
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

4. Transition.

The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction.
Bacon.

TRADUCTIVE.* adj. [from traduct.] Derivable; deducible.

It will consist only of a number of instances of similar customs of a striking nature, which all would judge imitations and traductive, if that system be true.
Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 95.

TRAFFICK.† n. s. [from trafique, Fr. traffico, Italian; from the Lat. transfretare, according to Barbazan.

See Roquefort in V. TRAFIQUE.]

1. Commerce; merchandising; large trade; exchange of commodities. Traffick was formerly used of foreign commerce in distinction from trade.

Traffick's thy god.

Shakespeare, Timon.

My father

A merchant of great traffick through the world.
Shakespeare.

Tyre, a town indeed of great wealth and traffick, and the most famous emporium of the elder times.
Heylin.

As he was, for his great wisdom, stiled the English Solomon, he followed the example of that wise king in nothing more than by advancing the traffick of his people.
Addison.

2. Commodities; subject of traffick.

You'll see a draggled damsel

From Billingsgate her fishy traffick bear.

Gay.

To TRAFFICK. v. n. [from traffiquer, French; trafficare, Italian.]

1. To practise commerce; to merchandise; to exchange commodities.

They first plant for corn and cattle, and after enlarge themselves for things to traffick withal.
Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

2. To trade meanly or mercenarily.

Saucy and overbold! how did you dare

To trade and traffick with Macbeth,

In riddles and affairs of death?

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

How hast thou dar'd to think so vilely of me,

That I would condescend to thy mean arts,

And traffick with thee for a prince's ruin?

Rowe.

To TRAFFICK.* v. a. To exchange in traffick.

If in our converse we do not interchange sober useful notions, we shall at the best but traffick toys and baubles, and most commonly infection and poison.
Gov. of the Tongue, p. 208.

TRAFFICKABLE.* adj. [from traffick.] Marketable.

Money itself — is in some cases a traffickable commodity.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. i. C. i.

TRAFFICKER. n. s. [from traffiquer, Fr. from traffick.]

Trader; merchant.

Your Argosies with portly sail,

Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,

Do overpeer the petty traffickers

That curtsy to them.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

In it are so many Jews very rich, and so great traffickers, that they have most of the English trade in their hands.

Addison.

TRA'GACANTH. n. s. [tragacantha, Latin.] A gum which proceeds from the incision of the root or trunk of a plant so called.

Trevoux.

TRAGE'DIAN. n. s. [from tragedy; tragædus, Lat.]

1. A writer of tragedy.

Many of the poets themselves had much nobler conceptions of the Deity, than to imagine him to have any thing corporal; as in these verses out of the ancient tragedian.

Stillington.

2. An actor of tragedy.

I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;
Speak, and look back, and pry on ev'ry side,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intending deep suspicion.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

To the well-lung'd tragedian's rage

They recommend their labours of the stage.

Dryden.

TRA'GEDY. n. s. [tragedie, Fr. tragædia, Lat.]

1. A dramattick representation of a serious action.

Thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,
Will now conclude their plotted tragedy.

Shakspeare.

All our tragedies are of kings and princes; but you never see a poor man have a part unless it be as a chorus, or to fill up the scenes, to dance, or to be derided.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

Imitate the sister of painting, tragedy; which employs the whole forces of her art in the main action.

Dryden.

An anthem to their god Dionysus, whilst the goat stood at his altar to be sacrificed, was called the goat-song or tragedy.

Rymer, Trag. of the last Age.

There to her heart sad tragedy address

The dagger, wont to pierce the tyrant's breast.

Popc.

2. Any mournful or dreadful event.

I shall laugh at this,
That they, who brought me in my master's hate,
I live to look upon their tragedy.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

I look upon this now done in England as another act of the same tragedy which was lately begun in Scotland.

King Charles.

TRA'GICAL. } adj. [tragicus, Lat. tragique, Fr.]

TRA'GICK. }

1. Relating to tragedy.

The root and tragical effect,
Vouchsafe, O thou the mournfull'st muse of nine,
That wont'st the tragick stage for to direct,
In funeral complaints and wailful time
Reveal to me.

Spenser, Muinpotos.

Thy Clarence he is dead that stabb'd my Edward;

And the beholders of this tragick play,

Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

2. Mournful; calamitous; sorrowful; dreadful.

A dire induction I am witness to;
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.

Shakspeare.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day,

Is crept into the bosom of the sea:

And now loud howling wolves arouse the jades,

That drag the tragick melancholy night.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Why look you still so stern and tragical?

So tragical and merited a fate

Shall swallow those who God and justice hate.

Sandys.

I now must change those notes to tragick.

Milton, P. L.

The tale of this song is a pretty tragical story; and pleases because it is a copy of nature.

Addison.

Bid them dress their bloody altars

With every circumstance of tragick pomp.

Rowe.

TRA'GICALLY.† adv. [from tragical.]

1. In a tragical manner; in a manner befitting tragedy.

Juvenal's genius was sharp and eager; and as his provocations were great, he has revenged them tragically.

Dryden.

2. Mournfully; sorrowfully; calamitously.

Many complain and cry out very tragically of the wretchedness of their hearts.

South, Serm. vi. 465.

TRA'GICALNESS. n. s. [from tragical.] Mournfulness; calamitousness.

Like bold Phaëtons we despise all benefits of the Father of Light, unless we may guide his chariot; and we moralize the fable as well in the tragicalness of the event as in the insolence of the undertaking.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

TRAGICO'MEDY. n. s. [tragicomedie, Fr. from tragedy and comedy.] A drama compounded of merry and serious events.

On the world's stage, when our applause grows high,

For acting here life's tragi-comedy,

The lookers on will say we act not well,

Unless the last the former scenes excel.

Denham.

The faults of that drama are in the kind of it, which is tragi-comedy; but it was given to the people.

Dryden.

We have often had tragi-comedies upon the English theatre with success: but in that sort of composition the tragedy and comedy are in distinct scenes.

Gay.

TRAGICO'MICAL. adj. [tragicomique, Fr. tragical and comical.]

1. Relating to tragi-comedy.

The whole art of the tragi-comical farce lies in interweaving the several kinds of the drama, so that they cannot be distinguished.

Gay, What d'ye call it.

2. Consisting of a mixture of mirth with sorrow.

TRAGICO'MICALLY. adv. [from tragicomical.] In a tragicomical manner.

Laws my Pindarick parents matter'd not,

So I was tragicomically got.

Bramston.

To TRAJE'CT. v. a. [trajectus, Latin.] To cast through; to throw.

The disputes of those assuming confidants that think so highly of their attainments, are like the controversy of those in Plato's den, who having never seen but the shadow of an horse trajected, eagerly contended, whether its neighing proceeded from its appearing mane or tail.

Glanville, Scepriis.

If there are different kinds of æther, they have a different degree of rarity; by which it becomes so fit a medium for trajecting the light of all cœlestial bodies.

Grew, Cosm.

If the sun's light be trajected through three or more cross prisms successively, those rays which in the first prism are refracted more than others, are in all the following prisms refracted more than others in the same proportion.

Newton.

TRAJECT. n. s. [trajet, Fr. trajectus, Lat.] A ferry; a passage for a water-carriage.

What notes and garments he doth give thee,

Bring to the traject, to the common ferry,

Which trades to Venice.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

TRAJE'CTION.† n. s. [trajectio, Lat.]

1. The act of darting through.

Later astronomers have observed the free motion of such comets as have, by a trajection through the æther, wandered through the cœlestial or interstellar part of the universe.

Boyle.

2. Emission.

The trajections of such an object more sharply pierce the martyred soul of John, than afterwards did the nails the crucified body of Peter.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Transposition.

Nor is the postposition of the nominative case to the verb against the use of the tongue; nor the trajection here so great, but the Latin will admit the same order of the words.

Mede on Dan. p. 36.

The trajection is so familiar, that I cannot but wonder that any should scruple at it.

Knatchbull, Annot. N. Test. p. 319.

TRAJE'CTORY.* n. s. [from traject.] The orbit of a comet.

I might preface to you in the words of Sir Isaac Newton, when he found out the trajectory of a comet.

Harris on the 53d ch. of Isa. p. 124.

To TRAIL. v. a. [trailler, Fr.]

1. To hunt by the track.

2. To draw along the ground.

Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully;

Trail your steel pikes. *Shakspeare, Coriol.*Faintly he staggered through the hissing throng,
And hung his head, and trail'd his legs along. Dryden.

3. To draw a long floating or waving body.

What boots the regal circle on his head,
That long behind he trails his pompous robe,
And, of all monarchs, only grasps the globe? *Pope.*4. [Treglen, Dutch.] To draw; to drag.Because they shall not trail me through their streetsLike a wild beast, I am content to go. *Milton, S. A.*Thrice happy poet, who may trail
Thy house about thee like a snail;
Or harness'd to a nag, at ease
Take journies in it like a chaise;
Or in a boat, whene'er thou wilt,
Canst make it serve thee for a tilt. *Swift.*To TRAIL. v. n. To be drawn out in length.When his brother saw the red blood trail

Adown so fast, and all his armour steepe,

For very felness loud he gan to weep. *Spenser.*Swift men of foot, whose broad-set backs their trailing hair did hide. *Chapman.*Since the flames pursu'd the trailing smoke,He knew his boon was granted. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

From o'er the roof the blaze began to move,

And trailing vanish'd in th' Ideal grove.

It swept a path in heav'n, and shone a guide,

Then in a steaming stench of sulphur dy'd. *Dryden, Æn.*TRAIL. n. s. [from the verb.]1. Scent left on the ground by the animal pursued;
track followed by the hunter.See but the issue of my jealousy: if I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again. *Shakspeare.*How cheerfully on the false trail they cry!Oh, this is counter, you false Danish dogs. Shakspeare.

I do think, or else this brain of mine

Hunts not the trail of policy so sure

As I have us'd to do, that I have found

The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Any thing drawn to length.

From thence the fuming trail began to spread,And lambent glories danc'd about her head. *Dryden, Æn.*When lightning shoots in glittering trails along:

It shines, 'tis true, and gilds the gloomy night;

But when it strikes, 'tis fatal. Rowe, Royal Convert.

3. Any thing drawn behind in long undulations.

And round about her work she did empale

With a fair border wrought of sundry flowers,
Enwoven with an ivy winding trail. Spenser, Musipolmos.

A sudden star it shot through liquid air,

And drew behind a radiant trail of hair. *Pope.*To TRAIN.† v. a. [trainer, Fr. from the German tragen, to draw; the old Fr. word being traigner, afterwards trainer. Wachter, and Serenius.]

In hollow cube

Training his devilish enginery. Milton, P. L.

2. To draw; to entice; to invite; to allure.

Something have I added, which want of time trained me from at that present. Anderson, Serm. at Burghley, (1576,) Ded.

If but twelve French

Were there in arms, they would be as a call

To train ten thousand English to their side. Shakspeare.

3. To draw by artifice or stratagem.

For that cause I train'd thee to my house.Oh train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note!

To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears.

Sing, Syren, to thyself, and I will doat:

Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,

And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shakspeare.

4. To draw from act to act by persuasion or promise.

We did train him on,

And his corruption being ta'en from us,

We as the spring of all shall pay for all. *Shakspeare, Hen. IV.*He trains on the easy Christian insensibly within the close ambushment of worst errors. *Milton, Anim. Rem. Def. Pref.*5. To educate; to bring up: commonly with up.

I can speak English,

For I was train'd up in the English court. Shakspeare.

A most rare speaker,

To nature none more bound; his training suchThat he may furnish and instruct great teachers. *Shakspeare.*A place for exercise and training up of youth in the fashion of the heathen. *2 Mac. iv. 9.*Call some of young years to train them up in that trade, and so fit them for weighty affairs. *Bacon.*Spirits train'd up in feast and song. *Milton, P. L.*The first Christians were by great hardships trained up for glory. *Tillotson.*The young soldier is to be trained on to the warfare of life; wherein care is to be taken that more things be not represented as dangerous than really are so. Locke.

6. To exercise, or form to any practice by exercise.

Abram armed his trained servants born in his house, and pursued. *Gen. xiv. 14.*The warrior horse here bred he's taught to train. *Dryden.*TRAIN. n. s. [train, Fr.]

To lay to draw him in by any train. Daniel, Civ. War.

Swoll'n with pride into the snare I fell

Of fair fallacious looks, venereal trains,Softened with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton, S. A.

Now to my charms

And to my wily trains! I shall ere long

Be well stock'd with as fair a herd as graz'd

About my mother Circe. *Milton, Comus.*The practice begins of crafty men upon the simple and good; these easily follow and are caught, while the others lay trains and pursue a game. Temple.

2. The tail of a bird.

Costly followers are not to be liked, lest while a man makes his train longer he makes his wings shorter. *Bacon.*Contracting their body, and being forced to draw in their fore parts to establish the hinder in the elevation of the train, if the fore parts do part and incline to the ground, the hinder grow too weak, and suffer the train to fall. *Brown.*The bird guideth her body with her train, and the ship is steered with the rudder. *Hakevill.*The other, whose gay train

Adorns him colour'd with the florid hue

Of rainbows and starry eyes. *Milton, P. L.*The train steers their flights, and turns their bodies like the rudder of a ship; as the kite, by a light turning of his train, moves his body which way he pleases. Ray.

3. The part of a gown that falls behind upon the ground.

A thousand pounds a-year, for pure respect!

That promises more thousands: honour's *train*Is longer than his fore skirts. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

4. A series; a consecution: either local or mental.

Rivers now stream and draw their humid train.Distinct gradual growth in knowledge carries its own light with it, in every step of its progression, in an easy and orderly train. *Locke.*If we reflect on what is observable in ourselves, we shall find our ideas always passing in train, one going and another coming, without intermission. *Locke.*They laboured in vain so far to reach the apostle's meaning, all along in the train of what he said. *Locke.*Some truths result from any ideas, as soon as the mind puts them into propositions; other truths require a train of ideas placed in order, a due comparing of them, and deductions made with attention. Locke.

What would'st thou have me do? consider well

The train of ills our love would draw behind it. Addison.

The author of your beings can by a glance of the eye, or a word speaking, enlighten your mind, and conduct you to a train of happy sentiments. Watts.

5. Process; method; state of procedure.

If things were once in this train, if virtue were established as necessary to reputation, and vice not only loaded with infamy, but made the infallible ruin of all men's pretensions, our duty would take root in our nature. Swift.

6. A retinue; a number of followers or attendants.

My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That in the most exact regard support
The worship of their names.

Shakspeare.

Our sire walks forth, without more train
Accompany'd than with his own complete Perfections.

Milton, P. L.

Thou should'st be seen
A goddess among gods, ador'd, and serv'd
By angels numberless, thy daily train.

Milton, P. L.

He comes not with a train to move our fear.

Dryden.

The king's daughter, with a lovely train
Of fellow nymphs, was sporting on the plain.

Addison.

He would put a check to the fury of war, that a stop might be put to those sins which are of its train.

Smalbridge.

7. An orderly company; a procession.

Fairest of stars, last in the train of night,
If better thou belong not to the dawn.

Milton, P. L.

Who the knights in green, and what the train
Of ladies dress'd with daisies on the plain?

Dryden.

8. The line of powder leading to the mine.

Since first they fail'd in their designs,
To take in heaven by springing mines;
And with unanswerable barrels
Of gunpowder, dispute their quarrels;
Now take a course more practicable,
By laying trains to fire the rabble.

Hudibras.

Shall he that gives fire to the train pretend to wash his hands of the hurt that's done by the playing of the mine?

L'Estrange, Fab.

9. TRAIN of artillery. Cannons accompanying an army.

With an army abundantly supplied with a train of artillery, and all other provisions necessary, the king advanced towards Scotland.

Clarendon.

TRAINABLE.* adj. [from To train.] That may be trained.

Youth [is] by grace and good counsell trainable to vertue.

Old Morality of Lusty Juventus.

TRAINBANDS. n. s. [train and band: I suppose for trained band.] The militia; the part of a community trained to martial exercise.

He directed the trainbands, which consisted of the most substantial householders, to attend.

Clarendon.

Give commission
To some bold man, whose loyalty you trust,
And let him raise the trainbands of the city.

Dryden.

A council of war was called, wherein we agreed to retreat:
but before we could give the word, the trainbands, taking advantage of our delay, fled first.

Addison.

TRAINBEARER. n. s. [train and bearer.] One that holds up a train.

TRAINED.* adj. [from train.] Having a train.

Where the huge hogheads sweat with trainy oil.

Gay.

To TRAIPSE. v. a. [A low word. See TRAPE.] To walk in a careless or sluttish manner.

Two slip-shod muses traipse along,
In lofty madness, meditating song.

Pope.

TRAIT. n. s. [trait, Fr.] A stroke; a touch. Scarce English.

By this single trait Homer marks an essential difference between the Iliad and Odyssey; that in the former the people perished by the folly of their kings; in this by their own folly.

Broome on the Odys.

TRAITOR. n. s. [traître, Fr. traditor, Lat.] One who being trusted betrays.

The law laid that grievous punishment upon traitors, to forfeit all their lands to the prince, that men might be terrified from committing treasons.

Spenser on Ireland.

If you flatter him, you are a great traitor to him.

Bacon.

I'll put him thus far into the plot, that he should be secured as a traitor; but when I am out of reach, he shall be released.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

There is no difference, in point of morality, whether a man calls me traitor in one word, or says I am one hired to betray my religion, and sell my country.

Swift.

TRAITOR.* adj. Traitorous.

Each rebel wish, each traitor inclination.

Johnson, Irene.

TRAITORLY. adj. [from traitor.] Treacherous; per-fidious.

These traitorly rascals' miseries are to be smil'd at, their offences being so capital.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

TRAITOROUS. adj. [from traitor.] Treacherous; perfidious; faithless.

What news with him, that traitorous wight?

Daniel.

Pontinius knows not you,

While you stand out upon these traitorous terms.

B. Jonson.

The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, he would have severely punished, and the neutrals noted.

Bacon.

More of his majesty's friends have lost their lives in this rebellion than of his traitorous subjects.

Addison, Freeholder.

TRAITOROUSLY. adv. [from traitorous.] In a manner suiting traitors; perfidiously; treacherously.

Good duke Humphry traiterously is murder'd

By Suffolk.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Thou bitter sweet! whom I had laid

Next me, me traiterously hast betray'd;

And unsuspected half invisibly

At once fled into him, and stay'd with me.

Donne.

They had traitorously endeavoured to subvert the fundamental laws, deprive the king of his regal power, and to place on his subjects a tyrannical power.

Clarendon.

TRAITOROUSNESS.* n. s. [from traitorous.] Perfidiousness; treachery.

Scott.

TRAITRESS. n. s. [from traitor.] A woman who betrays.

I, what I am, by what I was, o'ercome:

Traitress, restore my beauty and my charms,

Nor steal my conquest with my proper arms.

Dryden.

By the dire fury of a traitress wife,

Ends the sad evening of a stormy life.

Pope, Odys.

TRALATION.* n. s. [tralatio, Lat.] The using of a word in a less proper but more significant notion.

According to the broad tralation of his rude Rhemists.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 80.

TRALATI'IOUS.† adj. [tralatitius, Lat.] Metaphorical; not literal.

Unless we could contrive a perfect set of new words, there is no speaking of the Deity without using our old ones in a tralatitious sense.

Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bible, B. 4. ch. 1.

TRALATI'IOUSLY. adv. [from tralatitious.] Metaphorically; not literally; not according to the first intention of the word.

Language properly is that of the tongue directed to the ear by speaking; written language is tralatitiously so called, because it is made to represent to the eye the same words which are pronounced.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

To TRALI'NEATE. v. n. [trans and line.] To deviate from any direction.

If you tralinete from your father's mind,
What are you else but of a bastard kind?
Do then, as your progenitors have done,
And by their virtues prove yourself their son. Dryden.

TRALU'CENT. * adj. [tralucent, Lat.] Clear; translucent.

The aire's tralucent gallery. Sir J. Davies, Orchest. st. 47.
The clouds were of relievio, embossed and tralucent.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

TRAMMEL. † n. s. [tramel, old Fr. travail, mod. trama, tragula, Lat.]

1. A net in which birds or fish are caught.

The trammel differeth not much from the shape of the bunt, and serveth to such use as the wear and haking. Carew.

Birds are ta'en

By tramels, fishes by th' entangling saine. Sandys, Eccl. p. 14.

2. Any kind of net.

Her golden locks she roundly did upty
In braided trammels, that no looser hairs
Did out of order stray about her dainty ears. Spenser.

3. A kind of shackles in which horses are taught to pace.

I may go shufflingly at first, for I was never before walked in trammels; yet I shall drudge at constancy, till I have worn off the hitching in my pace. Dryden, Span. Friar.

To TRAMMEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To catch; to intercept.

If the assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch
With its surcease success. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

TRAMONTANE. * n. s. [tramontani, Ital. "those folks that live beyond the mountains!" Florio.] A foreigner; a stranger; a barbarian. The Italians gave this name, by way of contempt, to all who lived beyond the Alps.

May not we, that are gross-headed tramontanes, imagine and conceit that he is adored as a god amongst you?

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. (1616), p. 170.

A happiness those tramontanes ne'er tasted.
Massinger, Gr. Duke of Florence.

TRAMONTANE. * adj. Strange; foreign; barbarous.
Our tramontane lovers. Taiter, No. 222.

When virtue is so scarce,
That to suppose a scene where she presides,
Is tramontane, and stumbles all belief. Cowper, Task, B. iv.

To TRAMP. * v. a. [trampa, Su. Goth. trampen, Dutch.] To tread.

It is like unto the camamele; the more ye tread it and tramp it, the sweter it smelleth, the thicker it groweth, the better it spreddeth.

Stapleton, Fortr. of the Faith, (1565), fol. 86. b.

To TRAMP. * v. n. To travel on foot: a vulgar expression.

TRAMP. * } n. s. [from the verb.] A stroller; one
TRAMPER. } who travels on foot; a beggar. Tramp is the Sussex term, according to Grose: tramper is a common vulgar word in many parts of England.

We shall be pestered with all the trampers that pass upon the road. — Trampers indeed! I would have you to know his worship could have rode upon as good a gelding as any one in the country. Graves, Spirit. Quixote, B. 3. ch. 1.

To TRAMPLE. † v. a. [trampa, Su. Goth. trampen, Dutch. See To TRAMP.] To tread under foot with pride, contempt, or elevation.

Cast not your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet. St. Matt. vii. 6.

My strength shall trample thee as mire. Milton, P. L.

To TRAMPLE. v. n.

1. To tread in contempt.

Diogenes trampled on Plato's pride with greater of his own.
Gov. of the Tongue.

Your country's gods I scorn,

And trample on their ignominious altars. Rowe.

2. To tread quick and loudly.

I hear his thundering voice resound,
And trampling feet that shake the solid ground. Dryden.

TRAMPLER. n. s. [from trample.] One that tramples.

TRANA'TION. n. s. [trano, Latin.] The act of swimming over.

TRANSE. † n. s. [transe, Fr. transitus, Lat.] It might therefore be written transe. Dr. Johnson. — Anciently it was so written: "She out of her trouns awoke." Gower, Conf. Am. B. 3. And so Milton: See TRANSE.] An extasy; a state in which the soul is rapt into visions of future or distant things; a temporary absence of the soul from the body.

Gynecia had been in such a transe of musing, that Zelmene was fighting with the lion before she knew of any lion's coming.

Sidney.

Rapt with joy resembling heavenly madness,
My soul was ravish't quite as in a transe. Spenser, Sonn.

That Taliessen once, which made the rivers dance,
And in his rapture rais'd the mountains from their transe.

Drayton.

Sudden he starts,

Shook from his tender transe. Thomson, Spring.

To TRANSE. * v. a. [from the noun.] To entrance.

Would she but shade her tender brows with bay,
That now lie bare in careless wilful rage;
And transe herself in that sweet extacy,
That rouseth drooping thoughts of bashful age!

Bp. Hall, Defiance to Envy.

TRANCED. adj. [from transe.] Lying in a transe or extasy.

His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
Began to crack. Twice then the trumpets sounded,
And there I left him tranc'd. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

TRANGRAM. n. s. [a cant word.] An odd intricately contrived thing.

What's the meaning of all these trangrams and gimcracks?
What are you going about, jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbutnot.

TRANNEL. n. s. A sharp pin. Perhaps from trennel.

With a small trannel of iron, or a large nail ground to a sharp point, they mark the brick. Moxon, Mech. Es.

TRANQUIL. adj. [tranquille, Fr. tranquillus, Lat.] Quiet; peaceful; undisturbed.

I had been happy

So I had nothing known. Oh now, for ever Farewel the tranquil mind! farewel content! Shakspeare.

TRANQUILLITY. n. s. [tranquillitas, Latin; tranquillité, Fr.] Quiet; peace of mind; peace of condition; freedom from perturbation.

Leave off,

To let a weary wretch from her due rest,
And trouble dying souls' tranquillity. Spenser.

How reverend is the face of this tall pile,
Whose aged pillars rear their marble heads
To bear aloft its arch'd and ponderous roof,
By its own weight made stedfast and immovable,
Looking tranquillity. Congreve, Mourn. Bride.

You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so much tranquillity, so easy a transition, and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.

To TRANQUILLIZE. * v. a. [from tranquil; Fr. tranquilliser.] To compose; to render calm.

Coles, Dict. 1685.

The musick employed ought to be of a kind which experience has proved to be most efficacious in soothing and tranquillizing the spirits. Mason on Ch. Musick, p. 22.

When peace shall be restored, and Europe shall be tranquilized.
Bp. Watson, Charge, (1798.)

TRANQUILLY. * adv. [from tranquil.] In a tranquil state or manner.

TRA'NQUILNESS.* n. s. [from tranquil.] State of being tranquil.

To TRANSA'CT.† v. a. [transactus, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — Transacte, old French, transaction. In our language, transact is not ancient. See Walker's Hist. of Independency, 1660, P. iv. p. 36. to which Mr. Malone also refers: "Resolved that this House will transact with the persons now sitting in the other House, &c. — The Commons would not treat and confer with them in the usual way, as with the House of Peers; but found out a new word, to transact; and that neither but upon trial, &c."]

1. To manage; to negotiate; to conduct a treaty or affairs.

2. To perform; to do; to carry on.

It cannot be expected they should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some few of the disciples only, as the transfiguration and the agony. Addison.

To TRANSA'CT.* v. n. To conduct matters; to treat; to manage.

It is a matter of no small moment certainly for a man to be rightly informed, upon what terms, and conditions, he is to transact with God, and God with him, in the great business of his salvation. South, Serm. iii. 3.

TRANSA'CTION. n. s. [transaction, Fr. from transact.] Negotiation; dealing between man and man; management; affairs; things managed.

It is not the purpose of this discourse to set down the particular transactions of this treaty. Clarendon.

TRANSA'CTOR.* n. s. [from transact.] One who manages; one who conducts affairs.

God, who knows and governs all things, is the sovereign director and transactor in matters that so come to pass, [the fulfilling of prophecies]. Derham, Christo-Theology, p. 21.

TRANSA'LPINE.* adj. Situate beyond the Alps; barbarous. See TRAMONTANE.

Travellers, that know transalpine garbs.

Beaum. and Fl. Coxcomb.

Where then, when all the world pays its respect,
Lies our transalpine barbarous neglect?

Lovelace, Luc. Posth. p. 64.

To TRANSA'NIMATE.* v. a. [trans and anima, Lat.] To animate by the conveyance of one soul from another.

Not men; for what spark of humanity? nor dogs; — but, by the strangest metamorphoses that ever was feigned by poets, very incarnated, transanimated devils.

Dean King, Serm. 5 Nov. 1608, p. 31.

TRANSA'NIMATION.† n. s. [from transanimate.] Conveyance of the soul from one body to another.

They believe the transanimation of souls into beasts and vegetables. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 115.

If the transanimation of Pythagoras were true, that the souls of men transmigrating into species answering their former natures, some men cannot escape that very brood whose sire Satan entered. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To TRANSCEND. v. a. [transcendo, Latin.]

1. To pass; to overpass.

It is a dangerous opinion to such popes, as shall transcend their limits and become tyrannical. Bacon.

To judge herself, she must herself transcend,
As greater circles comprehend the less. Davies.

2. To surpass; to outgo; to exceed; to excel.

This glorious piece transcends what he could think;
So much his blood is nobler than his ink. Waller.

These are they Deserve their greatness and unenvied stand,

Since what they act transcends what they command. Denham.

High though her wit, yet humble was her mind,
As if she could not, or she would not find,
How much her worth transcended all her kind. Dryden.

3. To surmount; to rise above.

Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Howell.

To TRANSCEND. v. n.

1. To climb. Not in use.

To conclude, because things do not easily sink, they do not drown at all, the fallacy is a frequent addition in human expressions, which often give distinct accounts of proximity, and transcend from one unto another. Brown.

2. To surpass thought.

The consistence of grace and free will, in this sense, is no such transcending mystery, and I think there is no text in Scripture that sounds any thing towards making it so. Hammond.

TRANSCENDENCE.† n. s. [from transcend.]

TRANSCENDENCY.

1. Excellence; unusual excellence; supereminence.

In a most weak and debile minister great power, great transcendence. Shakespeare, All's Well.

Lying is the foulest of crimes, as that wherewith God himself (such is the transcendency of his truth) cannot possibly dispense. Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 207.

2. Exaggeration; elevation beyond truth.

It is true greatness to have in one the frailty of a man, and the security of a God: this would have done better in poesy, where transcendencies are more allowed. Bacon, Essays.

TRANSCENDENT. adj. [transcendens, Latin; transcendant, Fr.] Excellent; supremely excellent; passing others.

The title of queen is given by Ignatius to the Lord's day, not by way of derogation and diminution, but to signify the eminent and transcendent honour of the day. White.

Thou, whose strong hand, with so transcendent worth,
Holds high the rein of fair Parthenope. Crashaw.

There is, in a lawgiver, an habitual and ultimate intention of a more excellent and transcendent nature. Bp. Sanderson.

If thou beest he — But O! how fal'n, how chang'd
From him who in the happy realms of light,
Cloth'd with transcendent brightness, didst outshine
Myriads, though bright. Milton, P. L.

Oh charming princess! Oh transcendent maid! A. Philips.

The right our Creator has to our obedience is of so high and transcendent a nature, that it can suffer no competition; his commands must have the first and governing influence on all our actions. Rogers, Serm.

TRANSCENDENTAL.† adj. [transcendentalis, low Lat.]

1. General; pervading many particulars.

Others differ as to species, but as to genus are the same: such are man and lion. There are others again, which differ as to genus, and coincide only in those transcendental comprehensions of ens, being, existence, and the like: such are quantities and qualities, as for example an ounce, and the colour, white. Harris, Herm. B. 2. ch. 2.

2. Supereminent; passing others.

Though the Deity perceiveth not pleasure nor pain, as we do; yet he must have a perfect and transcendental perception of these, and of all other things. Grew, Cosmol.

TRANSCENDENTLY. adv. [from transcendent.] Excellently; supereminently.

The law of Christianity is eminently and transcendently called the word of truth. South, Serm.

TRANSCENDENTNESS.* n. s. [from transcendent.] Supereminence; unusual excellence.

I cannot attain the measure of your transcendentness, but confess my disability and imperfection. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 75.

To TRA'NSCOLATE. v. a. [trans and colo, Latin.] To strain through a sieve or colander; to suffer to pass, as through a strainer.

The lungs are, unless pervious like a sponge, unfit to imbibe and transcolate the air. Harvey.

To TRANSCRIBE. v. a. [transcribo, Lat. transcribere, French.] To copy; to write from an exemplar.

He was the original of all those inventions from which others did but transcribe copies. Clarendon.

The most rigid exactors of mere outward purity do but transcribe the folly of him who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

If we imitate their repentance as we transcribe their faults, we shall be received with the same mercy. Rogers.

TRANSCRIBER. n. s. [from transcribe.] A copier; one who writes from a copy.

A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers. Addison.

Writings have been corrupted by little and little, by unskilful transcribers. Waterland.

TRANSCRIPT. n. s. [transcript, Fr. transcriptum, Lat.] A copy; any thing written from an original.

The Grecian learning was but a transcript of the Chaldean and Egyptian; and the Roman of the Grecian. Glanville.

The decalogue of Moses was but a transcript, not an original. South, Sermon.

Dictate, O mighty Judge! what thou hast seen
Of cities and of courts, of books and men,
And deign to let thy servant hold the pen.
Through ages thus I may presume to live,
And from the transcript of thy prose receive
What my own short-liv'd verse can never give. Prior.

TRANSCRIPTION. n. s. [transcription, Fr. from transcriptus, Lat.] The act of copying.

The ancients were but men; the practice of transcription in our days was no monster in theirs: plagiarist had not its nativity with printing, but began in times when thefts were difficult. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The corruptions that have crept into it by many transcriptions was the cause of so great difference. Brerewood.

TRANSCRIPTIVELY. adv. [from transcript.] In manner of a copy.

Not a few transcriptively subscribing their names to other men's endeavours, transcribe all they have written. Brown.

TO TRANSCUR. v. n. [transcurro, Lat.] To run or rove to and fro.

By fixing the mind on one object, it doth not spate and transcur. Bacon.

TRANSCURSION. n. s. [from transcursus, Lat.] Ramble; passage through; passage beyond certain limits; extraordinary deviation.

In a great whale, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcursion throughout the whole. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I have briefly run over transcursions, as if my pen had been posting with them. Wolton, D. of Buckingham.

His philosophy gives them transcursions beyond the vortex we breathe in, and leads them through others which are only known in an hypothesis. Glanville, Scopsis.

I am to make often transcursions into the neighbouring forests as I pass along. Howell.

If man were out of the world, who were then left to view the face of heaven, to wonder at the transcursion of comets. More, Antid. against Atheism.

TRANSE. n. s. [transe, Fr. See TRACE.] A temporary absence of the soul; an extasy.

Abstract as in a transe, methought I saw,
Though sleeping, where I lay, and saw the shape
Still glorious before whom awake I stood. Milton, P. L. (ed. 1667.)

TRANSELEMENTATION. n. s. [trans and element.] Change of one element into another.

Rain we allow; but if they suppose any other transelementation, it neither agrees with Moses's philosophy, nor Saint Peter's. Burnet, Theory.

TRANSEPT.* n. s. [trans and septum, Lat.] A cross aisle.

The pediment of the southern transept is pinnaced, not inelegantly, with a flourished cross. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 8.

TRANSEXION. n. s. [trans and sexus, Lat.] Change from one sex to another.

It much impeacheth the iterated transexion of hares, if that be true which some physicians affirm, that transmutation of sexes was only so in opinion, and that those transfeminated persons were really men at first. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO TRANSFER. v. a. [transferer, Fr. transféro, Latin.]

1. To convey; to make over from one to another: with to, sometimes with upon.

He that transfers the laws of the Lacedemonians to the people of Athens, should find a great absurdity and inconvenience. Spenser on Ireland.

Was't not enough you took my crown away,
But cruelly you must my love betray?
I was well pleas'd to have transferr'd my right,
And better chang'd your claim of lawless might. Dryden.

The king,
Who from himself all envy would remove,
Left both to be determin'd by the laws,
And to the Grecian chiefs transferr'd the cause. Dryden.

This was one perverse effect of their sitting at ease under their vines and fig-trees, that they forget from whence that ease came, and transferred all the honour of it upon themselves. Atterbury, Sermon.

Your sacred aid religious monarchs own,
When first they merit, then ascend the throne:
But tyrants dread you, lest your just decree
Transfer the power and set the people free. Prior.

By reading we learn not only the actions and the sentiments of distant nations, but transfer to ourselves the knowledge and improvements of the most learned men. Watts.

2. To remove; to transport.

The king was much moved with this unexpected accident, because it was stirred in such a place where he could not with safety transfer his own person to suppress it. Bacon.

He thirty rowling years the crown shall wear,
Then from Lavinium shall the seat transfer. Dryden.

TRANSFER.† n. s. A change of property; a delivery of property to another.

Whether the bank of Amsterdam, where industry had been for so many years subsisted and circulated by transfers on paper, doth not clearly decide this point? Bp. Berkeley, Querist, § 250.

TRANSFERABLE.* adj. [from transfer.] That may be transferred.

TRANSFERER. n. s. One who transfers.

TRANSFIGURATION. n. s. [transfiguration, Fr.]

1. Change of form.

In kinds where the discrimination of sexes is obscure, these transformations are more common, and in some without commixture; as in caterpillars or silkworms, wherein there is a visible and triple transfiguration. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. The miraculous change of our blessed Saviour's appearance on the mount.

It cannot be expected that other authors should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some of the disciples; such as the transfiguration and the agony in the garden. Addison.

Did Raphael's pencil never chuse to fall?
Say, are his works transfigurations all? Blackmore.

TO TRANSFIGURE. v. a. [transfigurer, French; trans and figura, Lat.] To transform; to change with respect to outward appearance.

I am the more zealous to transfigure your love into devotion, because I have observed your passion to have been extremely impatient of confinement. Boyle.

The nuptial right his outrage strait attends,
The dower desir'd is his transfigur'd friends:
The incantation backward she repeats,
Inverts her rod, and what she did defeats. Garth.

TO TRANSFIX. v. a. [transfixus, Latin.] To pierce through.

Amongst these mighty men were women mix'd;
The bold Semiramis, whose sides transfix'd
With son's own blade, her foul reproaches spoke. Spenser.

With linked thunderbolts
Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milton, P. L.

T R A

Diana's dart
In an unhappy chace transfix'd her heart. Dryden.
Nor good Eurytion env'y'd him the prize,
Though he transfix'd the pigeon in the skies. Dryden.
Till fate shall with a single dart
Transfix the pair it cannot part. Fenton.

To TRANSFORM. v. a. [transformer, Fr. trans and forma, Lat.] To metamorphose; to change with regard to external form.

She demanded of him, whether the goddess of those woods had such a power to transform every-body. Sidney.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shakespeare.

As is the fable of the lady fair,
Which for her lust was turn'd into a cow;
When thirsty to a stream she did repair,
And saw herself transform'd she wist not how. Davies.

To TRANSFORM. v. n. To be metamorphosed.
His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet
In skinny films and shape his oary feet. Addison.

TRANSFORMATION. n. s. [from transform.] Change of shape; act of changing the form; state of being changed with regard to form; metamorphosis.

Something you have heard
Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it,
Since not th' exterior, nor the inward man,
Resembles that it was. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

What beast could'st thou be, that were not subject to a beast?
And what a beast art thou already, and seest not thy loss in transformation! Shakespeare, Timon.

The mensuration of all manner of curves, and their mutual transformation, are not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions. Watts.

TRANSFRETATION. n. s. [trans and fretum, Latin.] Passage over the sea.

Since the last transfretation of king Richard the second, the crown of England never sent over numbers of men sufficient to defend the small territory. Davies on Ireland.

To TRANSFUND.* v. a. [transfundo, Lat.] To transfuse. Not in use.

The best instrument of gratitude is speech, that most natural, proper, and easy mean of conversation, of signifying our conceptions, of conveying, and, as it were, transfunding our thoughts and our passions into each other. Barrow, vol. i. S. 8.

To TRANSFUSE. v. a. [transfusus, Lat.] To pour out of one into another.

Between men and beasts there is no possibility of social communion; because the well-spring of that communion is a natural delight which man hath to transfuse from himself into others, and to receive from others into himself, especially those things wherein the excellency of this kind doth most consist. Hooker.

When did his muse from Fletcher scenes purloin,
As thou whose Eth'ridge dost transfuse to thine?
But so transfus'd, as oil and waters flow,
His always floats above, thine sinks below. Dryden.

Where the juices are in a morbid state, if one could suppose all the unsound juices taken away and sound juices immediately transfused, the sound juices would grow morbid. Arbuthnot.

TRANSFUSIBLE.* adj. [from transfuse.] That may be transfused.

TRANSFUSION. n. s. [transfusion, Fr. transfusus, Lat.] The act of pouring out of one into another.

The crooked part of the pipe was placed in a box, to prevent the loss of the quicksilver that might fall aside in the transfusion from the vessel into the pipe. Boyle.

Poesy is of so subtle a spirit, that in the pouring out of one language into another it will all evaporate; and if a new spirit be not added in the transfusion, there will remain nothing but a caput mortuum. Denham.

T R A

Something must be lost in all transfusion, that is, in all translations, but the sense will remain. Dryden.

What noise have we had about transplantation of diseases and transfusion of blood. Baker on Learning.

To TRANSGRESS. v. a. [transgresser, French; transgressus, Latin.]

1. To pass over; to pass beyond.
Long stood the noble youth, oppress'd with awe,
And stupid at the wonderous things he saw,
Surpassing common faith, transgressing nature's law. Dryden.

2. To violate; to break.
Let no man doubt but that every thing is well done, because the world is ruled by so good a guide as transgresseth not his own law, than which nothing can be more absolute, perfect, and just. Hooker.

This sorrow we must repeat as often as we transgress the divine commandments. Wake, Prep. for Death.

To TRANSGRESS. v. n. To offend by violating a law.
I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all
Adam had left him before he transgressed. Shakespeare.
Achan transgressed in the thing accursed. 1 Chron. ii. 7.

TRANSGRESSION. n. s. [transgression, Fr. from trans-
gress.]

1. Violation of a law; breach of a command.
Shall I abuse this consecrated gift
Of strength, again returning with my hair
After my great transgression: so requite Favour renew'd, and add a greater sin? Milton, S. A.

All accusation still is founded upon some law; for where there is no law, there can be no transgression; and where there can be no transgression, there ought to be no accusation. South, Serm.

2. Offence; crime; fault.
What's his fault?
—The flat transgression of a school-boy, who, being overjoyed with finding a bird's nest, shews it his companion, and he steals it.
—Wilt thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer. Shakespeare, Much Ado.
Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression
Some fair excuse. Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

TRANSGRESSIVE. adj. [from transgress.] Faulty; culpable; apt to break laws.

Though permitted unto his proper principles, Adam perhaps would have sinned without the suggestion of Satan, and from the transgressive infirmities of himself might have erred alone, as well as the angels before him. Brown.

TRANSGRESSOR. n. s. [transgresseur, French; from transgress.] Lawbreaker; violator of command; offender.

He intended the discipline of the church should be applied to the greatest and most splendid transgressors, as well as to the punishment of meaner offenders. Clarendon.

I go to judge
On earth these thy transgressors; but thou know'st
Whoever judg'd, the worst on me must light
When time shall be. Milton, P. L.

Ill worthy I, such title should belong
To me transgressor! who, for thee ordain'd
A help, became thy snare. Milton, P. L.

TRANSIENT. adj. [transiens, Lat.] Soon past; soon passing; short; momentary; not lasting; not durable.

How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!
Measur'd this transient world, the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd. Milton, P. L.

He that rides post through a country, may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie. Locke.

Love hitherto a transient guest,
Ne'er held possession in his breast. Swift.

What is loose love? a transient gust,
A vapour fed from wild desire. Pope.

TRA'NSIENTLY. adv. [from transient.] In passage; with a short passage; not with continuance.

I touch here but transiently, without any strict method, on some few of those many rules of imitating nature which Aristotle drew from Homer. Dryden.

TRA'NSIENTNESS. n. s. [from transient.] Shortness of continuance; speedy passage.

It were to be wished that all words of this sort, as they resemble the wind in fury and impetuosity, so they might do also in transientness and sudden expiration.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

TRANSI'LIENCE. } n. s. [transilio, Latin.] Leap from TRANSI'LIENCY. } thing to thing.

By unadvised transiliency leaping from the effect to its remotest cause, we observe not the connection of more immediate causalities. Glanville, Scepis.

TRA'NSIT. n. s. [transitus, Lat.] In astronomy, the passing of any planet just by or under any fixed star; or of the moon covering or moving close by any other planet. Harris.

TRANSITION. n. s. [transitio, Lat.]

1. Removal; passage from one to another.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition without communication of substance, but moisture not. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
As for the mutation of sexes, and transition into one another, we cannot deny it in hares, it being observable in man.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

I have given some intimations of the changes which happen in the interior parts of the earth, I mean the transitions and removes of metals and minerals there. Woodward.

2. Change; made of change.

The spots are of the same colour throughout, there being an immediate transition from white to black, and not declining gradually, and mixing as they approach. Woodward.

You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so easy a transition, and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.

As once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould;
Thence, by a soft transition we repair,
From earthly vehicles to these of air. Pope.

3. [transition, Fr.] Passage in writing or conversation from one subject to another.

He with transition sweet new speech resumes.

Milton, P. L.

Covetousness was none of his faults, but described as a veil over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satyze his prodigality and voluptuousness, to which he makes a transition. Dryden.

TRA'NSITIVE. adj. [transitivus, Lat.]

1. Having the power of passing.

One cause of cold is the contact of cold bodies; for cold is active and transitive into bodies adjacent, as well as heat.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. [In grammar.]

A verb transitive is that which signifies an action, conceived as having an effect upon some object; as ferio terram, I strike the earth.

Clarke, Lat. Gramm.

TRA'NSITORILY. adv. [from transitory.] With speedy evanescence; with short continuance.

TRA'NSITORINESS. } n. s. [from transitory.] Speedy evanescence.

All the states and estates of the world, being founded and originally descended from man, must necessarily accompany his transitoriness. Sir W. Cornwallis, Disc. upon Sen. A. 5. b.

The worldly man is at home in respect of his affections; but he is, and shall be, a meer sojourner in respect of his transitoriness. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 202.

TRA'NSITORY. adj. [transitoire, Fr. transitorius, from transeo, Lat.] Continuing but a short time; speedily vanishing.

O Lord, comfort and succour all them who in this transitory life are in trouble. Comm. Prayer.

If we love things have sought; age is a thing
Which we are fifty years in compassing;
If transitory things, which soon decay,
Age must be loveliest at the latest day. Donne.

Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tillotson, Serm.

TRANSLA'TABLE.* adj. [from translate.] Capable of being translated.

To TRANSLA'TE.† v. a. [translator, old Fr. to remove from one place to another, as well as to interpret in another language; Cotgrave: translatus, Lat.]

As there are apoplexies from inveterate gout, the regimen must be to translate the morbidick matter upon the extremities of the body. Arbuthnot.

Perverse mankind! whose wills, created free,
Charge all their woes on absolute decree;
All to the dooming gods their guilt translate,
And follies are miscall'd the crimes of fate. Pope.

4. To change.

One do I personate of Timon's frame,
Whom fortune with her iv'ry hand wafts to her,
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
Translates his rivals. Shakespeare, Timon.

Happy is your grace,
That can translate the stubbornness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style. Shakespeare, As you like it.

5. To interpret in another language; to change into another language retaining the sense.

I can construe the action of her familiar style, and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be Englished right, is, I am Sir John Falstaff's.

—He hath studied her well, and translated her out of honesty into English. Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

Nor word for word too faithfully translate. Roscommon.
Read this ere you translate one bit
Of books of high renown. Swift.

Were it meant that in despite
Of art and nature such dull clods should write,
Bavius and Mævius had been sav'd by fate
For Settle and for Shadwell to translate. Duke.

6. To explain. A low colloquial use.

There's matter in these sighs, these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them. Shakespeare.

TRANSLATION. † n. s. [translatio, Latin; translation, French.]

Am not I old Sly's son, by birth a pedlar, by education a cardmaker, by transmutation a bear herd. Shakspeare.

The transmutation of plants one into another, is inter magnalia naturæ, for the transmutation of species is, in the vulgar philosophy, pronounced impossible; but seeing there appear some manifest instances of it, the opinion of impossibility is to be rejected, and the means thereof to be found out. Bacon.

The conversion into a body merely new, and which was not before; as silver to gold, or iron to copper, is better called, for distinction sake, transmutation. Bacon.

The obligation of the day, which was then the sabbath, died and was buried with him, but in a manner by a diurnal transmutation revived again at his resurrection.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

The changing of bodies into light, and light into bodies, is very conformable to the course of nature, which seems delighted with transmutations. Water, which is a very fluid tasteless salt, she changes by heat into vapour, which is a sort of air, and by cold into ice, which is a hard, pellucid, brittle, fusible stone; and this stone returns into water by heat, and water returns into vapour by cold. Newton.

The supposed change of worms into flies is no real transmutation; but most of those members, which at last become visible to the eye, are existent at the beginning, artificially complicated together. Bentley, Serm.

2. Successive change. Not proper.

The same land suffereth sundry transmutations of owners within one term. Bacon, Office of Alienation.

To TRANSMUTE. v. a. [transmuto, Lat. transmuere, Fr.] To change from one nature or substance to another.

Suidas thinks, that by the golden fleece was meant a golden book of parchment, which is of sheep's skin, and therefore called golden, because it was taught therein how other metals might be transmuted. Ralegh.

That metals may be transmuted one into another, I am not satisfied of the fact. Ray on the Creation.

TRANSMUTER. n. s. [from transmute.] One that transmutes.

TRANSOM. n. s. [transenna, Lat.]

1. A thwart beam or lintel over a door.

2. [Among mathematicians.] The vane of an instrument called a cross staff, being a piece of wood fixed across with a square socket upon which it slides. Bailey.

TRANSPARENCY. n. s. [transparence, Fr. from transparent.] Clearness; diaphaneity; translucence; power of transmitting light.

A poet of another nation would not have dwelt so long upon the clearness and transparency of the stream; but in Italy one seldom sees a river that is extremely bright and limpid, most of them being muddy. Addison.

Another cause is the greater transparency of the vessels occasioned by the thinness and delicacy of their coats. Arbuthnot.

TRANSPARENT. adj. [transparent, Fr. trans and appareo, Lat.] Pervious to the light; clear; pellucid; diaphanous; translucent; not opaque.

Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright,
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,

As doth thy face through tears of mine give light,
Thou shin'st in every tear that I do weep. Shakespeare.
Wait upon him with whom you speak with your eye; for there be many wise men that have secret hearts and transparent countenances. Bacon, Essays.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
As through a crystal case the figur'd hours are seen;
And heaven did this transparent veil provide,
Because she had no guilty thought to hide. Dryden.
Her bosom appeared all of chrystal, and so wonderfully transparent, that I saw every thought in her heart Addison.
Transparent forms, too fine for mortal sight,
Their fluid bodies half dissolv'd in light. Pope.

TRANSPA'RENTLY.* adv. [from transparent.] Clearly;
so clearly as to be seen through.
Bodies almost transparently fair.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 339.

TRANSPA'RENTNESS.* n. s. The state or quality of being transparent. Ash.

To TRANSPA'SS.* v. a. [trans and pass.] To pass over.

The river Hyphasis, or, as Ptolomy calleth it, Bipasis, was Alexander's non ultra; which yet he transpassed, and set up altars on the other side.

Gregory, Notes on Script. (ed. 1684,) p. 75.

To TRANSPA'SS.* v. n. To pass by; to pass away.
Not so proper as the verb active.

Which shall so soon transpass,
Though far more fair than is thy looking-glass. Daniel.

TRANSPICUOUS. adj. [trans and specio, Lat.] Transparent; pervious to the sight.

What if that light,
Sent from her through the wide transpicious air,
To the terrestrial moon, be as a star? Milton, P. L.

Now thy wine's transpicious, purg'd from all
Its earthy gross, yet let it feed awhile
On the fat refuse. Philips.

To TRANSPIERCE. v. n. [transpercer, Fr. trans and pierce.] To penetrate; to make way through; to permeate.

A mind, which through each part infus'd doth pass,
Fashions and works, and wholly doth transpierce
All this great body of the universe. Raleigh.

His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks of jointed wood:
The sides transpierce'd return a rattling sound,
And groans of Greeks inclos'd came issuing through the wound.
Dryden, Æn.

TRANSPIRABLE.* adj. [transpirable, Fr.] Capable of transpiring. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

TRANSPIRATION. n. s. [transpiration, Fr.] Emission in vapour.

That a bullet dipped in oil, by preventing the transpiration of air, will carry farther, and pierce deeper, my experience cannot discern. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The transpiration of the obstructed fluids is imagined to be one of the ways that an inflammation is removed. Sharp.

To TRANSPIRE. v. a. [transpiro, Lat. transpirer,
Fr.] To emit in vapour.

To TRANSPIRE.† v. n. [transpirer, Fr.]

1. To be emitted by insensible vapour.
The nuts fresh got are full of a soft pulpy matter, which in time transpires, and passes through the shell. Woodward.

2. To escape from secrecy to notice: a sense lately innovated from France, without necessity.

Do you know the history of his [Johnson's] aversion to the word transpire? — The truth was, lord Bolingbroke, who left the Jacobites, first used it; therefore, it was to be condemned!
He should have shewn what word would do for it, if it was unnecessary.

Ld. Marchmont, Conv. with Boswell, Bosw. Life of Johnson.
If they have raised a battery, as I suppose they have, it is a marked one, for nothing has transpired. Ld. Chesterfield.

To TRANSPLA'CE. v. a. [trans and place.] To remove; to put into a new place.

It was transplac'd from the left side of the Vatican unto a more eminent place. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

To TRANSPLANT. v. a. [trans and planto, Lat.
transplanter, Fr.]

1. To remove and plant in a new place.
The noblest fruits transplanted in our isle,
With early hope and fragrant blossoms smile. Roscommon.

Salopian acres flourish with a growth
Peculiar stil'd the Ottery; be thou first
This apple to transplant. Philips.

2. To remove and settle.
If any transplant themselves into plantations abroad, who are schismatics or outlaws, such are not fit to lay the foundation of a new colony. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

3. To remove.
Of light the greater part he took
Transplanted from her cloudy shrine, and plac'd
In the sun's orb. Milton, P. L.

He prospered at the rate of his own wishes, being transplanted out of his cold barren diocese of St. David's into a warmer climate. Clarendon.

TRANSPANTA'TION. n. s. [transplantation, Fr.]

1. The act of transplanting or removing to another soil.

It is confessed, that love changed often doth nothing; nay, it is nothing; for love, where it is kept fixed to its first object, though it burn not, yet it warms and cherishes, so as it needs no transplantation, or change of soil, to make it fruitful. Suckling.

2. Conveyance from one to another.
What noise have we had for some years about transplantation of diseases, and transfusion of blood! Baker.

3. Removal of men from one country to another.
Most of kingdoms have thoroughly felt the calamities of forcible transplantations, being either overwhelmed by new colonies that fell upon them, or driven, as one wave is driven by another, to seek new seats, having lost their own. Raleigh.
This appears a replication to what Menelaus had offered concerning the transplantation of Ulysses to Sparta. Broome.

TRANSPLAN'TER. n. s. [from transplant.] One that transplants.

TRANSPLE'NDENCY.* n. s. [from trans and splendens.] Supereminent splendour.

The supernatural and unimitable transplendency of the Divine Presence. More, Antiid. against Idolatry, ch. 2.

TRANSPLE'NDENT.* adj. Supereminently splendid.
See TRANSPLENDENTLY.

TRANSPLE'NDENTLY.* adv. With supereminent splendour.

The divinity, with all its adorable attributes, is hypostasti-cally, vitally, and transplendently residing in this humanity of Christ. More against Idol. ch. 2.

To TRANSPORT. v. a. [trans and porto, Latin;
transporter, French.]

1. To convey by carriage from place to place.
I came hither to transport the tidings. Shakespeare.

Why should she write to Edmund! might not you Transport her purposes by word? Shakespeare.

Rivers from one end of the world to the other, which, among other uses, were made to transport men. Raleigh.

A subterranean wind transports a hill
Torn from Pylorus. Milton, P. L.

Cæsar found the seas betwixt France and Britain so ill furnished with vessels, that he was fain to make ships to transport his army. Heylin.

In the disturbances of a state, the wise Pomponius transported all the remaining wisdom and virtue of his country into the sanctuary of peace and learning. Dryden.

2. To carry into banishment, as a felon.
We return after being transported, and are ten times greater rogues than before. Swift.

3. To sentence as a felon to banishment.

4. To hurry by violence of passion.

You are transported by calamity
Thither where more attends you, and you slander
The helms o' th' state. Shakspeare.

They laugh as if transported with some fit
Of passion. Milton, P. L.

I shew him once transported by the violence of a sudden passion. Dryden.

If an ally not immediately concerned contribute more than the principal party, he ought to have his share in what is conquered; or if his romantick disposition transport him so far as to expect little or nothing, they should make it up in dignity.
Swift.

5. To put into extasy; to ravish with pleasure.

Here transported I behold, transported touch. Milton.
Those on whom Christ bestowed miraculous cures were so transported with them, that their gratitude supplanted their obedience. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

TRANSPORT. n. s. [transport, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Transportation; carriage; conveyance.

The Romans neglected their maritime affairs: for they stipulated with the Carthaginians to furnish them with ships for transport and war. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. A vessel of carriage; particularly a vessel in which soldiers are conveyed.

Nor dares his transport vessel cross the waves,
With such whose bones are not compos'd in graves. Dryden.
Some spoke of the men of war only, and others added the transports. Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. Rapture; extasy.

A truly pious mind receives a temporal blessing with gratitude, a spiritual one with ecstasy and transport. South.

4. A felon sentenced to exile.

TRANSPORTANCE. n. s. [from transport.] Conveyance; carriage; removal.

O, be thou my Charon,
And give me swift transportance to those fields,
Where I may wallow in the lily beds
Propos'd for the deserfer! Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

TRANSPORTANT.* adj. [from transport.] Affording great pleasure.

So rapturous a joy, and transportant love.

More, Myst. of Godliness, (1660,) p. 227.

TRANSPORTATION. n. s. [from transport.]

1. Conveyance; carriage.

Cottington and Porter had been sent before to provide a vessel for their transportation. Wotton.

2. Transmission or conveyance.

Some were not so solicitous to provide against the plague, as to know whether we had it from the malignity of our own air, or by transportation. Dryden.

3. Banishment for felony.

4. Extatick violence of passion.

All pleasures that affect the body must needs weary, because they transport, and all transportation is a violence; and no violence can be lasting but determines upon the falling of the spirits. South.

TRANSPORTEDLY.* adv. [from transport.] In a state of rapture.

TRANSPORTEDNESS.* n. s. [from transport.] State
of rapture.

What a mean opinion doth this imply,—that we who are old men, christian philosophers, and divines, should have so little government of ourselves as to be puffed up with those poor accessions of titular respects, which those, who are really and hereditarily possessed of, can wield without any such taint or suspicion of transportedness. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 420.

TRANSPORTMENT.* n. s. [from transport.] Transportation or conveyance in ships.

You,—

Your last transportment being assail'd by a galley, Hid yourself i' the cabin. Beaum. and Fl. Q. of Corinth.

TRANSPORTER. n. s. [from transport.] One that transports.

The pilchard merchant may reap a speedy benefit by dispatching, saving, and selling to the transporters. Carew.

TRANSPÓSAL. n. s. [from transpose.] The act of putting things in each other's place. Swift.

To TRANSPÓSE.† v. a. [transposer, French; trans-positum, Latin.]

1. To put each in the place of other.

The letters of Elizabetha regina transposed thus, Anglia Hera, beasti, signify, O England's sovereign! thou hast made us happy.
Camden, Rem.

Transpose the propositions, making the medius terminus the predicate of the first and the subject of the second. Locke.

2. To put out of place; to remove.

That which you are my thoughts cannot transpose;
Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell. Shakspeare.
He, that will once transpose me from earth to heaven, hath now chosen to transpose me from one piece of earth to another.
Bp. Hall, Epist. D. 1. E. 9.

TRANSPÓITION.† n. s. [transposition, Fr. from transpose.]

1. The act of putting one thing in the place of another.

Perspicuity of style is often hindered by the ornaments of speech;—by too curious a transposition of words from their natural place; by using too many metaphors.

Instr. for Oratory, (1682,) p. 100.

2. The state of being put out of one place into another.

The common centre of gravity in the terraqueous globe is steady, and not liable to any accidental transposition, nor hath it ever shifted its station. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

TRANSPÓITIONAL.* adj. [from transposition.] Relating to transposition.

The most striking and most offensive error in pronunciation among the Londoners, I confess, lies in the transpositional use of the letters w and v, ever to be heard when there is any possibility of inverting them. Thus they always say, weal, instead of veal; vicked, for wicked.

To TRANSSHA'PE.† v. a. [trans and shape.] To transform; to bring into another shape.

I'll tell thee how Beatrice prais'd thy wit: I said thou hadst a fine wit; right, said she, a fine little one; nay, said I, he hath the tongues; that I believe, said she; for he swore a thing to me on Monday night which he forswore on Tuesday morning;
there's a double tongue: thus did she transshape thy particular virtues. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Suppose him

Trans-shap'd into an angel. Beaum. and Fl. Laus of Candy.

To TRANSUBSTANTIATE. v. a. [transubstantier, Fr.] To change to another substance.

O self-traitor, I do bring

The spider love which transubstantiates all,
And can convert manna to gall. Donne.

Nor seemingly, but with keen dispatch
Of real hunger, and concoctive heat,
To transubstantiate; what redounds, transpires
Through spirits with ease. Milton, P. L.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION. n. s. [transubstantiation, Fr.]

A miraculous operation believed in the Romish church, in which the elements of the eucharist are supposed to be changed into the real body and blood of Christ.

How is a Romanist prepared easily to swallow, not only against all probability, but even the clear evidence of his senses, the doctrine of transubstantiation? Locke.

TRANSUBSTANTIATOR.* n. s. One who maintains the Romish notion of transubstantiation.

It may serve to guard us from diverse errors,—such as that of the Roman transubstantiators, who affirm that the body of our Lord is here upon earth at once present in many places, namely, in every place where the host is kept, or the eucharist is celebrated. Barrow, vol. ii. S. 31.

There were in the primitive times some hereticks, who thought those words of Christ concerning the eating his flesh, and drinking his blood, were to be understood grossly and literally of oral eating, just as the transubstantiators at this day pretend. Dr. Potter, Christophalgia, (1680,) p. 48.

TRANSUDA'TION. n. s. [from transude.] The act of passing in sweat, or perspirable vapour, through any integument.

The drops proceeded not from the transudation of the liquors within the glass. Boyle.

To TRANSUDE. v. n. [trans and sudo, Latin.] To pass through in vapour.

Purulent fumes cannot be transmitted throughout the body before the maturation of an aposthem, nor after, unless the humour break; because they cannot transude through the bag of an aposthem. Harvey on Consumptions.

TRANSVE'RSAL. adj. [transversal, Fr. trans and ver-salis, Lat.] Running crosswise.

An ascending line, direct, as from son to father, or grandfather, is not admitted by the law of England; or in the transversal line, as to the uncle or aunt, great-uncle or great-aunt. Hale.

TRANSVE'RSALLY. adv. [from transversal.] In a cross direction.

There are divers subtle enquiries and demonstrations concerning the several proportions of swiftness and distance in an arrow shot vertically, horizontally, or transversally. Wilkins.

To TRANSVE'NSE. v. a. [transversus, Latin.] To change; to overturn.

Nothing can be believed to be religion by any people, but what they think to be divine; that is, sent immediately from God: and they can think nothing to be so, that is in the power of man to alter or transverse. Leslie.

TRANSVE'NSE. adj. [transversus, Latin.] Being in a cross direction.

His volant touch

Part in strait lines, part in transverse are found,

One forms a crooked figure, one a round;

The entrails these embrace in spiral strings,

Those clasp the arterial tubes in tender rings. Blackmore.

What natural agent could impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are a falling! Bentley, Serm.

TRANSVE'RSELY. adv. [from transverse.] In a cross direction.

At Stonehenge the stones lie transversely upon each other. Stillingfleet.

In all the fibres of an animal there is a contractile power; for if a fibre be cut transversely, both the ends shrink and make the wound gape. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To TRANSUME.* v. a. [transumo, Lat.] To take from one thing to another; to convert one thing into another.

Bread and wine

Transum'd, and taught to turn divine. Crashaw, Hymn.

TRA'NSUMPT.* n. s. [transumpt, old Fr. transumptum, Lat.] An exemplification or copy of a record.

Cotgrave.

The pretended original breve was produced, and a transumpt or copy thereof offered them. Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 225.

TRANSUMPTION.† n. s. [from transumpt.] The act of taking from one place to another.

Having by a kind of transumption and accommodation borrowed those former words of his. South, Serm. vii. 28.

TRA'NTERS.† n. s. Men who carry fish from the sea-coasts to sell in the inland countries. Bailey.

Country people, amongst whom alone this word is current, extend its meaning to all those who purchase any kind of provisions in order to sell them again. Mason.

TRAP. n. s. [trapp, tpepp, Saxon; trape, Fr. trappola, Italian.]

1. A snare set for thieves or vermin.

Die as thou shouldest, but do not die impatiently, and like a fox caught in a trap. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

The trap springs and catches the ape by the fingers. L'Estrange.

2. An ambush; a stratagem to betray or catch un-awares.

And lurking closely, in await now lay,

How he might any in his trap betray. Spenser.

God and your majesty

Protect mine innocence, or I fall into

The trap is laid for me. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

They continually laid traps to ensnare him, and made sinister interpretations of all the good he did. Calamy.

He seems a trap for charity to lay,

And cons by night his lesson for the day. Dryden.

3. A play at which a ball is driven with a stick.

Unruly boys learn to wrangle at trap, or rook at span-farthing. Locke on Education.

He that of feeble nerves and joints complains,

From nine-pins, coits, and from trap-ball abstains. King.

To TRAP. v. a. [trpeppan, Saxon.]

1. To ensnare; to catch by a snare or ambush; to take by stratagem.

My brain more busy than the lab'ring spider,

Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies. Shakspeare.

If you require my deeds, with ambush'd arms

I trapp'd the foe, or tir'd with false alarms. Dryden.

2. [See TRAPPING.] To adorn; to decorate.

The steed that bore him

Was trapp'd with polish'd steel, all shining bright,

And covered with th' achievements of the knight. Spenser.

To spoil the dead of weed is sacrilege:

But leave these reliques of his living might

To deck his hearse and trap his tomb black steed. Spenser.

Lord Lucius presented to you four milk-white horses trapt in silver. Shakspeare, Timon.

Steeds with scarlet trapp'd.

Cowley.

To TRAPA'N.* v. a. [from trap; Sax. tpeppan.]

See TRAP. Dr. Johnson notices this word as trepan;

but the more proper way of writing it seems to be trapan, as distinguishing it from the verb trepan of a very different meaning. South writes it trapan;

though Dr. Johnson has assigned to him trepan.]

To lay a trap for; to ensnare.

Telling him what pity it is, that one so accomplished should live and die ignorant of what it is to trapan, or be trapped; to sup, or rather dine, at midnight, in a tavern, with the noise of oaths, blasphemies, and fiddlers about his ears!

South, Serm. ii. 215.

Forthwith alights the innocent trapan'n'd;

One leads his horse, the other takes his hand.

Cotton, Wonders of the Peake, (1681,) p. 38.

If these swear true, he was trapan'd on shipboard

Bp. Stillingfleet, Miscell. (Speech in 1692,) p. 142.

TRAPA'N.* n. s. [from the verb.] A cheat; a stratagem; a snare.

It is indeed a real trapan upon it, feeding it with colours and appearances instead of arguments. South, Serm. ii. 377.

Nothing but gins, and snares, and traps for souls.

South, Serm. iii. 166.

TRAPA'NNER.* n. s. [from trapan.] A deceiver.

The insinuations of that old pander and trapanner of souls.

South, Serm. vi. 391.

TRAPDO'OR. n. s. [trap and door.] A door opening and shutting unexpectedly.

The arteries which carry from the heart to the several parts have valves which open outward like trapdoors, and give the blood a free passage; and the veins, which bring it back to the heart, have valves and trapdoors which open inwards, so as to give way unto the blood to run into the heart. Ray.

To TRAPE. v. a. [commonly written to traipse: probably of the same original with drab.] To run idly and sluttishly about. It is used only of women.

TRAPES. n. s. [I suppose from trape.] An idle slatternly woman.

He found the sullen trapes
Possess with th' devil, worms, and claps. Hudibras.
From door to door I'd sooner whine and beg,
Than marry such a trapes. Gay, What d'ye call it.
Since full each other station of renown,
Who would not be the greatest trapes in town? Young.

TRAPEZIUM. n. s. [τραπέζιον; trapeze, French.] A quadrilateral figure, whose four sides are not equal, and none of its sides parallel. Dict.

Two of the lateral trapezia are as broad. Woodward.

TRAPEZOID. n. s. [τραπέζιον and εἶδος; trapesoide, Fr.] An irregular figure, whose four sides are not parallel. Dict.

TRAPPINGS. n. s. [This word Minshew derives from drap, French, cloth.]

1. Ornaments appendant to the saddle.
Caparisons and steeds,
Bases and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights
At joust and tournament. Milton, P. L.
2. Ornaments; dress; embellishments; external, superficial, and trifling decoration.

These indeed seem,
But I have that within which passeth shew;
These but the trappings and the suits of woe. Shakspeare.
He has fair words, rich trappings, and large promises; but works only for his master. L' Estrange.

The points of honour poets may produce,
Trappings of life, for ornament, not use. Dryden.
Such pageantry be to the people shown;
There boast thy horse's trappings, and thy own. Dryden.

Draw him strictly so,
That all who view the piece may know
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.
In ships decay'd no mariner confides,
Lur'd by the gilded stern and painted sides;
Yet at a ball unthinking fools delight,
In the gay trappings of a birth-day night. Swift.

TRAPSTICK. n. s. [trap and stick.] A stick with which boys drive a wooden ball.

A foolish swoop between a couple of thick bandy legs and two long trapsticks that had no calfs. Spectator.

TRASH. † n. s. [tros, Icelandick; drusen, German.]

1. Any thing worthless; dross; dregs.
Lay hands upon these traitors, and their trash. Shakspeare.
Look what a wardrobe here is for thee!
— Let it alone, thou fool, it is but trash. Shakspeare.
Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his; and has been slave to thousands.
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which no enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shakspeare, Othello.
More than ten Holinsheds, or Halls, or Stows,
Of trivial household trash he knows; he knows
When the queen frown'd or smil'd. Donne.
The collectors only consider, the greater fame a writer is in possession of, the more trash he may bear to have tacked to him. Swift.
Weak foolish man! will Heaven reward us there
With the same trash mad mortals wish for here? Pope.
2. A worthless person.

I suspect this trash
To be a party in this injury. Shakspeare, Othello.

3. Matter improper for food, frequently eaten by girls in the green sickness.

O that instead of trash thou'dst taken steel. Garth.

4. Among hunters, a piece of leather, a couple, or any other weight fastened round the neck of a dog, when his speed is superior to the rest of the pack.

VOL. V.

See the third sense of To TRASH; and Notes on Shakspeare's Tempest.

5. I believe that the original signification of trash, is the loppings of trees, from the verb.

Huts of trees and trash. Carleton's Mem. p. 52.

To TRASH. † v. a.

1. To lop; to crop. Warburton.
2. To crush; to humble. Dr. Johnson. — In the north, it means to trample on in a careless manner; to beat down.
3. To clog; to encumber; to impede the progress of. See the fourth sense of the noun. It is remarkable, that under the first sense Dr. Johnson has given the passage here cited from the Tempest as the example; and under the second sense that from Hammond's Catechism. But both passages belong to the present meaning, which Dr. Johnson has wholly overpassed.

Being once perfected how to grant suits,
How to deny them; whom to advance, and whom
To trash for over-topping. Shakspeare, Tempest.
There is no means on the earth, besides the very hand of God, able to trash or overslow this furious driver. Hammond, Works, iv. 563.

Foreslowed and trashed by either outward or inward restraints. Ibid. p. 565.

Among other incumbrances and delays in our ways to heaven, there is no one that doth so clog and trash, so disadvantage and backward, us; and, in fine, so cast us behind in our race; as a contentedness in a formal worship of God, an acquiescence and resting satisfied in outward performances. Ibid. p. 663.

Not such as was fit to be imposed on hard-hearted Jews, to encumber and trash them, but such as becomes an ingenuous people. Ibid, Pract. Catechism.

To TRASH.* v. n. To follow, with bustle, as if beating down every thing in the way; to trample.

A guarded lackey to run before it, and py'd liveries to come trashing after it. The Puritan, (1607,) A. iv. S. i.

TRA'SHY. adj. [from trash.] Worthless; vile; useless.

A judicious reader will discover in his closet that trashy stuff, whose glittering deceived him in the action. Dryden.

To TRA'VAIL. † v. n. [travailler, Fr.]

1. To labour; to toil.
Obey our will, which travails in thy good. Shakspeare, All's Well.
2. To be in labour; to suffer the pains of childbirth.

I travail not, nor bring forth children. Isa. xxiii. 4.
She being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. Rev. xii. 2.
His heart is in continual labour; it travails with the obligation, and is in pangs till it be delivered. South, Serm.

To TRA'VAIL. † v. a. [travagliare, Ital.] To harass; to tire.

As if all these troubles had not been sufficient to travail the realm, a great division fell among the nobility. Hayward.

A gleam of light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps. Milton, P. L.

Recreating and composing their travail'd spirits with the solemn and divine harmonies of musick.

Milton on Education, (ed. 1673,) p. 113.

TRA'VAIL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Labour; toil; fatigue.
As every thing of price, so this doth require travail. Hooker.
Such impotent persons as are unable for strong travail, are yet able to drive cattle to and fro to their pasture. Spenser.
2. Labour in childbirth.

In the time of her travail, twins were in her. Gen. xxxviii.
To procure easy travails of women, the intention is to bring down the child, but not too fast. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

TRA'VE. † } n. s. [travail, Fr.]
TRA'VIS. † }

1. A wooden frame for shoeing unruly horses.
She sprong as a colt doth in a trave. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.
2. [trabs, Lat.] A beam; a lay of joists; a traverse.
On the right side of the choir was made a travys for her to say her prayers. A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. in 1566.
A travys erected a considerable height from the ground. Ibid.

It was only a room of about four or five yards square, walled with dirt, having nothing but the uneven ground for its pavement; and for its ceiling only some rude traves laid athwart it, and covered with bushes to keep out the weather.

Maundrell, Travels, p. 7.
The ceiling and traves are, after the Turkish manner, richly painted and gilded. Ibid. p. 125.

To TRA'VEL. v. n. [this word is generally supposed originally the same with travail, and to differ only as particular from general: in some writers the word is written alike in all its senses; but it is more convenient to write travail for labour, and travel for journey.]

1. To make journeys: It is used for sea as well as land, though sometimes we distinguish it from voyage, a word appropriated to the sea.
I've watch'd and travell'd hard;
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle. Shakspeare.
In the forest shall ye lodge, O ye travelling companies of Dedanim. Isa. xxi. 13.
Raphael deign'd to travel with Tobias. Milton, P. L.
Fain wou'd I travel to some foreign shore,
So might I to myself myself restore. Dryden.
If others believed he was an Egyptian from his knowledge of their rites, it proves at least that he travelled there. Pope.
2. To pass; to go; to move.
By th' clock 'tis day;
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp. Shakspeare.
Time travels in divers paces, with divers persons; I'll tell you who-time ambles withal, who time trots withal. Shakspeare.
Thus flying east and west, and north and south,
News travell'd with increase from mouth to mouth. Pope.

3. To make journeys of curiosity.
Nothing tends so much to enlarge the mind as travelling, that is, making a visit to other towns, cities, or countries, beside those in which we were born and educated. Watts.
4. To labour; to toil. This should be rather travail.
If we labour to maintain truth and reason, let not any think that we travel about a matter not needful. Hooker.

To TRA'VEL. v. a.

1. To pass; to journey over.
Thither to arrive — I travel this profound. Milton, P. L.
2. To force to journey.
There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be charged with garrisons, and they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchises. Spenser.

TRA'VEL. n. s. [travail, Fr. from the noun.]

1. Journey; act of passing from place to place.
Love had cut him short,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court.
Three miles he went, nor farther could retreat,
His travels ended at his country-seat. Dryden.
Mingled send into the dance
Moments fraught with all the treasures,
Which thy eastern travel views. Prior.

2. Journey of curiosity or instruction.
Let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth. Shakspeare.
Travel in the younger sort is a part of education; in the elder a part of experience. Bacon, Ess.
In my travels I had been near their setting out in Thessaly, and at the place of their landing in Carniola. Brown, Trav.
A man not enlightened by travel or reflexion, grows as fond of arbitrary power, to which he hath been used, as of barren countries, in which he has been born and bred. Addison.

3. Labour; toil. This should be travail: as in Daniel.
He wars with a retiring enemy,
With much more travail than with victory. Daniel.
What think'st thou of our empire now, though earn'd
With travel difficult? Milton, P. L.

4. Labour in childbirth. This sense belongs rather to travail.
Thy mother well deserves that short delight,
The nauseous qualms of ten long months and travel to requite. Dryden, Virg.

5. TRAVELS. Account of occurrences and observations of a journey into foreign parts.

A book of his travels hath been honoured with the translation of many languages. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Histories engage the soul by sensible occurrences; as also voyages, travels, and accounts of countries. Watts.

- TRA'VELLED.* adj. [from travel.] Having made journeys.

It began from a travelled doctor of physick, of bold spirit, and of able elocution. Wotton, D. of Buckingham.

A man well parted, a sufficient scholar, and travelled. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

TRA'VELLER. n. s. [travailleuse, Fr. from travel.]

1. One who goes a journey; a wayfarer.
The weary traveller wand'ring that way,
Therein did often quench his thirsty heat. Spenser.
At the olive roote
They drew them then in heape, most far from foote
Of any traveller. Chapman.

A little ease to these my torments give,
Before I go where all in silence mourn,
From whose dark shores no travellers return. Sandys.

This was a common opinion among the Gentiles, that the gods sometimes assumed human shape, and conversed upon earth with strangers and travellers. Bentley, Serm.

If a poor traveller tells her, that he has neither strength nor food nor money left, she never bids him go to the place from whence he came. Law.

2. One who visits foreign countries.
Farewel monsieur traveller; look you lisp and wear strange suits, and disable all the benefits of your own country. Shakspeare.

These travailleurs for cloaths, or for a meale,
At all adventures any lye will tell. Chapman.

The traveller into a foreign country knows more by the eye, than he that stayeth at home can by relation of the traveller. Bacon, New Atlantis.

They are travellers newly arrived in a strange country, we should therefore not mislead them. Locke.

- TRA'VELTAINTED. adj. [travel and tainted.] Harassed; fatigued with travel.

I have founded nine score and odd posts; and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Coleville. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

- TRA'VERS. adv. [French.] Athwart; across. Not used.

He swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite travers, athwart the heart of his lover. Shakspeare.

- TRA'VERSE. adv. [a travers, French.] Crosswise; athwart.

Bring water from some hanging grounds, in long furrows; and from those drawing it traverse to spread. Bacon.

The ridges of the fallow field lay traverse. Hayward.

- TRA'VERSE. prep. Through crosswise.

He through the armed files
Darts his experienc'd eye, and soon traverse.
The whole battalion views their order due. Milton, P. L.

- TRA'VERSE. adj. [transversus, Lat. traverse, Fr.] Lying across; lying athwart.

The paths cut with traverse trenches much encumbered the carriages until the pioneers levelled them. Hayward.

Oak being strong in all positions, may be trusted in cross and traverse work for summers. Wotton, Architect.

TRAVERSE.† n. s.

1. Any thing laid or built cross; any thing hung across.

The Tirsan cometh with all his generation; and if there be a mother from whom the whole lineage descended, there is a traverse placed in a loft where she sitteth. Bacon.

Presently the traverse wrought with pearls was opened, and the caliph himself discovered. Fuller, Holy War, p. 92.

Volpone peeps from behind a traverse. B. Jonson, Fox.
The church was parted by a traverse. Pope, Life of Ward, p. 55.

2. Something that thwarts, crosses, or obstructs; cross accident; thwarting obstacle. This is a sense rather French than English. Dr. Johnson. — It means nothing but turn; and was formerly used without any reference to cross or adverse.

After many traverses of meditation.

Bp. Hall, Epist. D. 2. E. 1.

A just and lively picture of human nature in its actions, passions, and traverses of fortune. Dryden.

He sees no defect in himself, but is satisfied that he should have carried on his designs well enough, had it not been for unlucky traverses not in his power. Locke.

3. A flexure; a turning.

We soon came to a high hill, which we mounted by a military road, cut in traverses. Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

4. Subterfuge; trick.

Many shifts and subtle traverses were overwrought by this occasion. Proceed. against Garnet, (1606.) Bbb. 4. b.

5. An indictment traversed; a legal objection. See the third sense of To TRAVERSE.

They usually give security to the Court, to appear at the next assizes or sessions, and then and there try the traverse. Blackstone.

TRAVERSABLE.* adj. [from To traverse.] Liable to legal objection.

But whether that presentment be traversable, vide Stamf.

Hale, H. P. C. ch. 26.

To TRAVERSE. v. a. [traverser, French.] It was anciently accented on the last syllable.]

1. To cross; to lay athwart.

Myself, and such

As slept within the shadow of your power,
Have wander'd with our travers'd arms, and breath'd
Our sufferance vainly. Shakspeare, Timon.

The parts should be often traversed or crossed by the flowing of the folds which loosely encompass them, without sitting too straight. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. To cross by way of opposition; to thwart with obstacles.

This treatise has, since the first conception thereof, been often traversed with other thoughts. Wotton.

John Bull thought himself now of age to look after his own affairs; Frog resolved to traverse this new project, and to make him uneasy in his own family. Arbutnot.

3. To oppose; to cross by an objection. A law term.

You save th' expence of long litigious laws,

Where suits are travers'd, and so little won,

That he who conquers is but last undone. Dryden.

Without a good skill in history, and a new geography to understand him aright, one may lose himself in traversing the decree. Baker, Refl. on Learning.

4. To wander over; to cross.

He many a walk travers'd

Of stateliest covert, cedar, pine, or palm. Milton, P. L.

He that shall traverse over all this habitable earth, with all those remote corners of it, reserved for the discovery of these later ages, may find some nations without cities, schools, houses, garments, coin; but not without their God. Wilkins.

The lion smarting with the hunter's spear,
Though deeply wounded, no way yet dismay'd;
In sullen fury traverses the plain,
To find the venturous foe. Prior.

Believe me, prince, there's not an African
That traverses our vast Numidian deserts

In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow,

But better practises these boasted virtues. Addison, Cato.

What seas you travers'd and what fields you fought! Pope.

5. To survey; to examine thoroughly.

My purpose is to traverse the nature, principles, and properties of this detestable vice, ingratitude. South.

To TRAVERSE. v. n. To use a posture of opposition in fencing.

To see thee fight, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

TRA'VESTED.* adj. [travesti, Fr. travestito, Ital.]

Dressed in the clothes of another; disguised. This old meaning is in Coles, Dict. 1685. Buck writes it travestite (I suppose for travestite) in his Hist. of Rich. III. 1646, p. 98. "He fled, travestite or disguised." Hence the application to writings or authors turned into burlesque.

I see poor Lucan travested, not apparelled in his Roman toga, but under the cruel sheers of an English tailor. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 54.

Returning him to the people, travested to the mortal size of local godship. Warburton, Sermon 2.

TRA'VESTY. adj. [travesti, Fr.] Dressed so as to be made ridiculous; burlesqued.

TRA'VESTY.* n. s. A burlesque performance; a work travestied.

These images, one would have thought, were peculiarly calculated to have struck the fancy of our young imitator with so much admiration, as not to have suffered him to make a kind of travesty of them. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

A work grave, serious, and even respectable for its poetry, in the reign of Edward the sixth, at length in a cultivated age has contracted the air of an absolute travestie. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 177.

To TRA'VESTY.* v. a. To turn into burlesque and ridicule.

One would imagine, that John Dennis, or some hero of the Dunciad, had been here attempting to travesty this description of the restoration of Eurydice to life. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

TRA'ULISM.* n. s. [traulizo, Lat. from the Gr. to stutter.] A stammering repetition of syllables.

As for α α α, &c. I know not what other censure to pass on them, but that they are childish and ridiculous traulisms. Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tut. (1680.) p. 132.

TRAUMA'TICK. adj. [τραυματικός.] Vulnerary; useful to wounds.

I deterged and disposed the ulcer to incarn, and to do so I put the patient into a traumatick decoction. Wiseman, Surgery.

TRAUMA'TICKS.* n. s. Vulneraries; medicines good to heal wounds. Chambers.

TRAY.† n. s. [traeg, Su. Goth. trua, Lat. Serenius.]

TREACHEROUS. adj. [from treachery.] Faithless; perfidious; guilty of deserting or betraying.

He bad the lion to be remitted
Unto his seat, and those same treacherous vile
Be punished for their presumptuous guile. Spenser.
Desire in rapture gaz'd awhile,
And saw the treacherous goddess smile. Swift.

TREACHEROUSLY. adv. [from treacherous.] Faithlessly; perfidiously; by treason; by dishonest stratagem.

Then gan Carausius tyrannize anew,
And him Alectus treacherously slew,
And took on him the robe of emperor. Spenser.
Thou hast slain

The flower of Europe for his chivalry,
And treacherously hast thou vanquish'd him. Shakspeare.
Let others freeze with angling reeds,
Or treacherously poor fish beset,

With strangling snare, or winding net. Donne.
I treated, trusted you, and thought you mine;
When, in requital of my best endeavours,
You treacherously practis'd to undo me,
Seduc'd my only child, and stole her. Olway.

They bid him strike, to appease the ghost
Of his poor father treacherously lost. Dryden, Juv.

TREACHEROUSNESS. n. s. [from treacherous.] The quality of being treacherous; perfidiousness.

TREACHERY. † n. s. [tricherie, French; from triegen, Germ. to deceive, to betray. See TRICK.] Perfidy; breach of faith.

And Joram said to Ahaziah, there is treachery, O Ahaziah. 2 Kings, ix. 23.

I am justly kill'd with mine own treachery. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

TREACLE. † n. s. [triacle, Fr. triackle, Dutch; theriaca, Latin; triacle, old Engl.]

1. A medicine made up of many ingredients.

The physician that has observed the medicinal virtues of treacle, without knowing the nature of each of the sixty odd ingredients, may cure many patients with it. Boyle.
Treacle water has much of an acid in it. Floyer.

2. Melasses; the spume of sugar.

Any sovereign remedy was at this time [in the 13th century] called treacle. Venice treacle is still in some repute. The sirop of the sugar-bakers, now called treacle, cannot have been known so early. Ellis, Spec. of Eng. Poetry, i. 89.

TO TREAD. † v. n. pret. trod, trode; part. pass. trodden. [trudan, Gothick; træban, Saxon; treden, Dutch; from troed, Armor. and Welsh, the foot, according to Serenius.]

1. To set the foot.

He ne'er drinks,
But Timon's silver treads upon his lip. Shakspeare.

Those which perfume the air most, being trodden upon and crushed, are burnet, wild thyme, and water mint; therefore set whole alleys of them, to have the pleasure when you walk or tread. Bacon, Essays.

They knew not his statutes, nor walked in his ways, nor trode in the paths of discipline. Baruch, iv. 13.

Those dropping gums
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease. Milton, P. L.

Where'er you tread the blushing flow'rs shall rise. Pope.

2. To trample; to set the feet in scorn or malice.

Thou
Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles along our street, or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And bear the palm. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Thou shalt tread upon their high places. Deut. xxxiii. 29.

3. To walk with form or state.

When he walks, he moves like an engine,
And the ground shrinks before his treading. Shakspeare.
Ye that stately tread or lowly creep. Milton, P. L.

4. To copulate as birds.

T R E

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws;
When turtles tread. Shakspeare.
What distance between the treading or coupling, and the laying of the egg? Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They bill, they tread, Alcyone compress'd,
Seven days sits brooding on her floating nest. Dryden.

TO TREAD. v. a.

1. To walk on; to feel under the foot.
Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it! Shakspeare.
He dy'd obedient to severest law;

Forbid to tread the promis'd land he saw. Prior.

2. To press under the foot.

Tread the snuff out on the floor to prevent stinking. Swift.

3. To beat; to track.

Full of briars is this working world.
— They are but burs: if we walk not in the trodden paths, our very petticoats will catch them. Shakspeare, As you like it.

4. To walk on in a formal or stately manner.

Methought she trod the ground with greater grace. Dryden.

5. To crush under foot; to trample in contempt or hatred.

The treaders shall tread out no wine in their presses. Isa. xvi. 10.

TREADLE. n. s. [from tread.]

1. A part of an engine on which the feet act to put it in motion.

The farther the fore-end of the treadle reaches out beyond the fore-side of the lathe, the greater will the sweep of the fore-end of the treadle be, and consequently the more revolutions is made at one tread. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

2. The sperm of the cock.

Whether it is not made out of the garm, or treadle of the egg, seemeth of lesser doubt. Brown, Vulg. Err.

At each end of the egg is a treadle, formerly thought to be the cock's sperm. Derham.

TREAGUE. \ n. s.* [trcuga, Germ. triggwo, Goth.] A truce. Obsolete.

Which to confirme, and fast to bind their league,
After their weary sweat and bloody toile,
She them besought, during their quiet treague

Into her lodging to repaire a while,
To rest themselves, and grace to reconcile. Spenser, F. Q.

TREASON. n. s. [trahison, French.] An offence committed against the dignity and majesty of the commonwealth: it is divided into high treason and petit treason. High treason is an offence against the security of the commonwealth, or of the king's majesty, whether by imagination, word, or deed; as to compass or imagine treason, or the death of the prince, or the queen consort, or his son and heir-apparent; or to deflower the king's wife, or his eldest daughter unmarried, or his eldest son's wife; or levy war against the king in his realm, or to adhere to his enemies by aiding them; or to counterfeit the king's great seal, privy seal, or money; or knowingly to bring false money into this realm counterfeited like the money of England, and to utter the same; or to kill the king's chancellor, treasurer, justice of the one bench, or of the other; justices in eyre, justices of assize, justices of oyer and terminer, when in their place and doing their duty; or forging the king's seal manual, or privy signet; or diminishing or impairing the current money: and, in such treason, a man forfeits his lands and goods to the king: and it is called treason paramount. Petit treason is when a servant kills his master, a wife her husband, a secular or religious man his prelate: this treason gives forfeiture to every lord within his own fee: both treasons are capital. Cowel.

He made the overture of thy treasons to us. Shakspeare.

Man disobeying,
Disloyal breaks his fealty, and sins
Against the high supremacy of heaven:
To expiate his treason hath nought left.

Milton, P. L.

This being a treason against God, by a commerce with his enemy.

Holyday.

Athaliah cried, Treason, treason.

2 Kings, xi. 14.

TREASONABLE. } adj. [from treason.] Having the
TREASONOUS. } nature or guilt of treason. Treasonous is out of use.

To wish myself much better; yet for you,
I would be trebled twenty times myself,
A thousand times more fair. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Aquarius shines with feeble rays,
Four years he trebles, and doubles six score days. Creech.

To TRE'BLE.† v. n. To become threefold.

Whoever annually runs out, as the debt doubles and trebles upon him, so doth his inability to pay it. Swift.

Now I see your father's honours
Trebling upon you. Beaumont and Fl. Nob. Gentleman.

TRE'BLE.† n. s. [the chorister or boy who usually carried the thurible or incense-pot, in the devotions of the church of Rome, was called puer thuribularis; and I have heard it a happy conjecture of a most ingenious friend, that a treble voice in musick was owing to the small and shrill tone of the thuribular or incense-boy: as the said boy, carrying a little tinkling bell in one hand, might possibly give the name of treble, to the least bell. Cowel, in V. TURRIBULUM.] The highest or acutest part in musick; the smallest of a ring of bells; a sharp sound.

The treble cutteth the air so sharp, as it returneth too swift to make the sound equal; and therefore a mean or tenor is the sweetest. Bacon.

T R E

The lute still trembles underneath thy nail :
At thy well-sharpen'd thumb from shore to shore,
The trebles squeak for fear, the basses roar. Dryden.
TRE'BLENESS. n. s. [from treble.] The state of being treble.

The just proportion of the air percussed towards the baseness or trebleness of tones, is a great secret in sounds. Bacon.
TRE'BLY. adv. [from treble.] Thrice told; in three-fold number or quantity.

His javelin sent,
The shield gave way; through treble plates it went

Miller.

Sometime we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory
With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
Who can bid the tree unfix his earth-bound root.

Shakspeare.

It is pleasant to look upon a tree in summer covered with green leaves, decked with blossoms, or laden with fruit, and casting a pleasant shade: but to consider how this tree sprang from a little seed, how nature shaped and fed it till it came to this greatness, is a more rational pleasure. Burnet.

Trees shoot up in one great stem, and at a good distance from the earth, spread into branches: thus gooseberries are shrubs, and oaks are trees. Locke.

2. Wood, simply. See TREEN.

Discourse, that does not trench

On compliment.

Beaum. and Fl. Coronation.

A contrary opinion trenches upon the honour and justice of our merciful God. Walton, Life of Hooker.

The chancellor replied, that his resolution became him, and was worthy of his wisdom and honesty; and that if he found him inclined to do any thing that would trench upon either, he was so much his friend, that he would put him in mind of his obligations to both. Ld. Clarendon, Life, &c. i. 251.

TRENCH. n. s. [tranche, Fr.]

1. A pit or ditch.

On that coast build,

And with a trench enclose the fruitful field. Dryden, Æn.

When you have got your water up to the highest part of the land, make a small trench to carry some of the water in, keeping it always upon a level. Mortimer, Husb.

2. Earth thrown up to defend soldiers in their approach to a town, or to guard a camp.

The citizens of Corioli have issued forth
And given to Lartius and to Marcus battle:

I saw our party to the trenches driven,
And then I came away. Shakspeare, Coriol.

William carries on the trench,
Till both the town and castle yield. Prior.

TRENCHAND.† } adj. [trenchant, French.] Cutting;

TRENCHANT. } sharp.

He fiercely took his trenchand blade in hand,
With which he struck so furious and so fell,

That nothing seem'd the puissance could withstand. Spenser.

Against a vanquish'd foe, their swords

Were sharp and trenchant, not their words. Hudibras.

TRENCHER. n. s. [from trench; trenchoir, Fr.]

1. A piece of wood on which meat is cut at table.

No more

I'll scrape trencher, nor wash dish. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Than one which holds a trencher. Shakspeare, Timon.

When we find our dogs, we set the dish or trencher on the ground. More, Antid. against Atheism.

Their homely fare dispatch'd; the hungry band

Inva'de their trenchers next, and soon devour. Dryden.

Many a child may have the idea of a square trencher, or round plate, before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.

2. The table.

How often hast thou,

Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,

When I have feasted? Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. Food; pleasures of the table.

It could be no ordinary declension of nature that could bring some men, after an ingenuous education, to place their summum bonum upon their trenchers, and their utmost felicity in wine. South.

TRENCHERFLY. n. s. [trencher and fly.] One that haunts tables; a parasite.

He found all people came to him promiscuously, and he tried which of them were friends, and which only trencherflies and spungers. L'Estrange.

TRENCHERFRIEND.* n. s. [trencher and friend.] A parasite; a trenchermate.

You fools of fortune, trencherfriends, time's flies.

Shakspeare, Timon.

TRENCHERMAN. n. s. [trencher and man.]

1. A cook. Obsolete.

Palladius assured him, that he had already been more fed to his liking than he could be by the skilfullest trenchermen of Media. Sidney.

2. A feeder; an eater.

You had musty victuals and he hath help to eat it: he's a very valiant trencherman; he hath an excellent stomach. Shakspeare.

TRE'NCHERMATE. n. s. [trencher and mate.] A table companion; a parasite.

Because that judicious learning of the ancient sages doth not in this case serve the turn, these trenchermates frame to themselves a way more pleasant; a new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery, an art of contradiction by way of scorn. Hooker.

To TREND. † v. n. To tend; to lie in any particular direction. It seems a corruption of tend. Dr. Johnson. — The word, Mr. Mason says, is merely nautical: but this may be doubted, notwithstanding his citation from Hawkesworth's Nautical Terms: "To trend, to run off in a certain direction."

We now found the coast to trend very much to the west.

Cook and King's Voyage.

On one side, the vast range of the Pyrenees trend away till lost in remoteness. Young, Trav. (1792,) p. 34.

TRE'NDING.* n. s. A particular direction.

The scouts to several parts divide their way,
To learn the natives' names, their towns explore,
The coasts and trendings of the crooked shore. Dryden.

TRE'NDLE. n. s. [tr̥enbel, Sax.] Any thing turned round. Now improperly written trundle.

TRE'NTALS.† n. s. [trente, Fr.]

Ayliffe, Parergon.

Their diriges, their trentals, and their shrifts.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

TREPA'N.† n. s. [trepan, Fr. from τρῑκᾶω, Gr. to pierce.]

1. An instrument by which chirurgeons cut out round pieces of the skull.
2. A snare; a stratagem by which any one is ensnared. [Of this signification Skinner assigns for the reason, that some English ships in queen Elizabeth's reign being invited, with great shew of friendship, into Trapani, a part of Sicily, were there detained. Dr. Johnson. — I trust, I have shewn under To TRAPAN the true etymology of this word.]

But what a thoughtless animal is man,

How very active in his own trepan?

Roscommon.

Can there be any thing of friendship in snares, hooks, and *trepan*s?

South.

During the commotion of the blood and spirits, in which passion consists, whatsoever is offered to the imagination in favour of it, tends only to deceive the reason: it is indeed a real trepan upon it, feeding it with colours and appearances instead of arguments. South.

To TREPA'N. v. a. [from the noun; trepaner, Fr.]

1. To perforate with the trepan.

A putrid matter flowed forth her nostrils, of the same smell with that in trepanning the bone. Wiseman, Surgery.

Few recovered of those that were trepanned. Arbuthnot.

2. To catch; to ensnare.

They trepan'd the state, and fac'd it down

With plots and projects of our own.

Hudibras.

TREPHI'NE. n. s. A small trepan; a smaller instrument of perforation managed by one hand.

I shewed a trepan and trephine, and gave them liberty to try both upon a skull. Wiseman, Surgery.

TREPIDATION. n. s. [trepidatio, Lat.]

1. The state of trembling, or quivering.

The bow tortureth the string continually, and holdeth it in a continual trepidation. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

All objects of the senses which are very offensive, cause the spirits to retire; upon which the parts, in some degree, are destitute; and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

VOL. V.

Moving o' the earth brings harms and fears,
Men reckon what it did and meant;

But trepidation of the spheres,
Though greater far, is innocent.

Donne.

They pass the planets seven, and pass the fix'd,
And that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs
The trepidation talk'd, and that first mov'd. Milton, P. L.

2. State of terroure.

Because the whole kingdom stood in a zealous trepidation of the absence of such a prince, I have been the more desirous to research the several passages of the journey. Wotton.

His first action of note was in the battle of Lepanto; where the success of that great day, in such trepidation of the state, made every man meritorious. Wotton.

To TRE'SPASS. v. n. [trespasser, Fr.]

1. To transgress; to offend.

If they shall confess their trespass which they trespassed against me, I will remember my covenant. Lev. xxvi. 43.

They not only contradict the general design and particular expresses of the gospel, but trespass against all logick. Norris.

2. To enter unlawfully on another's ground.

Their morals and æconomy,
Most perfectly they made agree:
Each virtue kept its proper bound,
Nor trespass'd on the other's ground.

Prior.

TRE'SPASS. n. s. [trespas, Fr.]

1. Transgression; offence.

Your purpos'd low correction
Is such, as basest, and the meanest wretches,
For pilferings, and most common trespass,
Are punish'd with.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Will God incense his ire

For such a petty trespass?

Milton.

2. Unlawful entrance on another's ground.

TRE'SPASSER.† n. s. [from trespass.]

1. An offender; a transgressor.

Forgive my trespasses, O God, as I forgive my trespassers.

Quarles, Judg. and Mer. Revengeful Man.

The court had power to correct the trespasser with stripes.

L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 203.

2. One who enters unlawfully on another's ground.

If I come upon another's ground without his licence, or the licence of the law, I am a trespasser, for which the owner may have an action of trespass against me. Walton.

TRESS.† n. s. [tresse, Fr. a twist; treccia, Ital.]

A lock; a curl of hair; a gathering of hair. Dr. Johnson gives trusses only, observing that it is without a singular; but it is not so.

Her yelowe hair was broided in a tresse. Chaucer, K. Tale.

Hung be the heavens with black, yield day to night!

Comets, importing change of times and states

Brandish your crystal trusses in the sky.

Shakspeare.

Her swelling brent

Naked met his, under the flowing gold

Of her loose trusses hid.

Milton.

Adam had wove

Of choicest flow'rs a garland to adorn

Her trusses, and her rural labours crown.

Milton.

Fair trusses man's imperial race ensnare,

And beauty draws us with a single hair.

Pope.

Then cease, bright nymph! to mourn the ravish'd hair,

Which adds new glory to the shining sphere!

Not all the trusses that fair hair can boast

Shall draw such envy as the lock you lost.

Pope.

TRE'SSED.† adj. [from tresse.] Knotted; curled; having the hair in a tress; having trusses.

He, plung'd in pain, his tressed locks doth tear.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Golden tressed, like Apollo. Fletcher, Faithf. Shepherdess.

TRE'SSEL.* See TRESTLE.

TRE'SSURE.* n. s. In heraldry, a kind of border.

The arms are a lion with a border, or tressere, adorned with flower-de-luces. Warton, H. E. P. ii. 262.

TRE'STLE.† n. s. [tresteau, Fr. In some parts of the north called trest; in other parts of England, tressel.] The frame of a table; a movable form by which any thing is supported; a three-legged stool.

Citron tables stand

On ivory tressels.

This is not for an unbuttoned fellow to discuss in the garret at his trestle.

May, Lucan, B. 10.

Milton, Colasterion.

TRET. n. s. [Probably from tritus, Lat.] An allowance made by merchants to retailers, which is four pounds in every hundred weight, and four pounds for waste or refuse of a commodity. Bailey.

TRE'THINGS. n. s. [trethingi, low Latin, from trethu, Welsh, to tax.] Taxes; imposts.

TRE'VET. n. s. [triefet, Saxon; trepied, Fr.] Any thing that stands on three legs: as, a stool.

TREY. n. s. [tres, Lat. trois, Fr.] A three at cards.

White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.

— Honey, milk, and sugar; there is three.

— Nay then, two treys; metheglin, wort, and malmsey.

Shakespeare, Love's Labour Lost.

TRI'ABLE. adj. [from try.]

1. Possible to be experimented; capable of trial.

For the more easy understanding of the experiments triable by our engine, I insinuated that notion, by which all of them will prove explicable. Boyle.

2. Such as may be judicially examined.

No one should be admitted to a bishop's chancellorship without good knowledge in the civil and canon laws, since divers causes triable in the spiritual court are of weight. Ayliffe.

TRI'AD.† n. s. [trias, Lat. triade, Fr.] Three united. This is the famous Platonical triad.

More, Song of the Soul, (1647), Pref.

Ahad, Æon, Psyche, the Platonical triad.

More, Song &c. p. 350.

TRI'AL.† n. s. [from try; trial, old French; "preuve par temoins ou autrement; jugement rendu sur enquête et preuves. Les Anglois se servent encore de ce mot, qui leur a été transmis par Guillaume le Batârd." Lacombe.]

1. Test; examination.

With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chaste the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Shakespeare.

2. Experiment; act of examining by experience.

I leave him to your gracious acceptance,
Whose trial shall better publish his commendation.

Shakespeare.

Skilful gardeners make trial of the seeds by putting them into water gently boiled; and if good, they will sprout within half an hour. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

There is a mixed kind of evidence relating both to the senses and understanding, depending upon our own observation and repeated trials of the issues and events of actions or things, called experience. Wilkins.

3. Experience; experimental knowledge.

Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings. Heb. xi. 36.

4. Judicial examination.

Trial is used in law for the examination of all causes, civil or criminal, according to the laws of our realm: the trial is the issue, which is tried upon the inditement, not the inditement itself. Cowel.

He hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of publick power.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

A canon of the Jews required, in all suits and judicial trials betwixt rich and poor, that either each should stand, or both should sit. Kettlewell.

They shall come upon their trial, have all their actions strictly examined. Nelson.

5. Temptation; test of virtue.

Least our trial, when least sought,
May find us both perhaps far less prepar'd,
The willing I go.

Milton, P. L.

No such company as then thou saw'st
Intended thee; for trial only brought,
To see how thou could'st judge of fit and meet.

Milton.

Every station is exposed to some trials, either temptations that provoke our appetites, or disquiet our fears.

Rogers.

6. State of being tried.

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.

— It is to be all made of sighs and tears;

It is to be made all of faith and service,

All humbleness, all patience and impatience;

All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakespeare, As you like it.

TRI'ALITY.* n. s. Three united; state of being three.

Of pluralities,

Of trialities.

Skelton, Poems, p. 195.

There may be found very many dispensations of triality of benefices. Wharton on Burnet's Hist. of the Ref. p. 66.

TRI'ANGLE. n. s. [triangle, Fr. triangulum, Lat.] A figure of three angles.

The three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones.

Locke.

TRI'ANGLED.* adj. [from the noun.] Having three angles. Bullockar, and Cockeram.

TRI'ANGULAR. adj. [triangularis, Lat.] Having three angles.

The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,
And part triangular; O work divine!

These two the first and last proportions are.

Spenser.

Though a round figure be most capacious for the honey, and convenient for the bee; yet did she not chuse that, because there must have been triangular spaces left void. Ray.

TRI'ANGULARLY.* adv. [from triangular.] After the form of a triangle.

A portico formed circularly, a plain cut triangularly.

Harris, Herm. B. i. ch. 11.

TRI'ARIAN.* adj. [triarii, Lat. old soldiers, placed as a reserve.] Occupying the third post or place. Not in use.

Let our week days lead up the van,
Let the brave second and triarian band

Firm against all impression stand:

The first we may defeated see;

The virtue and the force of these are sure of victory.

Cowley, Ode on the Rest. of K. Ch. II.

TRIBE.† n. s. [tribus, Lat. from trev, British; b and v being labials of promiscuous use in the ancient British words; trev from tir ef, his lands, is supposed by Mr. Rowland to be Celtick, and used before the Romans had any thing to do with the British government. This notion will not be much recommended, when it is told, that he derives centuria from trev, supposing it to be the same with our centrev, importing a hundred treus or tribes. Dr. Johnson. — The word is from the Gr. τρίβος, or τρίβος, a third part, by changing the t into b; whence the Lat. tribus, which originally meant a third part of the people. Thes. Gr. and Morin.]

1. A distinct body of the people as divided by family or fortune, or any other characteristic.

I ha' been writing all this night unto all the tribes
And centuries for their voices, to help Catiline

In his election.

B. Jonson.

If the heads of the tribes can be taken off, and the misled multitude will see their error, such extent of mercy is honourable.

Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank
Your tribes, and water from th' ambrosial fount.

Milton.

Teach straggling mountaineers, for publick good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood,
Houses to build.

Tate.

I congratulate my country upon the increase of this happy tribe of men, since, by the present parliament, the race of freeholders is spreading into the remotest corners.

Addison.

2. It is often used in contempt.

Folly and vice are easy to describe,

The common subjects of our scribbling tribe.

Roscommon.

To TRIBE. * v. a. [from the noun.] To divide into tribes or classes.

Our fowl, fish, and quadrupeds, are well tribed by Mr. Willughby and Mr. Ray. Bp. Nicolson, Engl. Hist. Lib. (ed. 1696), p. 19.

TRIBLET or TRIBOULET. n. s. A goldsmith's tool for making rings.

Ainsworth.

TRIBULATION. n. s. [tribulation, Fr.] Persecution; distress; vexation; disturbance of life.

Tribulation being present causeth sorrow, and being imminent breedeth fear.

Hooker.

The just shall dwell,
And after all their tribulations long,
See golden days, fruitful of golden deeds.

Milton.

Death becomes

His final remedy; and after life
Try'd in sharp tribulation, and refin'd
By faith and faithful works.

Milton, P. L.

Our church taught us to pray, that God would, not only in all time of our tribulation, but in all time of our wealth, deliver us.

Atterbury.

TRIBUNAL. n. s. [tribunal, Latin and French.]

1. The seat of a judge.

I' th' market place, on a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publickly eathron'd.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

He sees the room

Where the whole nation does for justice come,
Under whose large roof flourishes the gown,
And judges grave on high tribunals frown.

Waller.

There is a necessity of standing at his tribunal, who is infinitely wise and just.

Grew, Cosmol.

He, who for our sakes stood before an earthly tribunal, might therefore be constituted judge of the whole world.

Nelson.

2. A court of justice.

Summoning arch-angels to proclaim
Thy dread tribunal.

Milton, P. L.

TRIBUNE. n. s. [tribun, tribunus, Lat.]

1. An officer of Rome chosen by the people.

These are the tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' the common mouth: I do despise them.

Shakspeare.

2. The commander of a Roman legion.

TRIBUNESHIP. * n. s. The office of a tribune.

What am I the wiser for knowing that Trajan was in the fifth year of his tribuneship, when he entertained the people with such a horse-race or bull-baiting?

Addison on Medals.

TRIBUNITIAL. } adj. [tribunitius, Lat.] Suited a
TRIBUNITIOUS. } tribune; relating to a tribune.

Let them not come in multitudes, or in a tribunitious manner;
for that is to clamour counsels, not to inform.

Bacon.

Oh happy ages of our ancestors,
Beneath the kings and tribunitial powers
One jail did all their criminals restrain.

Dryden, Juv.

TRIBUTARY. adj. [tributaire, Fr. tributarius, Lat.]

1. Paying tribute as an acknowledgement of submission to a master.

Thenceforth this land was tributary made
T' ambitious Rome, and did their rule obey,
Till Arthur all that reckoning did defray:
Yet oft the Briton kings against them strongly sway'd.

Spenser.

Whilst Malvern, king of hills, fair Severn overlooks,
Attended on in state with tributary brooks.

Dryden.

The two great empires of the world I know;
And since the earth none larger does afford,
This Charles is some poor tributary lord.

Dryden.

Around his throne the sea-born brothers stood,
That swell with tributary urns his flood.

Pope.

2. Subject; subordinate.

These he, to grace his tributary gods,
By course commits to several government,
And gives them leave to wear their saphire crowns,
And wield their little tridents.

Milton, Comus.

O'er Judah's king ten thousand tyrants reign,
Legions of lust, and various powers of ill
Insult the master's tributary will.

Prior.

3. Paid in tribute.

Nor flattery tunes these tributary lays.

Concannon.

TRIBUTARY. n. s. [from tribute.] One who pays a stated sum in acknowledgement of subjection.

All the people therein shall be tributaries unto thee, and serve thee.

Deut. xx. 11.

The Irish lords did only promise to become tributaries to king Henry the second: and such as only pay tribute are not properly subjects, but sovereigns.

Davies.

TRIBUTE. n. s. [tribut, Fr. tributum, Lat.] Payment made in acknowledgement; subjection.

They that received tribute money said, Doth not your master pay tribute?

St. Matt. xvii. 2.

She receives

As tribute warmth and light.

Milton, P. L.

To acknowledge this was all he did exact;

Small tribute, where the will to pay was act.

Dryden.

To TRIBUTE. * v. a. [from the noun.] To pay as tribute.

An amorous trifter, that spendeth his forenoons on his glass and barber, his afternoons with paint or lust, tributing most precious moments to the scepter of a fan!

Whillock, Mann. of the Engl. (1654), p. 302.

TRICE. † n. s. [I believe this word comes from trait,
Fr. corrupted by pronunciation. Dr. Johnson. —
I should rather suppose from thrice, that is, while one can count three: "All sodenly, as who saith treis." Gower, Conf. Am. B. i.] A short time; an instant; a stroke.

If they get never so great spoil at any time, the same they waste in a trice, as naturally delighting in spoil, though it do themselves no good.

Spenser.

Just in the nick the cook knock'd trice,
And all the waiters in a trice

His summons did obey:

Each serving man with dish in hand,
March'd boldly up like our train'd band,
Presented, and away.

Suckling.

He could raise scruples dark and nice,
And after solve them in a trice.

Hudibras.

So when the war had rais'd a storm,
I've seen a snake in human form,
All stain'd with infamy and vice,
Leap from the dunghill in a trice.

Swift.

It seems incredible at first, that all the blood in our bodies should circulate in a trice, in a very few minutes; but it would be more surprising if we knew the short periods of the great circulation of water.

Bentley, Serm.

A man shall make his fortune in a trice,
If bless'd with pliant, though but slender sense,
Feign'd modesty, and real impudence.

Young.

TRICHO'TOMY. † n. s. [τριχοτομία, Gr.] Division into three parts.

The chiefest divisions of things are made by a trichotomie.

Hartlib, Tr. of Comenius, (1642), p. 51.

Some disturb the order of nature by dichotomies, trichotomies, sevens, twelves: let the subject with the design you have in view determine the number of parts into which you divide it.

Watts.

TRICK. † n. s. [triche, old Fr. treck, Dutch; from triegen, Germ. to deceive. Wachter, and Serenius.]

1. A sly fraud.

Sir Thomas Moor said, that a trick of law had no less power than the wheel of fortune, to lift men up, or cast them down.

Raleigh.

A bantering droll took a journey to Delphos, to try if he could put a trick upon Apollo.

L'Estrange.

Such a one thinks to find some shelter in my friendship, and I betray him: he comes to me for counsel, and I shew him a trick.

South.

He swore by Styx,

Whate'er she would desire to grant;

But wise Ardelia knew his tricks.

Swift.

2. A dexterous artifice.

Gather the lowest and leaving the top,
Shall teach thee a trick for to double thy crop.

Tusser.

And now, as oft in some distemper'd state,
On one nice trick depends the general fate.

Pope.

3. A vicious practice.

Suspicion shall be stuck full of eyes:

For treason is but trusted like a fox,

Who ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up,

Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.

Shakespeare.

I entertain you with somewhat more worthy than the stale exploded trick of fulsome panegyrics.

Dryden.

Some friends to vice pretend,

That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame.

Dryden.

4. A juggle; an antick; any thing done to cheat jocosely, or to divert.

A reverend prelate stopp'd his coach and six,
To laugh a little at our Andrew's tricks.

Prior.

5. An unexpected effect.

So fellst foes who broke their sleep,

To take the one the other, by some chance,

Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

6. A practice; a manner; a habit. We still say, he has a trick of winking with his eyes, of speaking loud, &c. Steevens.

I spoke it but according to the trick: if you'll hang me, you may.

Shakespeare.

The trick of that voice I well remember.

Shakespeare.

Behold,

Although the print be little, the whole matter

And copy of the father; eye, nose, lip,

The trick of's frown, his forehead.

Shakespeare, Wint. Talc.

7. A number of cards laid regularly up in play: as, a trick of cards.

8. A plait or knot of hair. [trica, low Lat. See the second meaning of To TRICK.]

I prefer that kind of tire:—it stirs me more than all your court-curles, or your spangles, or your tricks: I affect not these high gable-ends, these Tuscan tops.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

To TRICK.† v. a. [tricher, Fr. triegen, Germ.]

1. To cheat; to impose on; to defraud.

Fortune — is pleas'd to trick or tromp mankind.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

It is impossible that the whole world should thus conspire to cheat themselves, to put a delusion on mankind, and trick themselves into belief.

Stephens, Serm.

2. To dress; to decorate; to adorn; properly to knot. [trica, in low Latin, signifies a knot of hair; treccia, Italian: hence trace. Matt. Westmonasteriensis says of Godiva of Coventry, that she rode tricas capitis & crines dissolvens.]

And trick them up in knotted curls anew.

Drayton.

They turned the imposture upon the king, and gave out, that to defeat the true inheritor he had tricked up a boy in the likeness of Edward Plantagenet.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Horridly trickt

With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,

Bak'd and impasted with the parching fires.

Shakespeare.

This pillar is but a medley, or a mass of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind by stealth; and though the most richly tricked, yet the poorest in this, that he is a borrower of all his beauty.

Wotton on Architecture.

Their heads are trickt with tassels and flowers.

Sandys.

Woeful shepherds, weep no more,

For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead:

Sunk, though he be, beneath the wat'ry floor;

So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,

And yet anon repairs his drooping head,

And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled ore,

Flames in the forehead of the morning sky.

Milton, Lycidas.

Not trick'd and frounc'd, as she was wont

With the Attick boy to hunt.

Milton, L'Al.

A daw that had a mind to be sparkish, tricked himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster.

L'Estrange.

Love is an airy good, opinion makes,

That tricks and dresses up the gawdy dream.

Dryden.

People lavish it profusely in tricking up their children in fine cloaths, and yet starve their minds.

Locke.

3. To perform with a light touch; though it may here mean to dress. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson alludes to the passage from Pope. But to trick is an old word for delineate or draw, properly only with pen and ink. [trycka, Swed.] It is a term of heraldry; as, to trick arms.

They are blazon'd there; there they are tricked, they and their pedigrees.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

Come, the colours and the ground prepare:

Dip in the rainbow, trick her off in air,

Chuse a firm cloud before it fall, and in it

Catch ere she change the Cynthia of this minute.

Pope.

To TRICK. v. n. To live by fraud.

Thus they jog on, still tricking, never thriving,

And murdering plays, which still they call reviving.

Dryden.

TRICKER. n. s. [this is often writte trigger; I know not which is right.] The catch which being pulled disengages the cock of the gun, that it may give fire.

Pulling aside the tricker we observed, that the force of the spring of the lock was not sensibly abated by the absence of the air.

Boyle.

As a goose

In death contracts his talons close;

So did the knight, and with one claw

The tricker of his pistol draw.

Hudibras.

TRICKERY.* n. s. [from trick.] Act of dressing up; artifice.

You taught us to set a just value upon the eccentricities of impetuous and untutored genius, by giving us an opportunity to compare them with the trickeries of cold and systematic refinement.

Dr. Parr.

TRICKING. n. s. [from trick.] Dress; ornament.

Get us properties and tricking for our fairies.

Shakespeare.

TRICKISH. adj. [from trick.] Knavishly artful; fraudulently cunning; mischievously subtle.

All he says is in a loose, slippery, and trickish way of reasoning.

Atterbury to Pope.

To TRICKLE.† v. n. [Of this word I find no etymology that seems well authorized or probable.

Dr. Johnson. — Scottish, trigle. "Serenius derives the Engl. word from Icel. trekt, a funnel, infundibulum. Adhering to the same line of deduction, I would prefer Icel. tregill, alveolus; for tears, trickling down, form as it were a small trough or furrow in the cheek, or fall as water in a narrow channel." Dr. Jamieson, in V. To TRIGLE. Serenius, however, notices also trill, to which it may be referred, from trilla, Swed. to roll, written also tillra. Tillra is applied to tears, in the sense of trickle down. See Widegren's Swedish Lexicon.] To fall in drops; to rill in a slender stream.

He, prick'd with pride,
Forth spurred fast; adown his courser's side
The red blood trickling, stain'd the way.

Spenser.

Fast beside there trickled softly down
A gentle stream, whose murmuring wave did play

Amongst the pumy stones, and made a sound
To lull him soft asleep that by it lay.

Spenser.

Some noises help sleep; as, the blowing of the wind, and trickling of water, as moving in the spirits a gentle attention, which stilleth the discursive motion. Bacon.

He wakened by the trickling of his blood. Wiscman.
Beneath his ear the fast'ned arrow stood,
And from the wound appear'd the trickling blood. Dryden.

He lay stretch'd along, his eyes fixt upward,
And ever and anon a silent tear
Stole down, and trickled from his hoary beard. Dryden.

The emblems of honour wrought on the front in the brittle materials above mentioned, trickled away under the first impressions of the heat. Addison, Freeholder.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands,
Tuning his voice and balancing his hands:
How fluent nonsense trickles from his tongue!
How sweet the periods, neither said nor sung. Pope.

They empty heads console with empty sound.
No more, alas! the voice of fame they hear,
The balm of dulness trickling in their ear. Pope, Dunciad.

TRICKMENT.* n. s. [from trick.] Decoration.

No tomb shall hold thee;

But these two arms; no trickments but my tears
Over thy hearse. Beaumont and Fl. Mad Lover.

Make them go trickie, gallant, and cleene.

Old Interl. of the Disobedient Child.

The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words; and I do know
A many fools that stand in better place,
Garnish'd like him, that for a tricksy word
Defy the matter. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

All this service have I done since I went.
— My tricksy spirit! Shakespeare, Tempest.

Tricksey tales of speaking Cornish daws.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. B. 2. Pr.

TRICKTRACK.* n. s. [French, trictac. See TRICKTACK.] A game at tables.

Loitering in sloth and idleness, cross-legged like so many taylor, the Turk wastes almost his whole time, lolling on these cushions or sophas, smoaking tobacco, and drinking coffee or sherbet, without either diversion or amusement, but playing with shells, or at trick-track, or the goose.

Memoirs of P. H. Bruce, p. 65.

TRICORPORAL.* adj. [tricornus, Lat.] Having three bodies.

TRIDE.* adj. [among hunters; tride, French.] Short and ready. Bailey.

TRIDENT.* n. s. [trident, Fr. tridens, Latin.] A three forked sceptre of Neptune.

His nature is too noble for the world:

He would not flatter Neptune for his trident. Shakespeare.

Can'st thou with figgis pierce him to the quick?

Or in his skull thy barbed trident stick? Sandys on Job.

He gives them leave to wear their saphire crowns,
And wield their little tridents. Milton, Comus.

Several find a mystery in every tooth of Neptune's trident.

Addison on Anc. Medals.

TRIDENT.* adj. Having three teeth.

Neptune —

Held his trident mace upon the south:

The winds were whist, the billows danc'd no more.

Quarles, Hist. of Jonah, (1620,) § 6.

TRIDING.* n. s. [tridunga, Saxon; rather trithing.]

The third part of a county or shire. This division is only used in Yorkshire, where it is corrupted into riding.

'Tis hard for every trifling debt of two shillings to be driven to law. Spenser.

To TRI'FLE.* v. a. To make of no importance. Not in use.

Threescore and ten I can remember well,

Within the volume of which time I've seen

Hours dreadful and things strange; but this sore night

Hath trifled former knowings. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

T R I

TRI'FLE. n. s. [from the verb.] A thing of no moment.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deep consequence. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Old Chaucer doth of Topas tell,
Mad Rabelais of Pantagruel,
A later third of Dowsabell,
With such poor trifles playing:
Others the like have labour'd at,
Some of this thing, and some of that,
And many of they know not what,
But that they must be saying. Drayton, Nymphid.

The infinitely greatest confessed good is neglected, to satisfy the successive uneasiness of our desires pursuing trifles. Locke.

Brunetta's wise in actions great, and rare,
But scorns on trifles to bestow her care:
Thus every hour Brunetta is to blame,
Because the occasion is beneath her aim.
Think nought a trifle, though it small appear;
Small sands the mountain, moments make the year;
And trifles life. Your care to trifles give,
Or you may die, before you truly live. Young.

TRI'FLER. n. s. [trifelaar, Dutch.] One who acts with levity; one that talks with folly.

A man cannot tell whether Apelles or Albert Durer were the more triflers, whereof the one would make a personage by geometrical proportions, the other by taking the best parts out of divers faces to make one excellent. Bacon.

Shall I, who can enchant the boist'rous deep,
Bid Boreas halt, make hills and forests move,
Shall I be baffled by this trifler, love? Granville.

As much as systematical learning is decried by some vain
triflers of the age, it is the happiest way to furnish the mind with knowledge. Watts.

Triflers not even in trifles can excel;
'Tis solid bodies only polish well. Young.

TRI'FLING. adj. [from trifle.] Wanting worth; unimportant; wanting weight.

To a soul supported with an assurance of the divine favour, the honours or afflictions of this life will be equally trifling and contemptible. Rogers, Serm.

TRI'FLINGLY. adv. [from trifling.] Without weight; without dignity; without importance.

Those who are carried away with the spontaneous current of their own thoughts, must never humour their minds in being thus triflingly busy. Locke.

TRI'FLINGNESS.* n. s. [from trifling.] Lightness; emptiness; vanity.

The triflingness and petulancy of this scruple I have represented upon its own proper principles. Bp. Parker, Rehears. Transp. p. 39.

TRI'MMING. n. s. [from trim.] Ornamental appendages to a coat or gown.

Judgement without vivacity of imagination is too heavy, and like a dress without fancy; and the last without the first is too gay, and but all trimming. Garth, Pref. to Ovid.

TRI'MNESS.† n. s. [from trim.] Neatness; petty elegance of dress. Sherwood.

TRI'NAL. adj. [trinus, Lat.] Threefold.

Like many an angel's voice,
Singing before the Eternal Majesty,
In their trinal triplicity on high.

Spenser.

That far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith he wont at heaven's high council-table
To sit the midst of trinal unity,
He laid aside.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

TRI'NDLE.* n. s. See TRUNDLE.

TRINE. n. s. [trine, Fr. trinus, Lat.] An aspect of planets placed in three angles of a trigon, in which they are supposed by astrologers to be eminently benign.

To the other five,
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy.

Milton, P. L.

Now frequent trines the happier lights among,
And high-rai'd Jove from his dark prison freed,
Those weights took off that on his planet hung,
Will gloriously the new-laid works succeed.

Dryden.

From Aries right-ways draw a line, to end
In the same round, and let that line subtend
An equal triangle; now since the lines
Must three times touch the round, and meet three signs,
Where'er they meet in angles those are trines.

Creech.

TRINE.* adj. [trinus, Lat.] Threefold; thrice repeated.

In other parts, trine immersion most commonly prevailed, as it does in the Greek church to this very day.

Wheatly on the Comm. Pr. ch. 7. § 3.

To TRINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in a trine aspect.

This advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be outridden, though outrun;

Touching the picture of the Trinity, I hold it blasphemous and utterly unlawful. Peacham.

In my whole essay there is not any thing like an objection against the Trinity. Locke.

TRINKET.† n. s. [This Skinner derives somewhat harshly from tringuet, Fr. trinchetto, Ital. a topsail. I rather imagine it corrupted from tricket, some petty finery or decoration. Dr. Johnson. — Perhaps from the low Lat. tringuetum, a game at tables, as tricktrack, draughts, or chess; whence tringuet or trinket might be applied to one of the marks or figures used in the game, and thence to any toy.]

1. Toys; ornaments of dress; superfluities of decoration.

Beauty and use can so well agree together, that of all the trinkets wherewith they are attired, there is not one but serves to some necessary purpose. Sidney.

They throng who should buy first, as if my trinkets had been hallowed. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Let her but have three wrinkles in her face,
Soon will you hear the sawcy steward say,
Pack up with all your trinkets and away.

Dryden, Juv.

She was not hung about with toys and trinkets, tweezer-cases, pocket-glasses.

Arbuthnot.

How Johnny wheedled, threaten'd, fawn'd,
Till Phillis all her trinkets pawn'd.

Swift.

2. Things of no great value; tackle; tools.

What husbandlie husbands except they be fooles,
But handsom have storehouse for trinkets and tooles. Tusser.
Go with all your servants and trinkets about you.

L'Estrange.

To TRINKET.* v. n. [from the noun.] To give trinkets.

By their tricks and trinketting between party and party, and their intriguing it with courtiers and court-ladies, they had upon the matter set the whole court together by the ears.

South, Serm. vi. 114.

TRINO'MIAL.* } adj. [tres and nomen, Lat.] In TRINO'MINAL. } mathematicks, consisting of three parts or monomes.

TRIO'BOLAR.† } adj. [triobolaris, Lat.] Vile; mean;
TRIO'BOLARY. } worthless.

Any triobulary pasquiller, any strerquilinous rascal.

Howell, Lett. ii. 48.

Turn your libel into verse, and then it may pass current amongst the balladmongers for a triobular ballad. Cheyne.

To TRIP. v. a. [treper, Fr. trippen, Dutch.]

1. To supplant; to throw by striking the feet from the ground by a sudden motion.

He conjunct

Tripp'd me behind.

Shakspeare.

Be you contented,

To have a son set your decrees at naught,
To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person.

Shakspeare.

2. To strike from under the body.

I tript up thy heels and beat thee.

Shakspeare.

The words of Hobbes's defence trip up the heels of his cause; I had once resolved. To resolve presupposeth deliberation, but what deliberation can there be of that which is inevitably determined by causes without ourselves. Bramhall.

3. To catch; to detect.

These women

Can trip me, if I err; who, with wet cheeks,
Were present when she finish'd.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

To TRIP. v. n.

1. To fall by losing the hold of the feet.
2. To fail; to err; to be deficient.

Saint Jerome, who pardons not over-easily his adversaries, if any where they chance to trip, presseth him as thereby making all sorts of men God's enemies. Hooker.

Virgil is so exact in every word, that none can be changed but for a worse: he pretends sometimes to trip, but it is to make you think him in danger when most secure. Dryden.

Many having used their utmost diligence to secure a retention of the things committed to the memory, cannot certainly know where it will trip and fail them. South.

Will shines in mixed company, making his real ignorance appear a seeming one: our club has caught him tripping, at which times they never spare him. Addison, Spect.

Several writers of uncommon erudition would expose my ignorance, if they caught me tripping in a matter of so great moment. Addison, Spect.

3. To stumble; to titubate.

I may have the idea of a man's drinking till his tongue trips, yet not know that it is called drunkenness. Locke.

4. To run lightly.

In silence sad,
Trip we after the night's shade. Shakspeare.

2. A name sometimes given to the wren.

TROCHI'LICK.* adj. [from trochilicks.] Having power to draw out, or turn round.

I am advertised that there is one, which, by art trochilick, will draw all English surnames of the best families out of the pit of poetry; as Boucher from Busyris, Percy from Perseus, &c.
Camden, Rem.

TROCHILICKS. n. s. [τροχίλιον, τροχός Gr. a wheel.]

The science of rotatory motion.

There succeeded new inventions and horologies, composed by trochilicks, or the artifice of wheels, whereof some are kept in motion by weight, others without.
Brown.

It is requisite that we rightly understand some principles in trochilicks, or the art of wheel instruments; as chiefly the relation betwixt the parts of a wheel and those of a balance, the several proportions in the semidiameter of a wheel being answerable to the sides of a balance.
Wilkins, Dædalus.

TROCHINGS. n. s. The branches on a deer's head.

Ainsworth.

TROCHISCH. n. s. [τροχίσκος Gr. trochisque, French; trochiscus, Lat.] A kind of tablet or lozenge.

The trochisks of vipers, so much magnified, and the flesh of snakes some ways condited and corrected.
Bacon.

TROCHITE.* n. s. [trochite, Fr. from τροχός, Gr. a wheel.] A kind of figured fossil stone.

Near Levinz in Westmoreland, I met with a stone which ran almost across the river Kent, made of several millions of trochites, pretty regularly cemented into one mass.
Bp. Nicolson, Lett. to Lhwyd, (1693.)

TROD.

TRODDEN. } participle passive of tread.

Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles.

St. Luke, xxi.

Thou, infernal serpent, shalt not long
Rule in the clouds; like an autumnal star,
Or light'ning, thou shalt fall from heav'n trod down
Under his feet.

Milton, P. R.

Ev'n the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom,
And trodden weeds send out a rich perfume.
Addison.

TRODE, the preterite of tread.

They trode the grapes and made merry.
Judges, ix. 27.

TRODE. n. s. [from trode, pret. of tread.] Footing.

The trode is not so tickle.
Spenser.

They never set foot on that same trode,
But baulke their right way, and strain abroad.
Spenser.

TROGLODYTE.† n. s. [τρογλοδυτής.] One who inhabits caves of the earth.

These savages, gazing awhile upon them, flew away at last into their caves, for they were trogodytes, and had no dwelling but in the hollows of the rocks.

Howell, Instr. For Trav. (1642.) p. 135.

Procure me a trogodyte-footman, who can catch a roe at his full speed.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

To TROLL.† v. a. [trollen, to roll, Dutch; perhaps from trochlea, Lat. a thing to turn round.]

1. To move circularly; to drive about.

Then doth she trowle to me the bowle,
Even as a mault worm should;
And saith, sweet heart, I took my part
Of this joly good ale and old.

Ballad in Gamm. Gurton's Needle, (1551.)

With the phant'sies of hey troll,

Troll about the bridal bowl,

And divide the broad-bread cake,

Round about the bride's stake.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Forbidden dice to trowle.

Fanshaw, Poems, (ed. 1676,) p. 306.

2. To move volubly.

Bred only and completed to the taste

Of lustful appetite, to sing, to dance,

To tress, and troll the tongue, and roll the eye.
Milton, P. L.

3. To utter volubly. [perhaps from tralla, Su. Goth. to sing.]

Will you troll the catch

You taught me but while-ere?

Shakespeare, Tempest.

If he read this with patience, I'll troll ballads.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

4. To draw on. [trôler, French, to lead, to draw.]

This meaning is overpassed by Dr. Johnson and other lexicographers.

He trowls and baits him with a nobler prey.

Hammond, Works, iv. 614.

The hope he is fed withal trowls him on.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. i.

To TROLL.† v. n.

1. To go round; to be moved circularly.

Nappy ale in a browne bowle,

Which did about the board merrily trowle.

Old Ballad of the King and Miller of Mansfield.

2. To roll; to run round.

How pleasant on the banks of Styx,

To troll it in a coach and six.

Swift.

3. To fish for a pike with a rod which has a pulley towards the bottom, which I suppose gives occasion to the term. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the Fr. trôler, to draw, to drag, which may be applied to the manner of managing the bait.

Nor drain I ponds the golden carp to take,

Nor trowle for pikes, dispeoplers of the lake.

Gay.

TRO'LOP.† n. s. [A low word, I know not whence derived. Dr. Johnson. — It seems allied to the Teut. draeligh, idle, slothful, careless, from draelen, whence our drawl.] A slattern, a woman loosely dressed.

The remembrance of his old conversation among the virginian trollope.

Milton, Apol. for Smect. § 6.

TROLLOPE'E.* n. s. [from trollop.] A kind of loose dress for women, not now in use.

There goes Mrs. Roundabout; I mean the fat lady in the lutestring trollopee.

Goldsmith, Ess. 15.

TRO'LMYDAMES.† n. s. [Of this word I know not the meaning. Dr. Johnson. — From trou-madame, Fr. the game of nine-holes. Warburton.

A fellow I have known to go about with trolmydames: I knew him once a servant of the prince.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

TRO'NAGE. n. s. Money paid for weighing.

TROOP.† n. s. [troupe, Fr. troppa, Italian; troope, Dutch; trop, Swedish; troppa, low Latin. Dr. Johnson. — Morin refers the Fr. troupe to the Lat. truba, Gr. τύρβη, confusion; by transposition truba, trupa, troupe. The Icel. thyrpa, a troop, and the Welsh torf, the same, which Serenius notices, are in favour of this etymology.]

1. A company; a number of people collected together.

That which should accompany old age,

As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,

I must not look to have.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Saw you not a blessed troop

Invite me to a banquet, whose bright faces

Cast thousand beams upon me like the sun?

Shakespeare.

As the mind, by putting together the repeated ideas of unity, makes the collective mode of any number, as a score, or a gross; so by putting together several particular substances, it makes collective ideas of substances, as a troop, an army.

Locke.

2. A body of soldiers.

Æneas seeks his absent foe,

And sends his slaughter'd troops to shades below.

Dryden.

3. A small body of cavalry.

To TROOP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To march in a body.

I do not, as an enemy to peace,

Troop in the throngs of military men,

But rather shew a while like fearful war.

Shakespeare.

They anon

With hundreds, and with thousands, trooping came,

Attended.

Milton, P. L.

- Armies at the call of trumpet
Troop to their standard.
2. To march in haste.
Yonder shines Aurora's harbinger,
At whose approach ghosts, wandering here and there,
Troop home to churchyards. Shakspeare.
The dry streets flow'd with men,
That troop'd up to the king's capacious court. Chapman.
3. To march in company.
I do invest you jointly with my power,
Pre-eminence, and all the large effects
That troop with majesty. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
TROOP'ER. n. s. [from troop.] A horse soldier. A trooper fights only on horseback; a dragoon marches on horseback, but fights either as a horseman or footman.
Custom makes us think well of any thing: what can be more indecent than for any to wear boots but troopers and travellers? yet not many years since it was all the fashion. Grew.
TROPE. n. s. [τρόπος, Gr. trope, Fr. tropus, Lat.]
A change of a word from its original signification;
as, the clouds foretel rain, for foreshew.
For rhetorick he could not ope
His mouth, but out there flew a trope. Hudibras.
If this licence be included in a single word, it admits of tropes; if in a sentence, of figures. Dryden.
TROPHIED. adj. [from trophy.] Adorned with trophies.
Some greedy minion or imperious wife,
The trophy'd arches, story'd halls invade,
And haunt their slumbers in the pompous shade. Pope.
TROPHY. n. s. [τrophæum, trophæum, Lat.] Something shewn or treasured up in proof of victory.
What trophy then shall I most fit devise,
In which I may record the memory
Of my love's conquest, peerless beauty's prize
Adorn'd with honour, love, and chastity? Spenser.
To have borne
His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city, he forbids;
Giving all trophy, signal, and ostent,
Quite from himself to God. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
There lie thy bones,
Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb. Shakspeare.
Twice will I not review the morning's rise,
Till I have torn that trophy from thy back,
And split thy heart for wearing it. Shakspeare.
In ancient times the trophies erected upon the place of the victory, the triumphs of the generals upon their return, the great donatives upon the disbanding of the armies, were things able to enflame all men's courage. Bacon, Essays.
Around the posts hung helmets, darts, and spears,
And captive chariots, axes, shields, and bars,
And broken beaks of ships, the trophies of their wars. Dryden.
The tomb with manly arms and trophies grace,
To shew posterity Elpenor was. Pope, Odys.
Set up each senseless wretch for nature's boast,
On whom praise shines, as trophies on a post. Young.
TRO'PICAL. adj. [from trope.]
1. Rhetorically changed from the original meaning.
A strict and literal acception of a loose and tropical expression was a second ground. Brown, Vulg. Err.
The words are tropical or figurative, and import an hyperbole, which is a way of expressing things beyond what really and naturally they are in themselves. South.
The foundation of all parables is, some analogy or similitude between the tropical or allusive part of the parable, and the thing intended by it. South.
2. [from tropick.] Placed near the tropick; belonging to the tropick.
The pine-apple is one of the tropical fruits. Salmon.
TRO'PICALLY. adv. [from tropical.] Figuratively.
The mouse-trap! marry, how? tropically. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

- This sentence must be taken tropically.
Abp. Usher, Answ. to the Jes. p. 38.
TROPICK. n. s. [tropicque, Fr. tropicus, Lat.] The line at which the sun turns back, of which the north has the tropick of Cancer, and the south the tropick of Capricorn.
Under the tropick is our language spoke,
And part of Flanders hath receiv'd our yoke. Waller.
Since on ev'ry sea, on ev'ry coast,
Your men have been distress'd, your navy tost,
Seven times the sun has either tropick view'd,
The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd. Dryden.
TRO'PIST. n. s. [from trope; Fr. tropiste.] One who deals in tropes: a name also given to a sect which pretended to explain the Scriptures altogether by tropes and figures.
TROPOLOGICAL. † adj. [tropologique, Fr. τρόπος and λόγος, Gr.] Varied by tropes; changed from the original import of the words.
Tropological, allegorical expositions.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 676.
What should be the true moral or tropological reason of salt being used in all sacrifices. Biblioth. Bibl. iii. 44.
TROPOLOGY. n. s. [τρόπος and λόγος, Gr.] A rhetorical mode of speech including tropes, or a change of some word from the original meaning.
Not attaining the deuterology and second intention of words, they omit their superconsequences, coherences, figures, or tropo- logies, and are not persuaded beyond their literalities. Brown, Vulg. Err.
TRO'SSERS. n. s. [trousses, Fr.] Breeches; hose. See TROUSE.
You rode like a kern of Ireland; your French hose off, and in your strait trossers. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
To TROT. † v. n. [trotter, Fr. trotten, Dutch. Dr.
Johnson. — Wachter, with Verelius, derives it from the Su. Goth. trotta, fatigare; Lye and Serenius, from the Icel. tritta, Sueth. tratta, cursitare, brevibus et citatis passibus ire; frequentat. à traeda, ire.]
1. To move with a high jolting pace.
Poor Tom, that hath made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting horse, over four-inch'd bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Whom doth time trot withal?
— He trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage, and the day it is solemniz'd: if the interim be but a sevennight, time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years. Shakspeare, As you like it.
Take a gentle trotting horse, and come up and see your old friends. Dennis.
2. To walk fast; or, to travel on foot: in a ludicrous or contemptuous sense.
TROT. † n. s. [trot, Fr. Germ. Dutch; from the verb.]
1. The jolting high pace of a horse.
His honesty is not
So loose or easy, that a ruffling wind
Can blow away, or glittering look it blind:
Who rides his sure and even trot,
While the world now rides by, now lags behind. Herbert.
Here lieth one who did most truly prove,
That he could never die while he could move;
So hung his destiny, never to rot
While he might still jog on and keep his trot.
Milton, Ep. on Hobson.
The virtuoso's saddle will amble when the world is upon the hardest trot. Dryden.
2. An old woman in contempt. [I know not whence derived. Dr. Johnson. — From the German trot, mulier, anus, saga. "Ab initio fuisse videtur nomen omnibus fæminis commune. Verel. in Ind.

DROS, qwinna, fœmina, mulier. Postea fœminis decrepitis tantum adhæsit. Indè Anglis trot, vetula.
Tandem à vetulis venit ad sagas, quia vulgus de vetulis plerumque malè sentit. Indè trotte, drutte, drude, saga, striga, venefica. Nisi fortè sit à druis.
Wachter, in V. TroT. See also Keysler, Antiq.
Sept. p. 503. In our old language the word is trat.]

Give him gold enough, and marry him to an old trot with ne'er a tooth in her head : why, nothing comes amiss, so money comes withal. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

How now, bold-face, cries an old trot ; sirrah, we eat our own hens, and what you eat you steal. L'Estrange.

TROTH. n. s. [trouth, old English ; тpeoð, Saxon.]

1. Belief ; faith ; fidelity.

Saint Withold met the night-mare,

Bid her alight and her troth plight. Shakspeare.

Stephen assails the realm, obtains the crown,

Such tumults raising as torment them both :

Th' afflicted state, divided in their troth

And partial faith, most miserable grown,

Endures the while. Daniel, Civ. War.

2. Truth ; verity.

In troth, thou'rt able to instruct grey hairs,

And teach the wily African deceit. Addison, Cato.

TRO'THLESS. adj. [from troth.] Faithless ; treacherous.

Thrall to the faithless waves and trothless sky. Fairfax.

To TRO'THPLIGHT.* v. a. [troth and plight.] To affiance ; to betroth.

Megara and Hercules were sent for : the king made them to troth-plate each other, with great joy of both parties.

Destr. of Troy, B. 2. p. 258.

This, your son-in-law,

Is trothplight to your daughter. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

TRO'THPLIGHT.* n. s. The act of plighting troth ;
the act of betrothing.

As rank as any flax-wench that puts to Before her trothplight. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

TRO'TTER.† n. s. [from trot.]

1. One that walks a jolting pace ; one that runs up and down. Huloet, and Sherwood.

2. A sheep's foot.

The chief of your fayre

Might stand now by potters,

And suche as sell trotters. Skelton, Poems, p. 167.

TROUBADOUR.* n. s. [old French, " Trouba-dours, poètes Provençaux, au-delà de la Loire, qui, pour quelques médiocres chansons d'une assou-pissante monotonie, et quelques autres petits pièces, ont trouvé des chantes pour les célébrer, tandis que les trouveres François, versés dans tous les genres de la littérature, ont à peine été connus." Roque-fort. Troubadour and trouveur or trouvere signify the same ; an inventor, or, as we formerly called a poet, a maker ; from trouver, to invent ; the trouveurs of Normandy and Britany are represented as persons of higher attainments than their contemporaries the troubadours ; the latter only of which is the name familiar to us.] An early poet of Provence.

About the beginning of the eleventh century, and for a century or two after, flourished the tribe of troubadours, or Provençal poets. Harris, Philol. Inq.

The troubadours of Provence are supposed to have led the way to the poets of Italy, France, and Spain.

Bp. Percy, Ess. on the Anc. Eng. Minstrels.

Boccaccio copied many of his best tales from the troubadours.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 462.

To TROUBLE.† v. a. [troubler, Fr. Dr. Johnson.—

Mr. H. Tooke calls trouble the past participle of the Sax. trubulan, tundere, conterere, pinsere, to bruise, to pound, to vex. The Latin tribulare is the same word, differing only by a different infinitive termination ; tribulan, tribulare. Div. of Purl. i. 247. —
The German tribulieren is also used in the sense of the Sax. trubulan, and, figuratively, of to vex. All perhaps, Fr. Sax. and German, are to be referred to the Lat. turbo, to disturb ; whence the Germ. truben, by transposition, the same ; trube,
Norm. Fr. trouble ; troubled, old Engl. for troubled,
Gloss. to Wicliffe ; and in our ancient vocabulary, the Prompt. Parv. sturbler and sturblering are found for a troubler and a troubling.]

1. To disturb ; to perplex.

An hour before the worshipp'd sun

Pear'd through the golden window of the east,

A troubled mind drew me to walk abroad. Shakspeare.

But think not here to trouble holy rest. Milton, P. L.

Never trouble yourself about those faults which age will cure. Locke on Education.

2. To afflict ; to grieve.

It would not trouble me to be slain for thee, but much it torments me to be slain by thee. Sidney.

They pertinaciously maintain, that afflictions are no real evils, and therefore a wise man ought not to be troubled at them. Tillotson.

Though it is in vain to be troubled for that which I cannot chuse, yet I cannot chuse but be afflicted. Tillotson.

3. To distress ; to make uneasy.

He had credit enough with his master to provide for his own interest, and troubled not himself for that of others. Clarendon.

Be not dismay'd nor troubled at these tidings. Milton, P. L.

He was sore troubled in mind, and much distressed. Mac.

4. To busy ; to engage overmuch.

Martha, thou art careful, and troubled about many things.

St. Luke, x. 41

5. To give occasion of labour to. A word of civility or slight regard.

I will not trouble myself to prove that all terms are not definable, from that progress in infinitum which it will lead us into. Locke.

6. To tease ; to vex.

The boy so troubles me ;

'Tis past enduring. Shakspeare.

7. To disorder ; to put into agitation or commotion.

A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled ;

Muddy, ill seeming, thick, bereft of beauty. Shakspeare.

An angel went down into the pool and troubled the water ;
whosoever first after the troubling stepped in was made whole.

St. John, v. 4.

God looking forth will trouble all his host. Milton, P. L.

Hear how she the ear employs ;

Their office is the troubled air to take. Davies.

Seas are troubled wher they do revoke

Their flowing waves into themselves again. Davies.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South.

The best law in our days is that which continues our judges during their good behaviour, without leaving them to the mercy of such who might, by an undue influence, trouble and pervert the course of justice. Addison, Guardian.

Thy force alone their fury can restrain,

And smooth the waves, or swell the troubled main. Dryden.

8. [In low language.] To sue for a debt.

TRO'UBLE. n. s. [trouble, French.]

1. Disturbance ; perplexity.

They all his host derided, while they stood

2. Affliction ; calamity.

Double, double, toil and trouble,

Fire burn and cauldron bubble. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. Molestation; obstruction; inconvenience.

Take to thee from among the cherubim
Thy choice of flaming warriors, lest the fiend
—some new trouble raise. Milton, P. L.

4. Uneasiness; vexation.

I have dream'd
Of much offence and trouble, which my mind
Knew never till this irksome night. Milton, P. L.

TROUBLE-STATE. n. s. [trouble and state.] Disturber of a community; publick makebate.

Those fair baits these trouble-states still use,
Pretence of common good, the king's ill course,
Must be cast forth. Daniel, Civ. War.

TROUBLER. n. s. [from trouble.] Disturber; confounder.

Unhappy falls that hard necessity,
Quoth he, the troubler of my happy peace,
And vowed foe of my felicity. Spenser.

Heavens hurl down their indignation
On thee, thou troubler of the poor world's peace. Shakspeare.

The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny; as is seen in great conquerors and troublers of the world, and more in arch-hereticks. Bacon.

He knowing well that nation must decline,
Whose chief support and sinews are of coin,
Our nation's solid virtue did oppose
To the rich troublers of the world's repose. Waller.

The sword justly drawn by us can scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be pared, as to be under no apprehensions for the future. Atterbury.

TROUBLESOME. adj. [from trouble.]

1. Vexatious; uneasy; afflictive.

Heaven knows
By what bye-paths and indirect crooked ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head:
To thee it shall descend with better quiet. Shakspeare.
He must be very wise that can forbear being troubled at things very troublesome. Tillotson.

2. Full of molestation.

Though our passage through this world be rough and trouble- some, yet the trouble will be but short, and the rest and contentment at the end will be an ample recompence. Atterbury.

3. Burdensome; tiresome; wearisome.

My mother will never be troublesome to me. Pope.

4. Full of teasing business.

All this could not make us accuse her, though it made us almost pine away for spite, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney.

5. Slightly harassing.

They ees'd the putting off
These troublesome disguises which we wear. Milton, P. L.
Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bedfellow? Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

6. Unseasonably engaging; improperly importuning.

She of late is lightened of her womb,
That her to see should be but troublesome. Spenser.

7. Importunate; teasing.

Two or three troublesome old nurses never let me have a quiet night's rest with knocking me up. Arbutnot.

TROUBLESOMELY. adv. [from troublesome.] Vexatiously; wearisomely; unseasonably; importunately.

Though men will not be so troublesomely critical as to correct others in the use of words; yet, where truth is concerned, it can be no fault to desire their explication. Locke.

TROUBLESOMENESS. n. s. [from troublesome.]

1. Vexatiousness; uneasiness.

The lord treasurer complained of the troublesomeness of the place, for that the exchequer was so empty: the chancellor answered, Be of good cheer, for now you shall see the bottom of your business at the first. Bacon.

2. Importunity; unseasonableness.

TROUBLOUS. adj. [from trouble.] Tumultuous; confused; disordered; put into commotion. An elegant word, but disused.

He along would fly
Upon the streaming rivers, sport to find;
And oft would dare to tempt the troubulous wind. Spenser.

Soon as they this mock king did espy,
Their troubulous strife they stinted by and by. Spenser.

No other noise, nor people's troubulous cries,
As still are wont t' annoy the walled town,
Might there be heard. Spenser.

As a tall ship tossed in troubulous seas,
Whom raging winds threaten to make the prey
Of the rough rocks. Spenser.

Then, masters, look to see a troubulous world. Shakspeare.
Only one supply

In four years troubulous and expensive reign. Daniel.

TROUVER. † n. s. [trouver, French.] In the common law, is an action which a man hath against one that having found any of his goods refuseth to deliver them upon demand. Cowel.

Bring my action of conversion
And trouver for my goods. Hudibras, iii. iii.

TROUGH. n. s. [τρογ, τροχ, Saxon; troch, Dutch; trou, Danish; traug, Icelandick; truogo, Italian.] Any thing hollowed and open longitudinally on the upper side.

The bloody boar
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines,
Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough
In your embowel'd bosoms. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

They had no ships but big troughs, which they call canoes.
Abbot, Descr. of the World.

Where there is a good quick fall of rain-water, lay a half trough of stone, of a good length, three foot deep, with one end upon the high ground, the other upon the low; cover the trough with brakes a good thickness, and cast sand upon the top of the brakes, the lower end of the trough will run like a spring of water. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Some log, perhaps, upon the water swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some rivulet passage did begin. Dryden.

That also is accounted virgin quicksilver, which, having no need to pass the fire, is separated by water first in a sieve, and afterwards in a long trough. Brown, Trav.

The water dissolves the particles of salt mixed in the stone, and is conveyed by long troughs and canals from the mines to Hall, where it is received in vast cisterns, and boiled off. Addison.

To TROUNCE. † v. a. [derived by Skinner from tronc or tronçon, French, a club. Dr. Johnson. — This is an old word in our language, and used for beat or discomfit, long before Butler's time, from whose Hudibras Dr. Johnson's earliest example is taken.] To punish by an indictment or information; to punish severely.

The Lord trounced Sisera, and all his chariots.
Mathew's Transl. of the Bible, (1537), Judg. v. 15.
Trounce him, gaol him, and bring him upon his knees.
South, Serm. vi. 52.

More probable, and like to hold
Than hand, or seal, or breaking gold;
For which so many, that renounc'd
Their plighted contracts, have been trounc'd. Hudibras.

If you talk of peaching, I'll peach first: I'll trounce you for offering to corrupt my honesty. Dryden, Span. Friar.

TROUSE. † } n. s. [trousse, Fr. trius, Irish; "Their TROUSERS. } breeches like the Irish trooze have hose and stockings sewed together." Sir T. Herbert,
Trav. p. 297. Roquefort calls the French trousse,
"culotte ou haut-dechausse en usage au xv<sup>e</sup> siecle."]

Breeches; long breeches; pantaloons. See also TROSSERS.

The leather quilted jack serves under his shirt of mail, and to cover his trouse on horseback. Spenser on Ireland.

The unsightliness and pain in the leg may be helped by wearing a laced stocking; a laced trouse will do as much for the thigh. Wiseman, Surgery.

Several of the morris-dancers, represented upon the print of my window, have such hose or strait trowsers.

Tollet, Note on Shakspeare. Hen. V.

TROUT.† n. s. [truh̥t, Saxon; trocta, truta, trutta, Latin.]

1. A delicate spotted fish inhabiting brooks and quick streams.

The pond will keep trout and salmon in their seasonable plight, but not in their reddish grain. Carew.

Worse than the anarchy at sea,
Where fishes on each other prey;
Where ev'ry trout can make as high rants
O'er his inferiours as our tyrants.

Swift.

2. A familiar phrase for an honest, or perhaps for a silly fellow. ["The trout is in some kind a foolish fish, and an emblem of one who loves to be flattered; for when he is once in his hold, you may take him with your hands by tickling, rubbing, or clawing him under the belly." Swan, Speculum Mundi, ch. 8. § 1. So Beaum. and Fl. "Leave off your tickling of young heirs like trouts."] Here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling.

Shakspeare.

To TROW.† v. n. [tro, Su. Goth. trawan, M. Goth.]

1. To think; to imagine; to conceive. A word now disused, and rarely used even in ancient writers but in familiar language.

What handsomeness, trow you, can be observed in that speech, which is made one knows not to whom? Sidney.

Live, and alleagaunce owe

To him, that gives thee life and liberty;
And henceforth by this daie's ensample trow,
That hasty wroth and heedlesse hazardry

Doe breede repentance late and lasting infamy. Spenser, F. Q.

Is there any reasonable man, trow you, but will judge it meetter that our ceremonies of Christian religion should be Popish than Turkish or Heathenish? Hooker.

To-morrow next

We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow.

Shakspeare.

O rueful day! rueful indeed, I trow.

Gay.

2. To believe.

Lend less than thou owest,
Learn more than thou trowest.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Trow. interject. [for I trow, or trow you.] An exclamation of enquiry.

Well, if you be not turned Turk, there is no more sailing by the star.

—What means the fool, trow?

Shakspeare.

TROWEL. n. s. [truelle, Fr. trulla, Lat.]

1. A trowel is a tool to take up the mortar with, and spread it on the bricks; with which also they cut the bricks to such lengths as they have occasion, and also stop the joints. Moxon.

This was dext'rous at his trowel,
That was bred to kill a cow well.

Swift.

2. It is used for any coarse instrument.

How shall I answer you?

—As wit and fortune will.

—Or as the destinies decree.

—Well said, that was laid on with a trowel.

Shakspeare.

The most accurate engravings or embossments seem such rude, bungling, deformed works; as if they had been done with a mattock, or a trowel.

Wilkins.

TROY.

} n. s. [from Troies, Fr.] A kind of TROY-WEIGHT. } weight by which gold and bread are weighed, consisting of these denominations: a pound = 12 ounces; ounce = 20 pennyweights;
pennyweight = 24 grains.

The English physicians make use of troyweight after the following manner:

Grains	Scruple	Drachm	Ounce	Pound.
20
60	3
480	24	8
5760	288	96	12

The Romans left their ounce in Britain, now our averdupois ounce, for our troy ounce we had elsewhere. Arbutnot.

TRUANT.† n. s. [truand, old Fr. treuwant, Dutch, a vagabond. An old word in our language; written also truand, trewan, and trivant. See TRIVANT. "Truand, he that loitereth, wandering abroad, or lurking in corners." Barret, Alv. 1580. "No better than rogues and trewans, men of base quality and as low courage." Sir G. Buck, Hist. of K. Rich. III. 1646, p. 57.] An idler; one who wanders idly about, neglecting his duty or employment. To play the truant is, in schools, to stay from school without leave.

There ben truantes in such a wise,
That lacken heart; when best were
They spoken of love, and right for fere
They waxen dombe, and dare not telle.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry.

Shakspeare.

Though myself have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time,
To clothe mine age with angel-like perfection;
Yet hath Sir Protheus made fair advantage of his days.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers and truants. More.

Our ships are laden with the Trojan store,
And you like truants come too late ashore.

Dryden, Æn.

TRUANT. adj. Idle; wandering from business; lazy; loitering.

What keeps you from Wertemberg?

—A truant disposition, good my lord.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

He made a blushing cital of himself,
And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he master'd there a double spirit,
Of teaching, and of learning instantly.

Shakspeare.

Where thou seest a single sheep remain
In shades aloof, or couch'd upon the plain,
Or late to lag behind with truant pace,
Revenge the crime.

Dryden.

To TRUANT.† v. n. [truander, to beg about a country, Fr. truwanten, old Germ.] To idle at a distance from duty; to loiter; to be lazy.

'Tis double wrong to truant with your bed,

And let her read it in thy looks at board.

Shakspeare.

Thou art not, like truanting boys, to trifle away any of that time, which is too little to get thy lesson.

Henshaw, Daily Thoughts, (1651,) p. 134.

You have truanted so long about Charing-Cross, that you have forgot all your Latin.

Bp. Parker, Repr. of Rehears. Transpr. p. 209.

TRUANTLY.* adj. [from truant.] Like a truant.

The spirit of a man is truantly and trifling.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon. Ded. to Ld. Carbery.

TRU'ANTSHIP. n. s. [truallé, old Fr. from truant; truandise in Chaucer is beggary.] Idleness; negligence; neglect of study or business.

The master should not chide with him if the child have done his diligence, and used no truantship. Ascham.

TRUBS. n. s. [tuber, Latin.] A sort of herb. Ainsworth.

TRU'BAIL.† n. s. [trubbig, Swed. obtuse, and tail. Serenius.] A short squat woman. Ainsworth.

TRUCE.† n. s. [treuga, Germ. tregua, Span. and Ital. from the M. Goth. triggwo, pactum, foedus. Serenius.]

1. A temporary peace; a cessation of hostilities. Leagues and truces made between superstitious persons, and such as serve God aright. Hooker.

They pray in vain to have sin pardoned, which seek not also to prevent sin by prayer, even every particular sin, by prayer against all sin, except men can name some transgression wherewith we ought to have truce. Hooker.

All this utter'd
With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bent,
Could not make truce with the unruly spleen
Of Tybalt, deaf to peace. Shakespeare

This token serveth for a flag of truce
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers. Shakespeare.

Men shall be lovers of their own selves, without natural affection, truce breakers. 2 Tim. iii. 3.

Least the truce with treason should be mixt,
'Tis my concern to have the tree betwixt. Dryden.

Shadwel till death true dulness would maintain;
And in his father's right, and realm's defence,
Ne'er wou'd have peace with wit, nor truce with sense. Dryden.

2. Cessation; intermission; short quiet.

There he may find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours. Milton, P. L.
Sicknesses, which in the latter years of his life gave him but short and seldom truce. Fell.

TRU'CHMAN, or TRU'DGEMAN.* n. s. [Tagymenos, degy-menos, in the later Greek writers, signifieth an interpreter; derived from thirgem, Hebrew, to interpret, or expound out of one language into another; whence thargum, or targum; which see. Bedwell, Mohammedis Impost. 1615, p. 105.] An interpreter.

The Arabian trudgman, interpreting certain Arabick terms used by historians. Bedwell, Mohamm. Impost.

Soft, sir, I am truchman, and do flourish before this monsieur. B. Jonson, Cynth. Revels.

Truchman or interpreter between the English and the Welshmen. Blount, Anc. Ten. p. 17.

TRUCIDA'TION.† n. s. [from trucido, Lat.] The act of killing. Cockeram.

To TRUCK.† v. n. [troquer, French; truccare, Italian; trocar, Spanish; deduced by Salmasius from τρώγειν, Gr. to get money. Our word is old. "To trukkyn or change." Prompt. Parv.] To traffick by exchange; to give one commodity for another.

Despotism itself is obliged to truck and huckster.
Burke, Sp. on Concil. with America.

To TRUCK. v. a. To give in exchange; to exchange.

The Indians truck gold for glasses. L' Estrange.
Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul,

Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole;
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See, what a vast estate he left his son! Dryden.

I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods like the wild Indians, with each other. Swift.

T R U

TRUCK.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Exchange; traffick by exchange.

It is no less requisite to maintain a truck in moral offices, than in the common business of commerce. L' Estrange.

Love is covetous; I must have all of you: heart for heart is an equal truck. Dryden.

2. [τροχός, Gr.] Wooden wheels for carriage of cannon. Ainsworth. A kind of carriage, with low wheels, for any heavy weights.

TRU'CKER.* n. s. [from truck.] One who trafficks by exchange.

Of all the courses which man in such a case can take, this of capitulating, and as it were making terms, with the devil, is the most senseless and dangerous; no man having ever yet driven a saving bargain with this great trucker for souls, by exchanging guilts, or bartering one sin for another. South, Serm. vi. 336.

TRU'CKAGE.* n. s. [from truck.] The practice of trafficking by exchange.

Without the truckage of perishing coin. Milton, Of Ref. in Engl. B. 2.

To TRU'CKLE. v. n. [This word is, I believe, derived from trucklebed, which is always under another bed.] To be in a state of subjection or inferiority; to yield; to creep.

Shall our nation be in bondage thus Unto a land that truckles under us? Cleaveland.

For which so many a legal cuckold
Has been run down in courts and truckled. Hudibras.

Men may be stiff and obstinate upon a wrong ground, and ply and truckle too upon as false a foundation. L' Estrange.

Religion itself is forced to truckle to worldly policy. Norris.

His zeal was not to lash our crimes,
But discontent against the times:
For had we made him timely offers,
To raise his post or fill his coffers,
Perhaps he might have truckled down,
Like other brethren of his gown. Swift.

They were subdued and insulted by Alexander's captains, and continued under several revolutions, a small truckling state, of no name till they fell under the Romans. Swift.

TRU'CKLEBED, or TRU'NDLEBED.† n. s. [properly troclebed; from trochlea, Latin, or τροχός, Gr.] A bed that runs on wheels under a higher bed.

There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing bed and trucklebed. Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

When I was in Cambridge, and lay in a trundlebed under my tutor. Return from Parnassus, (1606.)

If he that is in battle slain
Be in the bed of honour lain;
He that is beaten may be sail
To lie in honour's trucklebed. Hudibras.

TRU'CULENCE.† } n. s. [truculentia, Lat.]
TRU'CULENCY. }

1. Savageness of manners.

He loves not tyranny: — the truculency of the subject, who transacts this, he approves not.

Waterhouse on Fortescu, (1663,) p. 184.

2. Terribleness of aspect.

TRU'CULENT.† adj. [truculentus, Lat.]

1. Savage; barbarous.

A barbarous Scythia, where the savage and truculent inhabitants transfer themselves from place to place in waggons, as they can find pasture, and live upon milk, and flesh roasted in the sun at the pomels of their saddles. Ray.

2. Terrible of aspect.

The trembling boy his brethren's hands,
Their truculent aspects, and servile bands,
Beheld. Sandys, Christ's Passion, (1640,) p. 14.

3. Destructive; cruel.

Pestilential seminaries, according to their grossness or subtilty, cause more or less truculent plagues, some of such malignity, that they enecate in two hours. Harvey on the Plague.

To TRUDGE. † v. n. [truggiolare, Italian. It is of the same origin as tread. See To TREAD.] To travel laboriously; to jog on; to march heavily on.

No man is secure, but night-walking heralds,
That trudge between the king and mistress Shore. Shakspeare.

No sooner was he fit to trudge,
But both made ready to dislodge. Hudibras.

Away they trudged together, and about midnight got to their journey's end. L'Estrange.

Once a poor rogue, 'tis true, I trod the street,
And trudg'd to Rome upon my naked feet:
Gold is the greatest god. Dryden, Juv.

He that will know the truth, must leave the beaten track, which none but servile minds trudge continually in. Locke.

TRUE. † adj. [treopa, trupa, Saxon; trewe, Germ. from the M. Goth. trawan, Icel. trua, confidere, fidere, credere. Serenius.]

1. Not false; not erroneous; agreeing with fact, or with the nature of things.

Of those he chose the falsest two,
And fittest for to forge true seeming lies. Spenser.

Teeth hadst thou in thy head when thou wast born,
And if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou cam'st into the world with thy legs forward. Shakspeare.

Hesperian fables true,
If true, here only. Milton, P. L.

What you said had not been true,
If spoke by any else but you. Cowley.

2. Not false; agreeing with our own thoughts.

3. Pure from the crime of falsehood; veracious.

A true witness delivereth souls. Prov. xiv. 25.
Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth. St. Matt. xxiii. 16.

4. Genuine; real; not counterfeit.

The darkness is past, and the true light now shineth.
1 John, ii. 8.

Among unequals what society
Can sort? What harmony or true delight? Milton, P. L.
Upbind the charms that in slight fables lie,
And teach that truth is truest poesy. Cowley.

Religion, as it is the most valuable thing in the world, so it gives the truest value to them who promote the practice of it by their example and authority. Atterbury.

5. Faithful; not perfidious; steady.

My revenge is now at Milford, would I had wings to follow it! come and be true. Shakspeare, Cymb.

So young and so untender?
— So young my lord, and true.
— Let it be so; thy truth then be thy dower. Shakspeare.

Do not see
My fair rose wither; yet look up; behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true love tears. Shakspeare.

I'll rather die
Deserted, than oblige thee with a fact
Pernicious to thy peace, chiefly assur'd
Remarkably so late of thy so true,
So faithful, love unequal'd. Milton, P. L.

The first great work
Is, that yourself may to yourself be true. Roscommon.
When this fire is kindled, both sides inflame it: all regard of merit is lost in persons employed, and these only chosen that are true to the party. Temple.

Smil'd Venus, to behold her own true knight
Obtain the conquest, though he lost the fight.
True to the king her principles are found;
Oh that her practice were but half so sound!
Stedfast in various turns of state she stood,
And seal'd her vow'd affection with her blood. Dryden.

The truest hearts for Voiture heav'd with sighs;
Voiture was wept by all the brightest eyes. Pope.

True to his charge the bard presery'd her long

In honour's limits, such the pow'r of song. Pope.

6. Honest; not fraudulent.

The thieves have bound the true man: now could thou and I rob the thieves and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

If king Edward be as true and just,
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up. Shakspeare.

7. Exact; conformable to a rule.

If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden, Dufremoy.

He drew
A circle regularly true. Prior.

Tickell's first book does not want its merit; but I was disappointed in my expectation of a translation nicely true to the original; whereas in those parts where the greatest exact-ness seems to be demanded, he has been the least careful. Arbutnot.

8. Rightful.

They seize the sceptre;
Then lose it to a stranger, that the true
Anointed King Messiah might be born
Barr'd of his right. Milton, P. L.

TRU'EBORN. adj. [true and born.] Having a right
by birth to any title.

Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman. Shakspeare.
Let him that is a trueborn gentleman,
And stands upon the honour of his birth,
From off this briar pluck a white rose with me. Shakspeare.

TRU'EBRED. adj. [true and bred.] Of a right breed.

Two of them I know to be as truebred cowards as ever turned back. Shakspeare.

Bauble do you call him? he's a substantial truebred beast, bravely forehanded. Dryden, Don Sebast.

TRUEHE'ARTED. adj. [true and heart.] Honest; faithful.

I have known no honester or truehearted man: fare thee well.
Shakspeare.

TRU'LOVE. † n. s.

1. An herb.

One-berrie, or herbe truelove, at the very top whereof cometh forth four leaves, directly set one against another, in manner of a Burgunnion cross, or a true love knot; for which cause among the ancients it hath been called herbe truelove.
Gerarde, Herbal, (1597), p. 328.

2. A sweetheart.

Should my truelove less than woman be,
She were scarce any thing. Donne, Poems, p. 52.

TRU'LOVEKNOT. } n. s. [true, love, and knot.]

TRU'LOVERSKNOT. } Lines drawn through each other with many involutions, considered as the emblem of interwoven affection.

I'll carve your name on barks of trees
With truelovcknots, and flourishes,
That shall infuse eternal spring. Hudibras.

TRU'ENESS. n. s. [from true.] Sincerity; faithfulness.

The even carriage between two factions proceedeth not always of moderation, but of a trueness to a man's self, with end to make use of both. Bacon, Essays.

TRU'EPENNY. n. s. [true and penny.] A familiar phrase for an honest fellow.

Say'st thou so? art thou there, truepenny?
Come on. Shakspeare.

TRU'FFLE. n. s. [truffle, truffe, French.] A subterraneous mushroom.

In Italy, the usual method for the finding of truffles, or subterraneous mushrooms, called by the Italians tartufali, and in Latin tubera terræ, is by tying a cord to the hind leg of a pig, and driving him, observing where he begins to root. Ray.

TRUG. n. s. A hod for mortar.

TRU'ISM.* n. s. [from true.] A self-evident and undeniable truth.

Truism occurs in Swift's Remarks on the Rights of the Christian Church, and in Bishop Berkeley's Alciphron.

Pegge, Anecd. of the Eng. Lang. 2d ed. p. 37.

TRULL.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson cites the Ital. trulla, after Lye, who assigns to it the meaning of "mulier sordida." But as our word at first had what Dr. Johnson calls a neutral sense, viz. that of girl or wench, it probably may be descended from the Teut. drollen, gesticulari, facetum et lætum se exhibere.]

1. A girl; a lass; a wench. Obsolete.

Among the rest of all the route

A passing proper lasse,

A white-hair'd trull of twenty years,

Or neere about there was :

In stature passing all the rest,

A gallant girl for hewe;

To be compar'd with townish nymphs,

So fair she was to viewe.

Turberville.

Be thy mirth scene;

Heard to each swaine, scene to each trull.

Wootton, in Engl. Helicon, (1600.)

Where Lady Love doth vant with garish grace,

Her daintie damsels, gallant girles, and gay,

Inticing trulles, &c.

Mir. for Mag. (1610,) p. 214.

2. A low whore; a vagrant strumpet.

I'm sure, I scar'd the dauphin and his trull.

Shakspeare.

A trull who sits

By the town wall, and for her living knits.

Dryden.

So Mævius, when he drain'd his skull,

To celebrate some suburb trull;

His similies in order set,

And ev'ry crambo he cou'd get;

Before he could his poem close,

The lovely nymph had lost her nose.

Swift.

TRU'LY. adv. [from true.]

1. According to truth; not falsely; faithfully; honestly.

They thought they might do it, not only willingly, because they loved him; and truly, because such indeed was the mind of the people; but safely, because she who ruled the king was agreed thereto.

Sidney.

No untruth can avail the patron long; for things most truly are most behoovefully spoken.

Hooker.

2. Really; without fallacy.

Wisdom alone is truly fair.

Milton.

Such as are efficaciously called, justified, and sanctified, while they live, are truly holy, and when they die, are perfectly holy.

Pearson.

3. Exactly; justly.

Right reason is nothing else but the mind of man judging of things truly, and as they are in themselves.

South.

4. Indeed: a slight affirmation, almost expletive.

I have not undertaken it out of any wanton pleasure in mine own pen; nor truly without often pondering with myself beforehand what censures I might incur.

Wotton.

TRUMP.† n. s. [trompe, Dutch, and old Fr. tromba, Italian. Serenius considers the word as formed from the sound.]

1. A trumpet; an instrument of warlike musick.

Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field.

Shakspeare.

Yet first to those ychain'd in sleep,

The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through the deep.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

I heard

The neighing coursers and the soldiers cry,
And sounding trumps that seem'd to tear the sky.

Dryden.

Beneath this tomb an infant lies,

To earth whose body lent,

Hereafter shall more glorious rise,

But not more innocent.

When the archangel's trump shall blow,

And souls to bodies join,

What crowds shall wish their lives below

Had been as short as thine.

Wesley.

2. [Corrupted from triumph: Latimer, in a Christmas sermon, exhibited a game at cards, and made the ace of hearts triumph. Fox. The Swedish trumpf is also the winning card.] A winning card; a card that has particular privileges in a game.

Him Basto follow'd, but his fate more hard,

Gain'd but one trump and one plebeian card.

Pope.

Now her heart with pleasure jumps,

She scarce remembers what is trumps.

Swift.

3. An old game at cards.

What, Diccon? come near, ye be no stranger:

We be fast set at trump, man, hard by the fire;

Thou shalt set on the king, if thou come a little nyer.

Com. of Gumm. Gurton's Needle, (1551.)

4. To put to or upon the TRUMPS. To put to the last expedient.

We are now put upon our last trump; the fox is earth'd, but

I shall send my two terriers in after him.

Dryden.

To TRUMP.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To win with a trump card.

2. To impose upon. [tromper, Fr. to cheat.]

Fortune—

When she is pleas'd to trick or tromp mankind.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

He who has sunk so far below himself, as to have debased the governing faculties of his soul, and given up his assent to an imperious domineering error, is fit for nothing but to be trumped and trampled upon, to be led by the nose.

South, Sermon. iv. 362.

3. To obtrude; to force; to obtrude fallaciously.

There is a sort of odd ill-natured men, whom neither hopes nor fears, frowns nor favours, can prevail upon to have any of the cast, beggarly, forlorn nieces or kinswomen of any lord or grandee, spiritual or temporal, trumped upon them.

South, Sermon. vi. 108.

Authors have been trumped upon us, interpolated and corrupted.

Leslie, Short Meth. with the Deists.

4. To TRUMP up. [from tromper, Fr. to cheat.] To devise; to forge.

If this book had been trumped up, every one would have said upon its first appearance, we never heard of it before.

Young on Idolatr. Corrupt. i. 61.

To TRUMP.* v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To blow a trumpet.

And the fifthe angel trumpide.

2. To play a trump card; to interpose as with a trump card; to be an impediment.

The envy of some powerfull corival trumps in thy way, and holds thee off from thine already swallowed honour.

Bp. Hall, Seasonable Sermon. p. 31.

For all their setting their cards, and playing their games to their own advantages of getting much for themselves and friends, there was one knave in the pack would cosen their designs, and trump in their way, if he might not share with them in their winning.

Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, p. 53.

TRUMP'ERY. n. s. [tromperie, French, a cheat.]

1. Something fallaciously splendid; something of less value than it seems.

The trump'ery in my house bring hither,

For state to catch these thieves.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

2. Falsehood; empty talk.

Breaking into parts the story of the creation, and delivering it over in a mystical sense, wrapping it up mixed with other their own trump'ery, they have sought to obscure the truth thereof.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

3. Something of no value; trifles.

Embrios and idiots, eremits and friars,
White, black, and grey, with all their trumpery. Milton, P. L.
Another cavity of the head was stuffed with billetedoux, pricked dances, and other trumpery of the same nature.

Addison.

TRUMPET. n. s. [trompette, Fr. and Dutch.]

1. An instrument of martial musick sounded by the breath.

What's the business?

That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley

The sleepers of the house.

Shakspeare.

If any man of quality will maintain upon Edmund earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear by the third sound of the trumpet.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

As disperst souldiers at the trumpet's call,
Haste to their colours all.

Cowley.

He blew

His trumpet, heard in Ore since perhaps
When God descended, and perhaps once more
To sound at general doom. The angelick blast Filled all the regions.

Milton, P. L.

The last loud trumpet's wonderous sound
Shall through the rending tombs rebound,
And wake the nations under ground.

Roscommon.

Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold,
But they move more in lofty numbers told;
By the loud trumpet which our courage aids,
We learn that sound, as well as sense, persuades.

Waller.

The trumpet's loud clangor

Excites us to arms,

With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms.

Dryden.

Every man is the maker of his own fortune, and must be in some measure the trumpet of his fame.

Tatler.

Let the loud trumpet sound,

Till the roofs all around

The shrill echoes rebound.

Pope.

2. In military style, a trumpeter.

He wisely desired, that a trumpet might be first sent for a pass.

Clarendon.

Among our forefathers, the enemy, when there was a king in the field, demanded by a trumpet in what part he resided, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavilion.

Addison.

3. One who celebrates; one who praises.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy.

Bacon.

That great politician was pleased to have the greatest wit of those times in his interests, and to be the trumpet of his praises.

Dryden.

To TRUMPET. v. a. [trompetter, Fr. from the noun.]

To publish by sound of trumpet; to proclaim.

That I did love the Moor to live with him,

My downright violence to form my fortunes

May trumpet to the world.

Shakspeare, Othello.

Why so tart a favour

To trumpet such good tidings?

Shakspeare.

They went with sound of trumpet, for they did nothing but publish and trumpet all the reproaches they could devise against the Irish.

Bacon, War with Spain.

TRUMPETER. n. s. [from trumpet.]

1. One who sounds a trumpet.

Trumpeters,

With brazen din blast you the city's ear,

Make mingle with our rattling tabourines.

Shakspeare.

As they returned, a herald and trumpeter from the Scots overtook them.

Hayward.

Their men lie securely intrench'd in a cloud,

And a trumpeter hornet to battle sounds loud.

Dryden.

An army of trumpeters would give as great a strength as this confederacy of tongue warriors, who, like those military musicians, content themselves with animating their friends to battle.

Addison, Freeholder.

2. One who proclaims, publishes, or denounces.

Where there is an opinion to be created of virtue or greatness, these men are good trumpeters.

Bacon, Ess.

How came so many thousands to fight, and die in the same rebellion? why were they deceived into it by those spiritual trumpeters, who followed them with continual alarms of damnation if they did not venture life, fortune, and all, in that which those impostors called the cause of God.

South.

3. [scolopex.] A fish.

Ainsworth.

TRUMPET-FLOWER. n. s. [bignonia.] A tubulous flower.

Miller.

TRUMPET-TONGUED. adj. [trumpet and tongue.] Having a tongue vociferous as a trumpet.

This Duncan's virtues

Will plead, like angels, trumpet-tongu'd against

The deep damnation of his taking off.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

TRUMPLIKE. adj. Resembling a trumpet.

A breast of brasse, a voyce

Infraet and trumplike.

Chapman.

To TRUNCATE.† v. a. [trunco, Lat.] To maim; to lop; to cut short. Truncated is an heraldick word applied to trees.

These feathers are neither gradually lessened towards their extremities, nor rounded; which are the usual terminations of the feathers in most birds; but they appear as if cut off transversely towards their ends with scissars. This is a mode of termination, which, in the language of Natural History, is called truncated.

Dr. Shaw, Museum Leverianum.

TRUNCA'TION.† n. s. [from truncate.] The act of lopping or maiming.

Decreasing judgment of death or truncation of members.

Prynne, Huntley's Breviate, &c. (1637), p. 48.

Some pieces delineating singular inhumanities in tortures; the living truncation of the Turks, &c.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 204.

TRUNCHEON. n. s. [tronçon, Fr.]

1. A short staff; a club; a cudgel.

With his truncheon he so rudely stroke

Cymocles twice, that twice him forc'd his foot revoke.

Spenser.

Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;

Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;

Thy leg is a stick compared with this truncheon.

Shakspeare.

The English slew divers of them with plummets of lead tied to a truncheon or staff by a cord.

Hayward.

One with a broken truncheon deals his blows.

Dryden.

2. A staff of command.

The hand of Mars

Beckon'd with fiery truncheon my retire.

Shakspeare.

No ceremony that to great ones 'longs,

The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,

Become them with one half so good a grace,

As mercy does.

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

To TRUNCHEON. v. a. [from the noun.] To beat with a truncheon.

Captain, thou abominable cheater! If captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out of taking their names upon you before you earn'd them.

Shakspeare.

TRUNCHEONE'ER. n. s. [from truncheon.] One armed with a truncheon.

I mist the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out, chibs! when I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

To TRUNDLE. v. n. [trondeler, Picard French; trēnbl, a bowl, Saxon.] To roll; to bowl along.

In the four first it is heaved up by several spondees intermixed with proper breathing places, and at last trundles down in a continued line of dactyls.

Addison, Spect.

To TRUNDLE.* v. a. To bowl; to roll.

Like to the golden tripod it did pass,

From this to this, till 't came to whose it was;

Cæsar to Gallus trundled it, and he

To Maro.

Lovelace, Luc. Poeth. (1659), p. 82.

TRU'NDLE.† n. s. [tʁenbl, Saxon; and trendyl, old Engl. trochlea, Prompt. Parv. afterwards trindell, or trindle.] Any round rolling thing.

Whether they have not removed — all images, candelsticks, trindels or rolles of wax. Abp. Cranmer's Articles of Visitation.

TRU'NDLEBED.* See TRUCKLEBED.

TRU'NDLE-TAIL.† n. s. Round-tail; a kind of dog.

Dunghill dogs, trindle-tails. The Boke of Huntynge.

Avant you curs!

Hound or spaniel, brach or lym,

Or hobtail tike, or trundle-tail. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

TRUNK. n. s. [truncus, Lat. tronc, Fr.]

1. The body of a tree.

He was

The ivy, which had hid my princely trunk,
And suckt my verdure out on't. Shakspeare.

About the mossy trunk I wound me soon;
For high from ground the branches would require Thy utmost reach. Milton, P. L.

Creeeping 'twixt 'em all, the mantling vine
Does round their trunks her purple clusters twine. Dryden.
Some of the largest trees have seeds no bigger than some diminutive plants, and yet every seed is a perfect plant with a trunk, branches, and leaves, inclosed in a shell. Bentley.

2. The body without the limbs of an animal.

The charm and venom which they drunk,
Their blood with secret filth infected hath,
Being diffused through the senseless trunk. Spenser.

Thou bring'st me happiness and peace, son John;
But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown
From this bare, wither'd trunk. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

3. The main body of any thing.

The large trunks of the veins discharge the reflux blood into the next adjacent trunk, and so on to the heart. Ray.

4. [tronc, French.] A chest for clothes; sometimes a small chest commonly lined with paper.

Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places. Shakspeare.

Some odd fantastick lord would fain
Carry in trunks, and all my drudgery do. Dryden.

Where a young man learned to dance, there happened to stand an old trunk in the room, the idea of which had so mixed itself with the turns of all his dances, that, though he could dance excellently well, yet it was only whilst that trunk was there; nor could he perform well in any other place, unless that, or some such other trunk, had its due position in the room. Locke.

Your poem sunk,
And sent in quires to line a trunk:
If still you be dispos'd to rhyme,
Go try your hand a second time. Swift.

5. The proboscis of an elephant, or other animal.

Leviathan that at his gills

Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milton, P. L.

When elephant 'gainst elephant did rear
His trunk, and castles jostled in the air,
My sword thy way to victory had shown. Dryden.

6. A long tube through which pellets of clay are blown.

In rolls of parchment trunks, the mouth being laid to the one end and the ear to the other, the sound is heard much farther than in the open air. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In a shooting trunk, the longer it is to a certain limit, the swifter and more forcibly the air drives the pellet. Ray.

To TRUNK. v. a. [trunco, Lat.] To truncate; to maim; to lop. Obsolete.

Large streams of blood out of the trunked stock
Forth gush'd, like water streams from riven rock. Spenser.

TRU'NKED. adj. [from trunk.] Having a trunk.

She is thick set with strong and well trunked trees. Howell.

TRUNK-HOSE. n. s. [trunk and hose.] Large breeches formerly worn.

The short trunk-hose shall show thy foot and knee
Licentious, and to common eye-sight free;

And with a bolder stride, and looser air,
Mingled with men, a man thou must appear. Prior.

TRU'NNIONS. n. s. [trognons, Fr.] The knobs or bunchings of a gun, that bear it on the cheeks of a carriage. Bailey.

TRU'SION. n. s. [trudo, Lat.] The act of thrusting or pushing.

By attraction we do not understand drawing, pumping, sucking, which is really pulsion and trusion. Bentley.

TRUSS. n. s. [trousse, Fr.]

1. A bandage by which ruptures are restrained from lapsing.

A hernia would succeed, and the patient be put to the trouble of wearing a truss. Wiseman, Surgery.

2. Bundle; any thing thrust close together.

All as a poor pedler he did wend,
Bearing a truss of trifles at his back,
As belles and babies, and glasses in his pack. Spenser.

The rebels first won the plain at the hill's foot by assault, and then the even ground on the top, by carrying up great trusses of hay before them, to dead their shot. Carew.

An ass was wishing for a mouthful of fresh grass to knap upon, in exchange for a heartless truss of straw. L'Estrange.

The fair one devoured a truss of sallet, and drunk a full bottle to her share. Addison, Spect.

3. Trousse; breeches. Obsolete.

To TRUSS. v. a. [trousser, Fr.] To pack up close together.

What in most English writers useth to be loose and untight, in this author, is well grounded, finely framed, and strongly trussed up together. Spenser.

Some of them send the Scriptures before, truss up bag and baggage, make themselves in a readiness, that they may fly from city to city. Hooker.

You might have trussed him and all his apparel into an eel-skin. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

TRUST. n. s. [traust, Runick.]

1. Confidence; reliance on another.

What a fool is honesty! and trust, his sworn brother, a very simple gentleman. Shakspeare.

My misfortunes may be of use to credulous maids, never to put too much trust in deceitful men. Swift.

2. Charge received in confidence.

Expect no more from servants than is just,
Reward them well if they observe their trust. Denham.

In my wretched case 'twill be more just
Not to have promis'd, than deceive your trust. Dryden.
Those servants may be called to an account who have broken their trust. Davenant.

3. Confident opinion of any event.

His trust was with the Eternal to be deemed Equal in strength. Milton, P. L.

4. Credit given without examination.

Most take things upon trust, and misemploy their assent by lazily enslaving their minds to the dictates of others. Locke.

5. Credit on promise of payment.

Ev'n such is time, who takes on trust
Our youth, our joys, our all we have,
And pays us but with age and dust. Raleigh.

6. Something committed to one's faith.

They cannot see all with their own eyes; they must commit many great trusts to their ministers. Bacon.

Thou the sooner
Temptation found'st, or over potent charms,
To violate the sacred trust of silence
Deposited within thee. Milton, S. A.

Our taking of a trust doth not engage us to disobey our Lord, or do any evil thing. Kettlewell.

7. Deposit; something committed to charge, of which an account must be given.

Although the advantages one man possesseth more than another, may be called his property with respect to other men, yet with respect to God they are only a trust. Swift.

T R U

8. Confidence in supposed honesty.

Behold, I commit my daughter unto thee of special trust ;
wherefore do not entreat her evil. Tob. x. 12.

9. State of him to whom something is entrusted.

I serve him truly, that will put me in trust.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Being transplanted out of his cold barren diocese he was left in that great trust with the king. Clarendon.

To TRUST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place confidence in; to confide in.

I'd be torn in pieces ere I'd trust a woman
With wind. B. Jonson.

2. To believe; to credit.

Give me your hand: trust me you look well. Shakspeare.

3. To admit in confidence to the power over any thing.

When you lie down, with a short prayer commit yourself into the hands of your faithful Creator; and when you have done, trust him with yourself as you must do when you are dying. Bp. Taylor.

4. To commit with confidence.

Give me good fame, ye pow'rs, and make me just,
This much the rogue to publick ears will trust :
In private then: — When wilt thou, mighty Jove,
My wealthy uncle from this world remove? Dryden.
Whom with your power and fortune, Sir, you trust,
Now to suspect is vain. Dryden.

5. To venture confidently.

Fool'd by thee to trust thee from my side. Milton, P. L.

6. To sell upon credit.

To TRUST. v. n.

1. To be confident of something future.

I trust to come unto you, and speak face to face. 2 John.
From this grave, this dust,
My God shall raise me up I trust. Raleigh.
Whom I trusted to be my friend, all I had was in his power, and by God's blessing I was never deceived in my trust. Fell.

2. To have confidence; to rely; to depend without doubt.

The isles shall wait upon me, and on mine arm shall they trust. Isa. li. 5.
The Lord is a buckler to all that trust in him. 2 Sam. xxii.
Sin never shall hurt them more who rightly trust
In this his satisfaction. Milton, P. L.

3. To be credulous; to be won to confidence.

Well you may fear too far — Safer than trust too far. Shakspeare.

4. To expect.

The simplicity of the goat shews us what an honest man is to trust to that keeps a knave company. L' Estrange.

TRUST'E. n. s. [from trust.]

1. One entrusted with any thing.

Having made choice of such a confessor that you may trust your soul with, sincerely open your heart to him, and look upon him only as he is a trustee from God, commissioned by him as his ministerial deputy, to hear, judge, and absolve you.
Bp. Taylor, Guide to a Penitent.

2. One to whom something is committed for the use and behoof of another.

You are not the trustees of the publick liberty: and if you have not right to petition in a crowd, much less to intermeddle in the management of affairs. Dryden.

TRU'STER. n. s. [from trust.] One who trusts.

Nor shall you do mine ear that violence,
To make it truster of your own report
Against yourself. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

TRU'STILY. * adv. [from trusty.] Honestly; faithfully; with fidelity.

He did trustily in the name of Jesu. Wicliffe, Acts, ix. 29.
Thus having her restored trustily
As he had vow'd, some small continuance
He there did make. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 19.

T R U

TRU'STINESS. n. s. [from trust.] Honesty; fidelity; faithfulness.

If the good qualities which lie dispersed among other creatures, innocence in a sheep, trustiness in a dog, are singly so commendable, how excellent is the mind, which ennobles them into virtues! Grew, Cosmoh.

TRU'STLESS. † adj. [from trust.] Unfaithful; uncon- stant; not to be trusted. A word elegant, but out of use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Spenser. But I doubt its being obsolete.

I beheld this fickle trustless state,
Of vain world's glory, flirting to and fro. Spenser.
The trustless wings of false desire. Shakspeare, Ven. and Ad.
Some clime aloft by trustlesse treacherie. Mir. for Mag. p. 204.

TRU'STY. adj. [from trust.]

1. Honest; faithful; true; fit to be trusted.

This dastard, at the battle of Poitiers,
Before we met, or that a stroke was given,
Like to a trusty squire, did run away. Shakspeare.
This trusty servant

Shall pass between us. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
He removeth away the speech of the trusty, and taketh away
the understanding of the aged. Job, xii. 26.
Guyomar his trusty slave has sent. Dryden, Ind. Emp.
These prodigious treasures, which flowed in to him, he buried under ground by the hands of his most trusty slaves. Addison.

2. Strong; stout; such as will not fail.

When he saw no power might prevail,
His trusty sword he called to his aid. Spenser.
The neighing steeds are to the chariot ty'd,
The trusty weapon sits on ev'ry side. Dryden, Æn.

TRUTH. † n. s. [τρεωπδε, Sax. veracitas, fides data, foedus; triggwo, M. Goth. pactum, foedus; trugth, Cimbr. fides; trigd, Icel. fidelitas. Hence we find in our old language trougthe for truth, as in Huloet's Dict. Junius, Wachter, and Serenius, have referred these substantives to the verbs trawan,
M. Goth. tro, Su. Goth. trua, Icel. treopian, Sax.
to trust; to believe. After them, at a long interval,
Mr. Horne Tooke appears, deducing truth from trawan or treopian; saying that "it is the third person singular of the indicative trow, and was formerly written troweth, trowth, trouth, and troth; and means (aliquid, any thing, something,) that which one troweth, i. e. thinketh, or firmly believeth."
Div. of Purl. ii. 408. — Truth, so defined by Mr. Tooke, seems to accord with what a "corrupt politician" of old is made to say of it in a celebrated Discourse by Warburton: "You tell me, says he, [meaning Pilate,] of truth; a word in the mouth of every sectary, who all agree to give that name to their own opinions!" Mr. Tooke's opinions are therefore tendered in some paradoxical assertions respecting truth; which lead, however, only to wretched conclusions, and cause us to execrate etymology employed in aid of the most reprehensible purposes. Nor can we much admire the complacent irony, with which a puny follower of Mr. Tooke has informed us, that Dr. Johnson has defined "truth as the contrary to falsehood, with seven or eight other explanations equally good!" The critick should have better explained either moral or physical truth by qualities and circumstances, before he heedlessly pronounced what he had so idly "trowed or thought."]

1. The contrary to falsehood; conformity of notions to things.

TRY

All truths are equal, veritas non recipit magis ac minus.

Wilkins.

That men are pubescent at the year of twice seven is accounted a punctual truth.

Brown.

Persuasive words, impregn'd
With reason to her seeming and with truth. Milton, P. L.
This clue leads them through the mizmaze of opinions and authors to truth and certainty. Locke.

2. Conformity of words to thoughts.

Shall truth fail to keep her word? Milton.

Truth is the joining or separating of signs, as the things signified agree or disagree. Locke.

3. Purity from falsehood.

So young and true.

 nostra tuft."] ]

1. A number of threads or ribbands, flowery leaves, or any small bodies joined together.

Upon sweet brier, a fine tuft or brush of moss of divers colours, you shall ever find full of white worms. Bacon.

It is notorious for its goatish smell, and tufts not unlike the beard of that animal. More against Atheism.

A tuft of daisies on a flowery lea. Dryden.

Near a living stream their mansion place

Edg'd round with moss and tufts of matted grass. Dryden.

The male among birds often appears in a crest, comb, a tuft of feathers, or a natural little plume, erected like a pinnacle on the top of the head. Addison, Spect.

2. A cluster; a plump.

Going a little aside into the wood, where many times before she delighted to walk, her eyes were saluted with a tuft of trees so close set together, as with the shade the moon gave through it, it might breed a fearful kind of devotion to look upon it. Sidney.

My house is at the tuft of olives hard by. Shakspeare.

An island lie

Girt with th' unmeasur'd sea; and is so nie,
 That in the midst I saw the smoke arise,
 Through tufts of trees. Chapman.

With high woods the hills were crown'd;
 With tufts the valleys, and each fountain side,
 With borders long the rivers. Milton, P. L.

Under a tuft of shade, that on a green
 Stood whispering soft, by a fresh fountain side
 They sat them down. Milton, P. L.

To TUFT.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To separate into tufts, or little clusters. This seems to be the meaning. But it is not noticed in Dr. Johnson's or other dictionaries.

TUG

- The labouring hunter tufts the thicke unbarbed grounds,
Where harbor'd is the hart. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.
2. To adorn with a tuft. In use at least a century before Thomson's time. Sherwood.

Sit beneath the shade

Thrown graceful round. Thomson, Spring.

TUFTED.† adj. [from tuft.] Growing in tufts or clusters.

There does a sable cloud
Turn forth her silver lining on the night,
And cast a gleam over this tufted grove. Milton, Comus.

Towers and battlements it sees,
Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies
The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton, L'All.

Light and useless are the tufted feathers upon the cane;
every wind can play with it, and abuse it. Bp. Taylor, Sermon. 14.

'Midst the desert fruitful fields arise,
That crown'd with tufted trees and springing corn,
Like verdant isles the sable waste adorn. Pope.

TUFTY.† adj. [from tuft.] Adorned with tufts;
growing in tufts.

The Sylvans that about the neighbouring woods did dwell,
Both in the tufty frith and in the mossy fell.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 17.

Where tufty daisies nod at every gale.

Let me strip thee of thy tufty coat,
Spread thy ambrosial stores. Thomson, Summer.

TO TUG. v. a. [tuigan, teogan, Saxon.]

1. To pull with strength long continued in the utmost exertion; to draw.

No more tug one another thus, nor moil yourselves;
receive

Prise equal; conquests crown ye both: the lists to others leave. Chapman, Iliad.

These two massy pillars
With horrible confusion to and fro
He tugg'd, he shook, till down they came, and drew
Upon the heads of all that sat beneath,
The whole roof after them, with burst of thunder. Milton, S. A.

Take pains the genuine meaning to explore,
There sweat, there strain, tug the laborious oar. Roscommon.

2. To pull; to pluck.

Priest, beware thy beard;
I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
There leaving him to his repose
Secured from the pursuit of foes,
And wanting nothing but a song,
And a well tun'd theorbos hung
Upon a bough, to ease the pain
His tugg'd ears suffer'd, with a strain. Hudibras.

TO TUG. v. n.

1. To pull; to draw.

The meaner sort will tug lustily at one oar. Sandys.
There is tugging and pulling this way and that way. More.
Thus galley-slaves tug willing at their oar,
Content to work in prospect of the shore;
But would not work at all, if not constrain'd before. Dryden.

We have been tugging a great while against the stream, and have almost weathered our point; a stretch or two more will do the work; but if instead of that we slacken our arms, and drop our oars, we shall be hurried back to the place from whence we set out. Addison on the War.

2. To labour; to contend; to struggle.

Cast your good counsels
Upon his passion; let myself and fortune
Tug for the time to come. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.
His face is black and full of blood,
His hands abroad display'd, as one that graspt
And tugg'd for life. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
They long wrestled and strenuously tugg'd for their liberty, with a no less magnanimous than constant pertinacity. Howe.

TUM

Go now, with some daring drug
Bait thy disease, and while they tug,
Thou to maintain the cruel strife,
Spend the dear treasure of thy life. Crashaw.

TUG. n. s. [from the verb.] Pull performed with the utmost effort.

Downward by the feet he drew
The trembling dastard: at the tug he falls,
Vast ruins come along, rent from the smoking walls. Dryden.

TUGGER.† n. s. [from tug.] One that tugs or pulls hard. Sherwood.

TUGGINGLY.* adv. [from To tug.] With difficulty.
Bailey.

TUITION.† n. s. [tuition, old French; tuitio, from tueor, Lat.] Guardianship; superintendent care;
care of a guardian or tutor.

A folly for a man of wisdom to put himself under the tuition of a beast. Sidney.

They forcibly endeavour to cast the churches, under my care and tuition, into the moulds they have fashioned to their designs. King Charles.

If government depends upon religion, this shews the pestilential design of those that attempt to disjoin the civil and ecclesiastical interests, setting the latter wholly out of the tuition of the former. South, Sermon.

When so much true life is put into them, freely talk with them about what most delights them, that they may perceive that those under whose tuition they are, are not enemies to their satisfaction. Locke.

TU'LIP. n. s. [tulipe, Fr. tulipa, Lat.] A flower.

The properties of a good tulip are, 1. It should have a tall stem. 2. The flower should consist of six leaves, three within, and three without, the former being larger than the latter. 3. Their bottom should be proportioned to their top; their upper part should be rounded off, and not terminate in a point. 4. The leaves when opened should neither turn inward nor bend outward, but rather stand erect; the flower should be of a middling size, neither over large nor too small. 5. The stripes should be small and regular, arising quite from the bottom of the flower. The chives should not be yellow, but of a brown colour. They are generally divided into three classes, viz. præcoces, or early flowers; medias, or middling flowers; and serotines, or late flowers. The early blowing tulips are not near so fair, nor rise half so high as the late ones, but are chiefly valued for appearing so early in the spring. Miller.

The tulip opens with the rising, and shuts with the setting sun. Hakewill.

Why tulips of one colour produce some of another, and running thro' all, still escape a blue. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TU'LIP TREE.† n. s. A tree. Dr. Johnson.—It grows in North America, and was called tulipifera, because the shape of its flowers in some degree resemble a tulip. Mason.

The tuliptree, that bears its flowers aloft. Anonymous.

TO TU'MBLE.† v. n. [tomber, Fr. tommelen, Dutch;
tombolare, Ital. tumbian, Saxon; tumla, Swedish;
tummeln, Germ. Wachter refers the word to the old Germ. dumen, verttere, circumagere.]

1. To fall; to come suddenly and violently to the ground.

Though the treasure
Of nature's germins tumble all together,
Answer me. Shakespeare.

To stand or walk, to rise or tumble,
As matter and as motion jumble. Prior.

T U M

Sisyphus lifts his stone up the hill; which carried to the top, it immediately tumbles to the bottom. Addison.

2. To fall in great quantities tumultuously.
When riches come by the course of inheritance and testaments, they come tumbling upon a man. Bacon.

3. To roll about.
I saw at the bottom of one tree a gentleman bound with many garters hand and foot, so as well he might tumble and toss. Sidney.

Glo'ster stumbled, and in falling struck me
Into the tumbling billows of the main. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

4. To play tricks by various librations of the body.
Reform our sense, and teach the men t'obey;
They'll leave their tumbling, if you lead the way. Rowe.

To TUMBLE. v. a.

1. To turn over; to throw about by way of examination.

When it came to the ears of Maximilian, and tumbling it over and over in his thoughts, that he should at one blow be defeated of the marriage of his daughter and his own, he lost all patience. Bacon, Hen. VII.

A man by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new fermentation, which works them into a finer body. Collier on Pride.

They tumbled all their little quivers o'er,
To chuse propitious shafts. Prior.

2. To throw by chance or violence.
The mind often sets itself on work in search of some hidden ideas; though sometimes they are roused and tumbled out of their dark cells into open day-light by some turbulent passions. Locke.

3. To throw down.
Wilt thou still be hammering treachery,
To tumble down thy husband and thyself,
From top of honour to disgrace's feet?
King Lycurgus, while he fought in vain,
His friends to free, was tumbled on the plain. Dryden.
If a greater force than his holds him fast, or tumbles him down, he is no longer free. Locke.

TUMBLE. n. s. [from the verb.] A fall.

A country-fellow got an unlucky tumble from a tree: why, says a passenger, I could have taught you a way to climb, and never hurt yourself with a fall. L'Estrange.

TUMBLER.† n. s. [from tumble.]

1. One who shews postures by various contortions of body, or feats of activity.

What strange agility and activeness do common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to by exercise? Wilkins.

Nic. bounced up with a spring equal to that of the nimblest tumblers or rope-dancers. Arbutnot.

Never by tumbler thro' the hoops was shown,
Such skill in passing all, and touching none. Pope.

2. A large drinking glass.
3. A particular species of pigeon.
4. A sort of dog.

The tumbler and lurcher ought to be reckoned by themselves. Swan, Spec. Mundi, ch. 9. § 1.

TUMBREL.† n. s. [tumerel, old Fr. tombereau, modern.] A dungcart.

Twifallow once ended, get tumbrel and man,
And compass that fallow as soon as ye can. Tusser.

My corps is in a tumbrel laid, among
The filth and ordure, and inclos'd with dung;
That cart arrest, and raise a common cry,
For sacred hunger of my gold I die. Dryden.

What shall I do with this beastly tumbrel? go lie down and sleep, you sot. Congreve.

He sometimes rode in an open tumbrel. Tatler.

TUMEFAC'TION. n. s. [tumefactio, Lat.] Swelling.

The common signs and effects of weak fibres, are paleness, a weak pulse, tumefactions in the whole body. Arbutnot.

To TUMEFY. v. a. [tumefacio, Lat.] To swell; to make to swell.

T U M

I applied three small causticks triangular about the tumified joint. Wiseman, Surgery.

A consumption actually begun is when some parts of the lungs are knotted and tumefied. Blackmore.

A fleshy excrescence, exceeding hard and tumefied, supposed to demand extirpation. Sharp, Surgery.

TU'MID. adj. [tumidus, Lat.]

1. Swelling; puffed up.
2. Protuberant; raised above the level.
So high as heav'd the tumid hills, so low
Down sunk a hollow bottom broad and deep,
Capacious bed of waters. Milton, P. L.
3. Pompous; boastful; puffy; falsely sublime.
Though such expressions may seem tumid and aspiring; yet cannot I scruple to use seeming hyperboles in mentioning felicities, which make the highest hyperboles but seeming ones. Boyle.

TU'MOROUS. adj. [from tumour.]

1. Swelling; protuberant.
Who ever saw any cypress or pine, small below and above, and tumorous in the middle, unless some diseased plant? Wotton.
2. Fastuous; vainly pompous; falsely magnificent.
According to their subject, these stiles vary; for that which is high and lofty, declaring excellent matter, becomes vast and tumorous, speaking of petty and inferior things. B. Jonson.
His limbs were rather sturdy than dainty, sublime and almost tumorous in his looks and gestures. Wotton.

TU'MOUR.† n. s. [tumor, Lat.]

1. A morbid swelling.
Tumour is a disease, in which the parts recede from their natural state by an undue increase of their bigness. Wiseman.

Having dissected this swelling vice, and seen what it is that feeds the tumour, if the disease be founded in pride, the abating that is the most natural remedy. Gov. of the Tongue.

The formation of knots and tumours in any part of the body, external or internal, that degenerate at length into an ulcer, arises from this, that some parts of the blood becoming by their size or figure disproportioned to the small winding channels of the glands, cannot freely slip through. Blackmore.

2. A swell or rise of water.
One tumour drown'd another, billows strove
To outswell ambition, water air outdrove. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

3. Affected pomp; false magnificence; puffy grandeur; swelling mien; unsubstantial greatness.
His stile was rich of phrase, but seldom in bold metaphors; and so far from the tumour, that it rather wants a little elevation. Wotton.
It is not the power of tumour and bold looks upon the passions of the multitude. L'Estrange.

TU'MOURED.* adj. [from tumour.] Distended; swollen; puffed up.

You shall see a man look like the four winds in painting, as if he would blow away the enemy; and yet, at the very first onset, suffer fear and trembling to dress themselves in his face apparently! And commonly where is least heart, there is most tongue. And lightly if we note such an one, he seldom unbuttons his tumored breast, but when he finds none to oppose the bigness of his looks and tongue! Junius, Sin Stigm. (1639.) p. 50.

TUMP.* n. s. [perhaps a corruption of umbo, Latin.] The knoll of a hill. Ainsworth.

To TUMP.† v. a. [from the noun.] Among gardeners, to fence trees about with earth.

To TUMULATE. v. n. [tumulo, Lat.] To swell. This seems to be the sense here, but I suspect the word to be wrong.

Urinous spirits, or volatile alkalies, are such enemies to acid, that as soon as they are put together, they tumulate and grow hot, and continue to fight till they have disarmed or mortified each other. Boyle.

- TU'MULOSE. adj. [tumulosus, Latin.] Full of hills.
Bailey.
- TUMULO'SITY. n. s. [tumulus, Latin.] Hilliness.
Bailey.
- TU'MULT. n. s. [tumulte, Fr. tumultus, Lat.]
1. A promiscuous commotion in a multitude.
A tumult is improved into a rebellion, and a government overturned by it. L'Estrange.
With ireful taunts each other they oppose,
Till in loud tumult all the Greeks arose. Pope.
  2. A multitude put into wild commotion.
  3. A stir; an irregular violence; a wild commotion.
What stir is this? what tumults in the heav'n's?
Whence cometh this alarm and this noise? Shakspeare.
Tumult and confusion all embroil'd. Milton, P. L.
This piece of poetry, what can be nobler than the idea it gives us of the Supreme Being thus raising a tumult among the elements, and recovering them out of their confusion; thus troubling and becalming nature? Addison, Spect.
- To TU'MULT.* v. n. [from the noun.] To make a tumult; to be in wild commotion.
They who attended them without, tumulting at the death of their masters, were beaten back. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 6.
Why do the Gentiles tumult, and the nations
Muse a vain thing? Milton, Ps.
- TU'MULTER.* n. s. [from tumult.] One who makes a tumult; a rioter.
The governour found it a work so difficult to appease them, that once in a mutiny he was left for dead among many slain; and though afterwards he severely punished the tumulters, was fain at length to seek a dismission from his charge.
Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.
- TUMU'LTUARIALLY.† adv. [from tumultuary.] In a tumultuary manner.
Divers thousands of the Jews tumultuarily resisted.
Sandys, Chr. Passion, Notes, (1640.) p. 95.
- TUMU'LTUARINESS. n. s. [from tumultuary.] Turbulence; inclination or disposition to tumults or commotions.
The tumultuarity of the people, or the factiousness of presbyters, gave occasion to invent new models. King Charles.
- TUMU'LTUARY. adj. [tumultuaire, Fr. from tumult.]
1. Disorderly; promiscuous; confused.
Perkin had learned, that people under command used to consult, and after to march in order, and rebels contrariwise; and observing their orderly, and not tumultuary arming, doubted the worst. Bacon, Hen. VII.
My followers were at that time no way proportionable to hazard a tumultuary conflict. King Charles.
Is it likely that the divided atoms should keep the same ranks in such a variety of tumultuary agitations in that liquid medium? Glanville, Scepiss.
  2. Restless; put into irregular commotion.
Men who live without religion, live always in a tumultuary and restless state. Atterbury.
- To TUMU'LTUATE.† v. n. [tumultuor, Lat.] To make a tumult; to rage.
Like an opposed torrent, it tumultuates, grows higher and higher. South, Serm. viii. 198.
These being mere productions and improvements of matter, are they that tumultuate within our breast; and, being disposed to excess, excite us to rebel against all the rules of goodness, &c. Ld. North, Light, &c. (1682.) p. 124.
- TUMULTUA'TION. n. s. [from tumultuate.] Irregular and confused agitation.
That in the sound the contiguous air receives many strokes from the particles of the liquor, seems probable by the sudden and eager tumultuation of its parts. Boyle.
- TUMU'LTUOUS. adj. [from tumult; tumultueux, Fr.]
1. Violently carried on by disorderly multitudes.
Many civil broils, and tumultuous rebellions, they fairly overcame, by reason of the continual presence of their king, whose only person oftentimes contains the unruly people from a thousand evil occasions. Spenser on Ireland.

T U N

2. Put into violent commotion; irregularly and confusedly agitated.
The strong rebuff of some tumultuous cloud
His dire attempt; which nigh the birth
Now rolling, boils in his tumultuous breast,
And like a devilish engine back recoils
Upon himself. Milton, P. L.
The vital blood, that had forsook my heart,
Returns again in such tumultuous tides,
It quite o'ercomes me. Addison, Cato.
  3. Turbulent; violent.
Nought rests for me in this tumultuous strife,
But to make open proclamation. Shakspeare.
Furiously running in upon him with tumultuous speech, he violently raught from his head his rich cap of sables. Knolles.
  4. Full of tumults.
The winds began to speak louder, and as in a tumultuous kingdom, to think themselves fittest instruments of commandment. Sidney.
- TUMU'LTUOUSLY. adv. [from tumultuous.] By act of the multitude; with confusion and violence.
It was done by edict, not tumultuously; the sword was not put into the people's hand. Bacon, Holy War.
- TUMU'LTUOUSNESS.* n. s. [from tumultuous.] State of being tumultuous.
Keep down this boiling and tumultuousness of the soul.
Hammond, Works, iv. 814.
- TUN.† n. s. [tunne, Saxon; tonne, Dutch; tonne, tonneau, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — It is the past participle of the Sax. tynan, to inclose; though now usually applied to an inclosure for fluids. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 203. — Others deduce it from the Lat. tina, or tyna, a large wooden cask for holding wines; which Varro uses. But Mr. Tooke, very unjustly I conceive, pretends that this Latin word is from the Saxon.]
1. A large cask.
As when a spark
Lights on a heap of powder, laid
Fit for the tun, some magazine to store
Against a rumour'd war. Milton, P. L.
  2. The measure of four hogsheads.
  3. Any large quantity proverbially.
I have ever follow'd thee with hate,
Drawn tuns of blood out of thy country's breast. Shakspeare.
  4. A drunkard: in burlesque.
Here's a tun of midnight-work to come,
Og from a treason-tavern rolling home. Dryden.
  5. The weight of two thousand pounds.
  6. A cubick space in a ship, supposed to contain a tun.
So fenced about with rocks and lets, that without knowledge of the passages, a boat of ten tuns cannot be brought into the haven. Heylin.
  7. Dryden has used it for a perimetrical measure, I believe without precedent or propriety.
A tun about was every pillar there;
A polish'd mirror shone not half so clear. Dryden.
- To TUN. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into casks; to barrel.
If in the must, or wort, while it worketh, before it be tun-
ned, the burrage stay a time, and be often changed with fresh, it will make a sovereign drink for melancholy. Bacon.
The same fermented juice degenerating into vinegar, yields an acid and corroding spirit. The same juice tunned up, arms itself with tartar. Boyle.
- TU'NABLE. adj. [from tune.] Harmonious; musical.
A cry more tunable
Was never halloo'd to, nor cheer'd with horn. Shakspeare.
Hard are the ways of truth, and rough to walk,
Smooth on the tongue discours'd, pleasing to th' ear,
And tunable as sylvan pipe or song. Milton, P. R.

T U N

All tunable sounds, whereof human voice is one, are made by a regular vibration of the sonorous body, and undulation of the air, proportionable to the acuteness or gravity of the tone.

Holder.

Several lines in Virgil are not altogether tunable to a modern ear.

Garth, Pref. to Ovid.

TU'NABLENESS.† n. s. [from tunable.] Harmony; melodiousness.

Sherwood.

TU'NABLY.† adv. [from tunable.] Harmoniously; melodiously.

He cannot wel fly,
Nor syng tunably.

Skelton, Poems, p. 229.

TU'N-DISH.† n. s. [from tun and dish.] A tunnel.

Filling a bottle with a tun-dish.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

TUNE. n. s. [toon, Dut. ton, Swed. tuono, Ital. tone, Fr. tonus, Lat.]

1. A diversity of notes put together.

Locke.

Came he to sing a raven's note,
Whose dismal tune bereft my vital pow'rs.

Shakespeare.

Tunes and airs have in themselves some affinity with the affections; as merry tunes, doleful tunes, solemn tunes, tunes inclining men's minds to pity, warlike tunes; so that tunes have a predisposition to the motion of the spirits.

Bacon.

Keep unsteady nature to her law,
And the low world in measur'd motion draw
After the heavenly tune, which none can hear
Of human mould with gross unpurged ear.

Milton, Arcades.

That sweet song you sung one starry night,
The tune I still retain, but not the words.

Dryden.

The disposition in the fiddle to play tunes.

Arbuthnot and Pope.

2. Sound; note.

Such a noise arose

As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,
As loud, and to as many tunes.

Shakespeare.

3. Harmony; order; concert of parts.

A continual parliament I thought would but keep the commonweal in tune, by preserving laws in their due execution and vigour.

King Charles.

4. State of giving the due sounds; as, the fiddle is in tune, or out of tune.

5. Proper state for use or application; right disposition; fit temper; proper humour.

A child will learn three times as much when he is in tune, as he will with double the time and pains, when he goes awkwardly, or is dragged unwillingly to it.

Locke.

6. State of any thing with respect to order.

Distressed Lear, in his better tune, remembers what we are come about.

Shakespeare.

To TUNE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into such a state, as that the proper sounds may be produced.

Their golden harps they took,
Harps ever tun'd, that glitter'd by their side.

Milton, P. L.

Tune your harps,

Ye angels, to that sound; and thou, my heart,
Make room to entertain thy flowing joy.

Dryden.

2. To sing harmoniously.

Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise.

Milton, P. L.

Rouse up, ye Thebans; tune your lo Pæans;

Your king returns, the Argians are o'ercome.

Dryden.

Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know
What's roundly smooth, and languishingly slow.

Pope.

3. To put into order, so as to produce the proper effect.

Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the king, who had even tuned his bounty to sing happiness to him.

Shakespeare, All's Well.

To TUNE. v. n.

1. To form one sound to another.

T U N

The winds were hush'd, no leaf so small

At all was seen to stir;

Whilst tuning to the waters fall,

The small birds sang to her.

Drayton, Cynthia.

2. To utter with the voice inarticulate harmony.

TU'NEFUL. adj. [tune and full.] Musical; harmonious.

He saw a pleasant grove,

With chant of tuneful birds resounding love.

Milton, P. R.

Earth smiles with flow'rs renewing, laughs the sky,

And birds to lays of love their tuneful notes apply.

Dryden.

For thy own glory sing our sov'reign's praise,

God of verses and of days!

Let all thy tuneful sons adorn

Their lasting works with William's name.

Prior.

Poets themselves must fall, like those they sung,

Deaf the prais'd ear, and mute the tuneful tongue.

Pope.

TU'NELESS. adj. [from tune.] Unharmonious; unmusical.

When in hand my tuneless harp I take,

Then do I more augment my foes despatch.

Spenser.

Swallow, what dost thou

With thy tuneless serenade?

Cowley.

TU'NER. n. s. [from tune.] One who tunes.

The pox of such antick, lisping, affected phantasies, these new tuners of accents.

Shakespeare.

TU'NICK.† n. s. [tunece, Sax. tunique, Fr. tunica, Lat.]

1. Part of the Roman dress.

The tunicks of the Romans, which answer to our waistcoats, were without ornaments, and with very short sleeves.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Natural covering; integument; tunicle.

Lohocks and syrups abate and demulce the hoarseness of a cough, by mollifying the ruggedness of the intern tunick of the gullet.

Harvey on Consumptions.

Their fruit is locked up all winter in their gems, and well fenced with neat and close tunicks.

Derham, Physico-Theol.

The dropsy of the tunica vaginalis is owing to a preternatural discharge of that water continually separating on the internal surface of the tunick.

Sharp.

TU'NICLE.† n. s. [from tunick.]

1. Natural cover; integument.

The humours and tunicles are purely transparent, to let in the light and colour unsoiled.

Ray.

One single grain of wheat, barley, or rye, shall contain four or five distinct plants under one common tunicle; a very convincing argument of the providence of God.

Bentley.

2. Formerly a kind of cope worn by the officiating clergy. Obsolete.

She is florishingly decked — with many kyndes of ornamentes, as copes, corporasses, chesibles, tunicles.

Bale on the Rev. P. ii. (1550.)

Tunicles Durand describes to have been a silk sky-coloured coat made in the shape of a cope.

Wheatly on the Comm. Pr. ch. 2. § 4.

TU'NING.* n. s. [from tune.] Act of singing or playing in concert; act or method of putting into tune.

All organs of sweet stop,

All sounds on fret by string or golden wire

Temper'd soft tunings.

Milton, P. L.

TU'NNAGE. n. s. [from tun.]

1. Content of a vessel measured by the tun.

The consideration of the riches of the ancients leads to that of their trade, and to inquire into the bulk and tunnage of their shipping.

Arbuthnot.

2. Tax laid by a tun; as, to levy tunnage and poundage.

TU'NNEL.† n. s. [tænel, Saxon.]

1. The shaft of a chimney; the passage for the smoke.

T U R

It was a vault ybuilt for great dispencc,
With many ranges rear'd along the wall,
And one great chimney, whose long tunnel thence
The smoak forth threw. Spenser.

The water being rarified, and by rarification resolved into wind, will force up the smoke, which otherwise might linger in the tunnel, and oftentimes reverse. Wotton on Architecture.

2. A funnel; a pipe by which liquor is poured into vessels.

For the help of the hearing, make an instrument like a tunnel, the narrow part of the bigness of the hole of the ear, and the broader end much larger. Bacon.

3. A net wide at the mouth, and ending in a point, and so resembling a funnel or tunnel.

To TU'NNEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

provinces.

To TUP. v. n. To but like a ram.

To TUP.* v. a. To cover as a ram.

TU'RBAN.† n. s. [Turkish, dulbant or tulbant;
hence the old Engl. tulibant, and tu- lipant; the former in Puttenham's Art of Poesie, the latter repeatedly in Sir T. Herbert's Travels.] The cover worn by the Turks on their heads.

Gates of monarchs
Arch'd are so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbands on, without Good-morrow to the sun. Shakspeare.
His hat was in the form of a turban, not so huge as the Turkish turbans. Bacon.
From utmost Indian isle, Taprobane,
Dusk faces with white silken turbants wreath'd. Milton, P. R.
I see the Turk nodding with his turbant. Howell.
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbants finest Holland bear. Dryden.

TU'RBANED.† adj. [from turban; Sir T. Herbert, tulipanted.] Wearing a turban; dressed with a turban.

A turban'd Turk
That beat a Venetian, and traduc'd the state,
I took by the throat. Shakspeare.
The better sort, to vary from the vulgar, are tulipanted.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 368.

No crescent here displays its baneful horns,
No turban'd host the voice of truth reprove.
Shenstone, Eleg. 14.

TU'RBARY.† n. s. [turbaria, low Lat. from turf.]

1. The right of digging turf. Skinner.
2. The place where turfs are digged. Cowel.

TU'RBID. adj. [turbidus, Latin.] Thick; muddy;
not clear.

Though lees make the liquid turbid, yet they refine the spirits. Bacon.

The brazen instruments of death discharge
Horrible flames, and turbid streaming clouds
Of smoke sulphureous, intermix'd with these Large globous irons fly. Philips.

T U R

The ordinary springs, which were before clear, fresh, and limpid, become thick and turbid, as long as the earthquake lasts. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

TU'RBDLY.* adv. [from turbid.] Haughtily;
proudly: a latinism.

A person of small merit is anxiously jealous of imputations on his honour, because he knows his title is weak; one of great merit turbidly resents them, because he knows his title is strong.
Young, Estim. of Hum. Life.

TU'RBDNESS. n. s. [from turbid.] Muddiness; thickness.

TU'RBINATED.† adj. [turbinatus, Lat.]

turbot. Peacham.

Nor oysters of the Lucrine lake
My sober appetite would wish,
Nor turbot. Dryden.

TU'RBULENCE.} n. s. [turbulencia, Fr. turbulentia,
Latin.]

1. Tumult; confusion.

I have dream'd
Of bloody turbulencia; and this whole night
Hath nothing been but forms of slaughter. Shakspeare.

Of times noxious where they light
On man, beast, plant, wasteful and turbulent,
Like turbulencias in the affairs of men,
Over whose heads they roar, and seem to point:
They oft foreshignify and threaten ill. Milton, P. R.

2. Disorder of passions.

I come to calm thy turbulence of mind,
If reason will resume her sov'reign sway. Dryden.

3. Tumultuousness; tendency to confusion.

You think this turbulence of blood,
From stagnating preserves the flood,
Which thus fermenting by degrees,
Exalts the spirits, sinks the lees. Swift.

TU'RBULENT. adj. [turbulentus, Lat.]

1. Raising agitation; producing commotion.
From the clear milky juice allaying
Thirst, and refresh'd; nor envy'd them the grape,
Whose heads that turbulent liquor fills with fumes.
Milton, P. L.

2. Exposed to commotion; liable to agitation.
Calm region once,
And full of peace; now tost, and turbulent! Milton, P. L.

3. Tumultuous; violent.
What wondrous sort of death has heav'n design'd
For so untam'd, so turbulent a mind? Dryden.

Nor need we tell what anxious cares attend
The turbulent mirth of wine, nor all the kinds
Of maladies that lead to death's grim cave,
Wrought by intemperance. Dryden.

Men of ambitious and turbulent spirits, that were dissatisfied with privacy, were allowed to engage in matters of state. Bentley.

2. Empty magnificence.

TU'RGID. adj. [turgidus, Lat.]

1. Swelling; bloated; filling more room than before.

A bladder, moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, held near the fire, grew turgid and hard; and brought nearer, suddenly broke with a vehement noise. Boyle.

The spirits embroil'd with the malignity, and drowned in the blood turgid and tumified by the febrile fermentation, are by phlebotomy relieved. Harvey on Consump.

Disburthen thou thy sapless wood

Of its rich progeny; the turgid fruit

Abounds with mellow liquor.

Philips.

Those channels turgid with th' obstructed tide

Stretch their small holes and make their meshes wide.

Blackmore.

T U R

2. Pompous; tumid; fastuous; vainly magnificent.

Some have a violent and turgid manner of talking and thinking; whatsoever they judge of is with a tincture of this vanity.

Watts, Logick.

TURGI'DITY.† n. s. [from turgid.]

1. State of being swollen.

The forerunners of an apoplexy are dulness, slowness of speech, vertigos, weakness, wateriness, and turgidity of the eyes. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. Pompousness; empty magnificence.

A simple, clear, harmonious style; which, taken as a model, may be followed without leading the novice into either
turgidity or obscurity. Cumberland, Mem. ii. 262.

TU'RGIDNESS.* n. s. [from turgid.] Pompousness.

The turgidness of a young scribbler might please his magnificent spirit, always upon the stilts.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 96.

TU'RKEY. n. s. [gallina turcica, Lat.] A large domestick fowl supposed to be brought from Turkey.

Here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock. Shakespeare.

The turkey-cock hath swelling gills, the hen less. Bacon.

So speeds the wily fox,

Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care.

Gay.

TU'RKOIS. n. s. [turquoise, French, from Turky.] A blue stone numbered among the meaner precious stones, now discovered to be a bone impregnated with cupreous particles.

Those bony bodies found among copper-ores are tinged with green or blue: the turcois stone, as it is commonly stiled by lapidaries, is part of a bone so tinged. Woodward.

TU'RKSCAP. n. s. [martagen.] An herb. Ainsworth.

ille*, French, a mill-hopper; more probably derived from moil, to labour.] Trouble; disturbance; harassing uncasiness; tumultuous molestation. Little in use.

He seeks, with torment and turmoil,

To force me live, and will not let me die.

Spenser.

There I'll rest, as after much turmoil

A blessed soul doth in elysium.

Shakespeare.

Blinded greatness ever in turmoil,

Still seeking happy life, makes life a toil.

Daniel.

Happy when I, from this turmoil set free,

That peaceful and divine assembly see.

Denham.

To TURMO'IL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To harass with commotion.

That is not fault of will in those godly fathers, but the troublesome occasions wherewith that wretched realm hath continually been turmoiled. Spenser.

It is her fatal misfortune above all other countries, to be miserably tossed and turmoiled with these storms of affliction.

Spenser.

Haughty Juno, who with endless broil

Did earth, and heav'n, and Jove himself turmoil,

At length aton'd, her friendly pow'r shall join.

Dryden.

2. To weary; to keep in unquietness.

Having newly left those grammatick shallows, where they stuck unreasonably to learn a few words, on the sudden are transported to be tost and turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy. Milton.

To TURN. v. a. [tupnan, Sax. turner, Fr. from torno, Latin.]

1. To put into a circular or vertiginous motion; to

A base companion, few or none could miss,
Who first did serve their turn, and now serves his. Daniel.
They tried their old friends of the city, who had served their turns so often, and set them to get a petition. Clarendon.
Neither will this shift serve the turn. Wilkins.
This philosophy may pass with the most sensual, while they pretend to be reasonable; but whenever they have a mind to be otherwise, to drink or to sleep, will serve the turn. Temple, Miscell.
15. The form; cast; shape; manner.
Our young men take up some cry'd up English poet, without knowing wherein his thoughts are improper to his subject, or his expressions unworthy of his thoughts, or the turn of both is unharmonious. Dryden.
Seldom any thing raises wonder in me, which does not give my thought a turn that makes my heart the better. Addison.
Female virtues are of a domestick turn. The family is the proper province for private women to shine in. Addison.
An agreeable turn appears in her sentiments upon the most ordinary affairs of life. Addison.
Wit doth not consist so much in advancing things new, as in giving things known an agreeable turn. Addison, Spect.
Before I made this remark, I wondered to see the Roman poets, in their description of a beautiful man, so often mention the turn of his neck and arms. Addison.
A young man of a sprightly turn in conversation, had an inordinate desire of appearing fashionable. Spectator.
Books give the same turn to our thoughts and reasoning, that good company does to our conversation. Swift, Miscell.
The very turn of voice, the good pronunciation, and the alluring manner which some teachers have attained, will engage the attention. Watts.

- They who are conscious of their guilt, and apprehensive that the justice of the nation should take notice of their theft and rapine, will try to give all things a false turn, and to fill every place with false suggestions. Davenant.
The first coin being made of brass, gave the denomination to money among the Romans, and the whole turn of their expressions is derived from it. Arbuthnot.
16. The manner of adjusting the words of a sentence.
The turn of words, in which Ovid excels all poets, are sometimes a fault or sometimes a beauty, as they are used properly or improperly. Dryden.
The three first stanzas are rendered word for word with the original, not only with the same elegance, but the same short turn of expression peculiar to the sapphick ode. Addison.
17. New position of things; as, something troublesome happens at every turn.
18. The court of the sheriff; of old called also the sheriff's moot. Minsheu. See TOURN.
19. By TURNS. One after another; alternately.
They feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes; extremes by change more fierce. Milton, P. L.
- The challenge to Dametas shall belong
Menalcas shall sustain his under-song;
Each in his turn your tuneful numbers bring;
By turns the tuneful muses love to sing. Dryden, Virg.
By turns put on the suppliant, and the lord;
Threaten'd this moment, and the next implor'd. Prior.
- TU'RN BENCH. n. s. [turn and bench.] A term of turners.
- Small work in metal is turned in an iron lathe called a turnbench, which they screw in a vice, and having fitted their work upon a small iron axle, with a drill barrel, fitted upon a square shank, at the end of the axis, next the left-hand, they with a drill-bow, and drill-string, carry it about. Moxon.
- TU'RN COAT. n. s. [turn and coat.] One who forsakes his party or principles; a renegade.
Courtesy itself must turn to disdain, if you come in her presence—Then is courtesy a turncoat. Shakspeare.
- TU'RN ER. n. s. [from turn.] One whose trade is to turn in a lathe.
Nor box, nor limes, without their use are made,
Smooth-grain'd and proper for the turner's trade. Dryden.
Some turners, to shew their dexterity in turning, turn long and slender pieces of ivory, as small as an hay-stalk. Moxon.
- TU'RNERY.* n. s. [from turner.] The art of fashioning hard bodies into a round or oval form in a lathe; the articles so turned.
- TU'RN ING.† n. s. [from turn.]
1. Flexure; winding; meander.
I ran with headlong haste
Through paths and turnings often trod by day. Milton, Comus.
2. Deviation from the way.
Behold the divers turnings, and windings, by which men wander and go astray. Harmer, Tr. of Benz, p. 11.
The turning away of the simple shall slay him. Prov.
- TU'RN INGNESS. n. s. [from turning.] Quality of turning; tergiversation; subterfuge.
So nature formed him, to all turningness of sleights; that though no man had less goodness, no man could better find the places whence arguments might grow of goodness. Sidney.
- TU'RN IP.† n. s. [næpe, Sax. napus, Lat. Those who write our word turnep are therefore warranted.] A white esculent root.
The flower consists of four leaves, which are placed in form of a cross; out of the flower cup rises the pointal, which afterward turns to a pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides, and are full of roundish seeds: a carneous and tuberous root. Miller.

November is drawn with bunches of parsnips and turnips in his right-hand. Peacham on Drawing.

The goddess rose amid the inmost round,
With wither'd turnip-tops her temples crown'd. Gay.
Turnips hide their swelling heads below. Gay, Past.

TU'RNPIKE.† n. s. [turn and pike, or pique.]

1. A cross of two bars armed with pikes at the end, and turning on a pin, fixed to hinder horses from entering.

I move upon my axle, like a turnpike.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

2. Any gate by which the way is obstructed.

The gates are shut, and the turnpikes locked. Arbutnot.

TU'RSICK. adj. [turn and sick.] Vertiginous; giddy.
If a man see another turn swiftly and long; or if he look upon wheels that turn, himself waxeth turnsick. Bacon.

TU'RSOL.† n. s. [heliotropium, Lat.] A plant.

Miller.

Her chaplet of heliotropium or turnsole.

B. Jonson, Coron. Ent.

TU'RNSPIT. n. s. [turn and spit.] He that anciently turned a spit, instead of which jacks are now generally used. It is now used of a dog that turns the spit.

I give you joy of the report
That he's to have a place at court;
Yes, and a place he will grow rich in,
A turnspit in the royal kitchen.

Swift, Miscell.

TU'RNSTILE. n. s. [turn and stile.] A kind of turnpike in a footpath.

A turnstile is more certain

Than, in events of war, dame Fortune.

Hudibras.

Twirling turnstiles interrupt the way,
The thwarting passenger shall force them round.

Gay.

TU'RPENTINE. n. s. [turpentina, Ital. terebinthina, Lat.] The gum exuded by the pine, the juniper, and other trees of that kind.

As the turpentine tree I stretched out my branches.

Ecclesi. xxiv. 16.

Vertgrease grinded with turpentine, put into a pot, and as you use it warm it.

Peacham on Drawing.

TU'RPITUDE. n. s. [turpitude, Fr. turpitude, from turpis, Lat.] Essential deformity of words, thoughts, or actions; inherent vileness; badness.

How would'st thou have paid
My better service, when my turpitude
Thou thus dost crown with gold?

Shakespeare.

Decency imports a certain measure of one thing to another; the preservation of which is properly that rule by which every thing ought to act; and consequently the violation of it implies a turpitude or indecency.

South.

TU'RQUOISE. n. s. See TURKOIS.

One shewed me a ring he had of your daughter for a monkey.—Out upon her! it was my turquoise, I had it when I was a bachelor.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

TU'RREL.* n. s. A tool used by coopers. Sherwood.

TURRET. n. s. [turris, Lat.] A small eminence raised above the rest of the building; a little tower.

Discourse I pry thee, on this turret's top.
All things well ordered, he withdrew with speed

Shakespeare.

Up to a turret high, two ports between,
That so he might be near at every need,
And overlook the lands and furrows green.

Fairfax.

Make Windsor hills in lofty numbers rise,
And lift her turrets nearer to the skies.

Pope.

TURRETED. adj. [from turret.] Formed like a tower; rising like a tower:

T U T

Take a turreted lamp of tin, in the form of a square; the height of the turret being thrice as much as the length of the lower part, whereupon the lamp standeth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

TU'RTLE.† } n. s. [tuptle, Saxon; tortorelle, Fr.
TU'RTLEDOVE. } tortorella, Ital. turtur, Lat.]

1. A species of dove.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,

And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks:

When turtles tread.

Shakespeare, L. Lab. Lost.

We'll teach him to know turtles from jays.

Shakespeare.

Take me an heifer and a turtledove.

Gen. xv. 9.

Galen proposed the blood of turtles dropt warm from their wings.

Wiseman.

2. A turtle is the name also of the sea-tortoise.

Lyttelton, in his Dialogues of the Dead, has introduced Darteneuf, in a pleasant discourse between him and Apicius, bitterly lamenting his ill fortune, in having lived before turtle-feasts were known in England. "Alas," says he, "how imperfect is human felicity! I lived in an age when the pleasure of eating was thought to be carried to its highest perfection in England and France. And yet a turtle-feast is a novelty to me!"

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

TURVES.* The old plural of turf.

The Greek historian sets her [Boadicea] in the field on a high heap of turves, in a loose-bodied gown declaiming, a spear in her hand.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

TU'SCAN.* adj. [from Tuscany.] Denoting one of the orders of architecture.

The Tuscan is of all the rudest pillar, and its principal character simplicity.

Wotton on Architecture.

TUSH.† interj. [Of this word I can find no credible etymology. Dr. Johnson. — From tyst, Su. Goth. be silent, hold your peace. Serenius.] An expression of contempt.

Tush, say they, how should God perceive it: is there knowledge in the Most High?

Ps. lxxiii.

Sir Thomas Moor found fault with his lady's continual chiding; saying, the consideration of the time, for it was lent, should restrain her. Tush, tush, my lord, said she, look, here is one step to heaven-ward, shewing him a friar's girdle. I fear me, quoth Sir Thomas, this one step will not bring you up a step higher.

Camden, Rem.

Tush, never tell me, I take it much unkindly

That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse,

As if the strings were thine, should know of this.

Shakespeare.

TUSK. n. s. [tux, tuxar, Sax. tosken, old Frisick.] The long teeth of a pugnacious animal; the fang; the holding tooth.

Some creatures have over-long, or out-growing teeth, called fangs, or tusks; as boars and pikes.

Bacon.

The boar depended upon his tusks.

L'Estrange.

As two boars,

With rising bristles, and with frothy jaws,

Their adverse breasts with tusks oblique they wound.

Dryden.

A monstrous boar

Whetting his tusks, and churning hideous foam.

Smith.

To TUSK.* v. n. [from the noun.] To gnash the teeth, as a boar.

Nay, now you puff, tusk, and draw up your chin.

B. Jonson, Epigr. 107.

TU'SKED. } adj. [from tusk.] Furnished with tusks.
TU'SKY. }

Into the naked woods he goes,
And seeks the tusky boar to rear.

Dryden.

Of those beasts no one was horned and tusked too: the superfluous blood not sufficing to feed both.

Grew.

TU'SSLE.* n. s. [from touse.] A struggle: as, we had a tussle for it. Grose. A vulgar expression.

TU'SSUCK. n. s. [diminutive of tuz.] A tuft of grass or twigs.

The first is remarkable for the several tussucks or bunches of thorns, wherewith it is armed round.

Grew.

TUT.† interj. [This seems to be the same with tush. Dr. Johnson. — The Welsh language, however, has twt, twti, the word used when we make light of a thing, as tush, tut; twt, a puff.] A particle noting contempt.

Tut, tut! grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle.

Tut, tut! here's a mannerly forbearance.

TU'TANAG. n. s. The Chinese name for spelter, which we erroneously apply to the metal of which canisters are made, that are brought over with the tea from China; it being a coarse pewter made with the lead carried from England and tin got in the kingdom of Quintang.

TU'TELAGE.† } n. s. [tutele, tutelage, Fr. tutela, Lat.]
TU'TELE. } Guardianship; state of being under guardian.

The tutelage whereof, as those past worlds did please, Some to Minerva gave, and some to Hercules. Drayton.
If one in the possession of lands die, and leave a minor to succeed to him, his tutelage belongeth to the king.

He accoupled the ambassage with an article in the nature of a request, that the French king might, according unto his right of seigniorship or tutelage, dispose of the marriage of the young duchess of Brittany.

He was to have the tutele and ward of his children.

TU'TELAR.† } adj. [tutelaire, Fr. Cotgrave; from TU'TELARY. } tutela, Lat.] Having the charge or guardianship of any person or thing; protecting; defensive; guardian.

According to the traditions of the magicians the tutelary spirits will not remove at common appellations, but at the proper names of things, whereunto they are protectors.

Temperance, that virtue without pride, and fortune without envy, that gives indolence of body, with an equality of mind; the best guardian of youth and support of old age: the precept of reason, as well as religion, and physician of the soul as well as the body; the tutelary goddess of health, and universal medicine of life.

These tutelary genii who presided over the several people committed to their charge, were watchful over them.

But you, O Grecian chiefs, reward my care,
Sure I may plead a little to your grace:
Enter'd the town; I then unbarr'd the gates,
When I remov'd the tutelary fates.
Ye tutelary gods who guard this royal fabrick.

TU'TOR. n. s. [tutor, Lat. tuteur, Fr.] One who has the care of another's learning and morals; a teacher or instructor.

When I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots;
Till then I banish thee on pain of death.

When nobles are the tailors' tutors;
No hereticks burnt but wenches suiters.

A primitive Christian, that coming to a friend to teach him a psalm, began, I said I will look to my ways, that I offend not with my tongue; upon which he stopt his tutor, saying, This is enough if I learn it.

His body thus adorn'd, he next design'd
With lib'ral arts to cultivate his mind:

He sought a tutor of his own accord,
And study'd lessons he before abhor'd.

No science is so speedily learned by the noblest genius without a tutor.

To TU'TOR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct; to teach; to document.

T W A

This boy is forest born,
And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of many desperate studies by his uncle.

Shakspeare.

He cannot be a perfect man,
Not being tried and tutor'd in the world.

Shakspeare.

The cock has his spurs, and he strikes his feet inward with singular strength and order; yet he does not this by any syllogistical method, but is merely tutored by instinct.

Hale.

2. To treat with superiority or severity.

I hardly yet have learn'd

T' insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my knee:

Give sorrow leave a while to tutor me

To this submission.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

I take a review of my little boys mounted upon hobby-horses, and of little girls tutoring their babies.

Addison.

TU'TORAGE. n. s. [from tutor.] The authority or solemnity of a tutor.

Children care not for the company of their parents or tutors, and men will care less for theirs, who would make them children by usurping a tutorage.

Gov. of the Tongue.

TU'TORESS.† } n. s. [tuteresse, tutrice, old French;
TU'TRIX. } from tutor.] Directress; instructress; governess.

That most honoured tutress's pupils.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 11.

A prattling nurse is a better tutrix to her foster-child.

Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tut. p. 48.

And what still more his stagg'ring virtue try'd,

His mother, tut'ress of that virtue, dy'd.

Harte.

TU'TORSHIP.* n. s. [from tutor.] Office of a tutor.
He that should grant a tutorship, restraining his grant to some one certain thing or cause, should do but idly, because tutors are given for personal defence generally, and not for managing a few particular things or causes.

Hooker, Eccl. Pol. v. § 80.

TU'TSAN.† n. s. [tulsan, Fr. androsæmum, Latin.]
Parkleaves, a plant.

The healing tulsan then, and plantan for a sore.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

TU'TTY.† n. s. [tutia, low Lat. tuthie, Fr.] A sublimate of zinc or calamine collected in the furnace.

Near it stood a phial of rosewater and powder of tutty.

Tatler, No. 266.

TUZ.† n. s. [I know not whether it is not a word merely of cant. Dr. Johnson. — Perhaps not so; but from tuss or tussy, an old word for a wreath or tuft: "A girdle of flowers, and tussies of all fruits, intertyed and following together." Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, ed. 1633. p. 49. And this same tuss from the French tasse, a tuft.] A lock or tuft of hair.

With odorous oil thy head and hair are sleek;

And then thou kemp'st the tuzzes on thy cheek;

Of these thy barbers take a costly care.

Dryden.

TWAIN. adj. [tpegen, Saxon.] Two. An old word, not now used but ludicrously.
'Tis not the tryal of a woman's war,
The bitter clamour of two eager tongues,
Can arbitrate this cause betwixt us twain.
Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,
Too intricate t' unloose.

Shakspeare.

Of my condition take no care;

It fits not; thou and I long since are twain.

When old winter split the rocks in twain;

He strip'd the bears-foot of its leafy growth.

The trembling widow, and her daughters twain,

This woeful cackling cry with horror heard.

To TWANG. v. n. [A word formed from the sound.]

To sound with a quick sharp noise.

Milton, S. A.

Dryden.

Dryden.

T W A

A thousand twanging instruments
Will hum about mine ears. Shakespeare, Tempest.
His quiver o'er his shoulders Phœbus threw,
His bow twang'd, and his arrows rattled as they flew. Dryden.
With her thundering voice she menac'd high;
And every accent twang'd with smarting sorrow. Dryden.
The twanging bows
Send showers of shafts, that on their barbed points
Alternate ruin bear. Philips.
Sounds the tough horn and twangs the quiv'ring string. Pope.

To TWANG. v. a. To make to sound sharply.

A swaggering accent sharply twang'd off, gives manhood approbation. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

TWANG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A sharp quick sound.

They by the sound and twang of nose,
If all be sound within, disclose. Hudibras.
So swells each wind-pipe; ass intones to ass,
Harmonic twang of leather, horn and brass. Pope.

2. An affected modulation of the voice.

If he be but a person in vogue with the multitude, he can make popular, rambling, incoherent stuff, seasoned with twang and tautology, pass for high rhetoric. South.
He has such a twang in his discourse, and ungraceful way of speaking through his nose, that one can hardly understand him. Arbuthnot.

TWANG. interj. A word marking a quick action, accompanied with a sharp sound. Little used, and little deserving to be used.

There's one, the best in all my quiver,
Twang! thro' his very heart and liver. Prior.

To TWA'NGLE.† v. n. [from twang.] To make a sharp quick sound.

Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments
Will hum about my ears. Shakespeare, Tempest.

She did call me rascal fidler,
And twangling jack, with twenty such vile terms.
Shakespeare, Tam. of a Shrew.

To TWANK. v. n. [corrupted from twang.] To make
to sound.

A freeman of London has the privilege of disturbing a whole street with twanking of a brass kettle. Addison.

'TWAS. Contracted from it was.

If he asks who bid thee, say 'twas I. Dryden.

To TWA'TTLE.† v. n. [schwatzen, German.] To prate; to gabble; to chatter.

The apostle Paul finds fault with a certain sort of women who were prattlers, which would go from house to house, twatting, and babbling out frothy speech that was good for nothing. Whately, Redempt. of Time, (1634), p. 15.

It is not for every twatting gossip to undertake.
L'Estrange.

To TWA'TTLE.* v. a. To pat, to make much of,
as horses, cows, dogs. North. Grose.

TWA'TTLING.* n. s. [from twattle.] Aot of prating;
idle chatter.

When one talks toys or trifles, and speaks shadows or gawds that yield no profit; such twatting cuts out the heart of good time. Whately, Red. of Time, p. 15.

TWAY.† [twai, Goth.] For TWAIN.

Guyon's angry blade so fierce did play
On th' other's helmet, which as Titan shone,
That quite it clove his plumed crest in tway. Spenser.

TWA'YBLADE. n. s. [Ophris, Lat.] A polypetalous flower, consisting of six dissimilar leaves, of which the five upper ones are so disposed, as to represent in some measure an helmet, the under one being headed and shaped like a man. Miller.

T W E

To TWEAG.† } v. a. [It is written tweag by
To TWEAK. } Skinner, but tweak by other writers. Dr. Johnson. — Tweak is correct; as the word is doubtless from the Sax. twēccan, twēccian, to twitch, vellere, carpere.] To pinch; to squeeze betwixt the fingers.

Who calls me villain, breaks my pate across,
Tweaks me by the nose. Shakespeare.

To rouse him from lethargick dump,
He tweak'd his nose. Butler.

Look in their face, they tweak'd your nose. Swift.

TWEAGUE.† } n. s. [Not from the verb, as Dr. John-TWEAK. } son derives it; but from the Saxon twēogan, to hesitate, to doubt. The Swed. tuekan, as Lye observes, is also hesitation, from tueka, to doubt.] Perplexity; ludicrous distress. A low word.

This put the old fellow in a rare tweague. Arbuthnot.

To TWE'EDLE. v. a. [I know not whence derived.]
To handle lightly. Used of awkward fiddling.

A fidler brought in with him a body of lusty young fellows, whom he had tweedled into the service. Addison.

TWE'EZERS.† n. s. [etuy, French. Dr. Johnson. — Formerly, nearer to the etymon, tweese: as,
"a surgeon's tweese, or box of instruments." Sherwood.] Nippers, or small pincers to pluck off hairs.

There hero's wits are kept in pond'rous vases,
And beaus in snuff-boxes and tweezer-cases. Pope.

TWELFTH. adj. [twelfta, Saxon.] Second after the tenth; the ordinal of twelve.

He found Elisha plowing with twelve yoke of oxen, and he with the twelfth. 1 Kings, xix. 9.

Supposing, according to the standard, five shillings were to weigh an ounce, wanting about sixteen grains, whereof one twelfth were copper, and eleven twelfths silver, it is plain here the quantity of silver gives the value. Locke.

TWELFTHIDE, n. s. The twelfth day after Christmas.

Plough-munday, next after that twelfthide,
Bids out with the plough. Tusser, Husbandry.

TWELVE.† adj. [M. Goth. twalib, or twalif;
Sax. twēolp, twēlf; a twa, duo, et antiq. laib, residium; a lefwa, relinquere; (duo scil. digiti supra decem numeratos residui.) Serenius.] Two and ten; twice six.

Thou hast beat me out twelve several times.
Shakespeare, Coriol.

Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that
Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all,
From twelve to twenty. Shakespeare.

What man talk'd with you yesternight
Out at your window betwixt twelve and one? Shakespeare.

On his left hand twelve reverend owls did fly:
So Romulus, 'tis sung, by Tyber's brook,
Presage of sway from twice six vultures took. Dryden.

TWELVEMOON.† n. s. [Sax. twēolp-monð.] A year,
as consisting of twelve months.

I shall laugh at this a twelvemonth hence. Shakespeare.
This year or twelvemonth, by reason that the moon's months are shorter than those of the sun, is about eleven days shorter than the sun's year. Holder.

Taking the shoots of the past spring, and pegging them down in very rich earth perfectly consumed, watering them upon all occasions, by this time twelvemonth they will be ready to remove. Evelyn.

In the space of about a twelvemonth I have run out of a whole thousand pound upon her. Addison.

Not twice a twelvemonth you appear in print. Pope.

TWE'LVEPENCE. n. s. [twelve and pence.] A shilling.

TWE'LVEPENNY. adj. [twelve and penny.] Sold for a shilling.

I would wish no other revenge, from this rhyming judge of the twelvepenny gallery. Dryden.

TWE'LVESCORE. n. s. [twelve and score.] Twelve times twenty; two hundred and forty.

Twelvescore viragos of the Spartan race. Dryden.

TWE'NTIETH. adj. [twenteogōða, Saxon.] Twice tenth; ordinal of twenty.

This year,
The twentieth from the firing the capitol,
As fatal too to Rome, by all predictions. B. Jonson.

Why was not I the twentieth by descent
From a long restive race of droning kings? Dryden.

This crown now must be raised, and coined one twentieth lighter; which is nothing but changing the denomination, calling that a crown now, which yesterday was but a part, viz. nineteen twentieths. Locke.

TWENTY.† adj. [M. Goth. twaimtig; Saxon twentig; a Goth. twa, twenne, et Icel. tugr, denarius numerus. Serenius.]

1. Twice ten.

Hammond seldom did eat or drink more than once in twenty-four hours, and some fruit towards night. Fell.

At least nineteen in twenty of these perplexing words might be changed into easy ones. Swift.

2. A proverbial or indefinite number.

Maximilian, upon twenty respects, could not have been the man. Bacon, Hen. VII.

TW'IL.† n. s. [Sax. tpybill, bipennis, securis.] A kind of halberd: formerly, a mattock. Pr. Parv.
She learn'd the churlish axe and twybill to prepare. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 18.

TWICE. adv. [twigun, Saxon; twées, Dutch.]

1. Two times.

Upon his crest he struck him so,
That twice he reeled, ready twice to fall. Spenser.

He twice essay'd to cast his son in gold;
Twice from his hands he dropp'd the forming mould. Dryden.

2. Doubly.

A little sum you mourn, while most have met
With twice the loss, and by as vile a cheat. Dryden.

3. It is often used in composition.

Life is tedious as a twice-told tale,
Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man. Shakespeare.

Twice-born Bacchus burst the thundrer's thigh,
And all the gods that wander thro' the sky. Creech.

Extol the strength of a twice-conquer'd race. Dryden.

Tb TWIDLE. v. a. [This is commonly written tweedle.]
To touch lightly. A low word.

With my fingers upon the stupe, I pressed close upon it, and twiddled it in, first one side, then the other. Wise man.

TW'FOLD.* adj. Twofold. Obsolete.

Her twyfold teme, of which two blacke as pitch,
And two were browne, yet each to each unlich,
Did softly swim away. Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 28.

TWIG. n. s. [twiz, twizga, Saxon; twyg, Dutch.]
A small shoot of a branch; a switch tough and long.

The Britons had boats made of willow twigs, covered on the outside with hides, and so had the Venetians. Raleigh.

They chose the fig-tree, such as spreads her arms,
Branching so broad and long, that in the ground
The bended twigs take root. Milton, P. L.

Can'st thou with a weak angle strike the whale,
His huge jaw with a twig or bulrush bore? Sandys.

If they cut the twigs at evening, a plentiful and pleasant juice comes out. More.

From parent bough
A cyon meetly sever: after force
A way into the crabstock's close wrought grain
By wedges, and within the living wound
Inclose the foster twig, around which spread
The binding clay. Philips.

TW'IGGEN. adj. [from twig.] Made of twigs; wicker.
I'll beat the knave into a twiggen bottle. Shakespeare.

The sides and rim sewed together after the manner of twiggen work. Grew.

TW'GGY.† adj. [from twig.] Full of twigs.

Though they grow the slowest of all the twiggy trees, yet do they recompense it by the larger crop. Evelyn.

TWILIGHT.† n. s. [twelicht, Dutch; twoneleocht, Saxon; from twēo, twēon, dubious, and light. Serenius.]

1. The dubious or faint light before sunrise, and after sunset; obscure light.

Her twilights were more clear than our mid-day. Donne.
Suspensions amongst thoughts are like bats amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight. Certainly they are to be well guarded. Bacon.

2. Uncertain view.

A faint weak love of virtue, and of good,
Reflects from her on them, which understood
Her worth; and though she have shut in all day,
The twilight of her memory doth stay. Donne.

He that saw hell in's melancholy dream,
And in the twilight of his fancy's theme,
Scar'd from his sins, repented in a fright,
Had he view'd Scotland, had turn'd proselyte. Cleaveland.

Ambrosial night, with clouds exhal'd
From that high mount of God, whence light and shade
Spring both, the face of brightest heav'n had chang'd
To grateful twilight. Milton, P. L.

When the sun was down,
They just arriv'd by twilight at a town. Dryden.

In the greatest part of our concernment he has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to our state of mediocrity. Locke.

TWILIGHT. adj.

1. Not clearly or brightly illuminated; obscure; deeply shaded.

When the sun begins to fling
His flaming beams, me goddess bring
To arched walks of twilight groves. Milton, Il Pens.

O'er the twilight groves, and dusky caves,
Long sounding aisles, and intermingled graves,
Black Melancholy sits, and round her throws
A death-like silence, and a dread repose. Pope.

2. Seen or done by twilight.

On old Lycæus or Cyllene hoar,
Trip no more in twilight ranks. Milton, Arcades.

To TWILL.* v. a. [In Scotland twael, or tweedle; which Dr. Jamieson derives from Sax. twæbe, two-fold, or tpa and dæl, part.] To weave; to quilt. In the north of England a quilt is still called a twilt; in other places, twilled cloth is no uncommon expression; which means where the woof and warp are not observed alternately to cross each other; but appear like cords closely twisted together.

TWILL.* n. s. A quill; a spool; a quill to wind yarn on. North. Ray, and Grose.

TWIN. n. s. [twinn, Saxon; tweligh, Dutch.]

1. Children born at the same birth. It is therefore seldom used in the singular; though sometimes it is used for one of twins.

In this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin-brother of thy letter; but let thine inherit first, for mine never shall. Shakespeare.

In bestowing
He was most princely: ever witness for him
Those twins of learning Ipswich and Oxford. Shakspeare.
If that moment of the time of birth be of such moment, whence proceedeth the great difference of the constitutions of twins, which, though together born, have strange and contrary fortunes? Drummond.

The divided dam
Runs to the summons of her hungry lamb;
But when the twin cries halves, she quits the first. Cleaveland.
No weight of birth did on one side prevail,
Two twins less even lie in Nature's scale. Cowley.
They came twins from the womb, and still they live
As if they would go twins too to the grave. Otway.
Fair Leda's twins, in time to stars decreed,
One fought on foot, one curb'd the fiery steed. Dryden.
Had there been the same likeness in all men, as sometimes in twins, it would have given occasion to confusion. Grew.

2. Gemini, the sign of the zodiack.
This, when the sun retires,
First shines, and spreads black night with feeble fires,
Then parts the twins and crab. Creech.
When now no more, th' alternate twins are fir'd.
Short is the doubtful empire of the night. Thomson.

To TWIN. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be born at the same birth.
He that is approv'd in this offence,
Though he had twinn'd with me both at a birth,
Shall lose me. Shakspeare, Othello.
2. To bring two at once.
Ewes yearly by twinning rich masters do make. Tusser.
3. To be paired; to be suited:
O how inscrutable! his equity
Twins with his power. Sandys, Job.

To TWIN. * } v. n. To part; to go asunder. Ob-
To TWINE. } solete.
Now draweth cutte, ere that ye further twinne:
He which that hath the shortest shal beginne.
Chaucer, C. T. Prolog.

But yet the knight, wise, wary, not unkind,
Drew forth his sword, and from her careless twin'd. Fairfax.
To TWIN. * } v. a. To divide into two parts; to separate. Obsolete.
There shall no death me fro my ladie twinnic.
Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iv. 1197.

TWIN-BORN. † adj. [twin and born.] Born at the same birth.

Our sins lay on the king; he must bear all.
O hard condition, and twin-born with greatness! Shakspeare.
Latona's twin-born progeny. Milton, Son. 12.

To TWINE. † v. a. [twīnan, Sax. duplicare; twēynen, twijnen, Dutch; twynna, Swed. tuinder, Dan.
tuinna, Icel.]

1. To twist or complicate so as to unite, or form one body or substance out of two or more.
Thou shalt make an hanging of blue, and fine twined linen, wrought with needlework. Exod. xxvi. 36.
2. To unite itself.
Lumps of sugar lose themselves, and twine
Their subtle essence with the soul of wine. Crashaw.

To TWINE. v. n.

1. To convolve itself; to wrap itself closely about.
Let wreaths of triumph now my temples twine,
The victor cry'd, the glorious prize is mine! Pope.
2. To unite by interposition of parts.
Friends now fast sworn, who twine in love
Unseparable, shall, within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakspeare.
3. To wind; to make flexures.
As rivers, though they bend and twine,
Still to the sea their course incline:

Or as philosophers who find
Some fav'rite system to their mind,
In ev'ry point to make it fit,
Will force all nature to submit.
The deer rustles thro' the twining brake. Swift.

4. To turn round.

O friends!
Some one abides within here, that commends
The place to us, and breathes a voice divine:
As she some web wrought, or her spindles twine,
She cherisht with her song. Thomson.

TWINE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A twisted thread.
Not any damsel, which her vaunteth most
In skilful knitting of soft silken twine. Spenser.
A pointed sword hung threatening o'er his head,
Sustain'd but by a slender twine of thread. Dryden.
2. Twist; convolution.
Nor all the gods beside Longer dare abide,
Not Typhon huge ending in snaky twine. Milton, Ode Nativ.
Welcome, joy and feast; —
Braid your locks with rosy twine,
Dropping odours, dropping wine. Milton, Comus.
3. Embrace; act of convolving itself round.
Everlasting hate
The vine to ivy bears, but with am'rous twine
Clasps the tall elm. Philips.

To TWINGE. v. a. [zwingen, German; twinge, Dan.]

1. To torment with sudden and short pain.
The gnat charg'd into the nostrils of the lion, and there twing'd him till he made him tear himself, and so master'd him. L'Estrange.
2. To pinch; to tweak.
When a man is past his sense,
There's no way to reduce him thence,
But twinging him by th' ears and nose,
Or laying on of heavy blows. Hudibras.

TWINGE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Short sudden sharp pain.
The wickedness of this old villain startles me, and gives me a twinge for my own sin, though far short of his. Dryden.
2. A tweak; a pinch.
How can you fawn upon a master that gives you so many blows and twinges by the ears? L'Estrange.

TWINK. n. s. [See TWINKLE.] The motion of an eye; a moment. Not in use.

She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied so fast, protesting oath on oath,
That in a twink she won me to her love. Shakspeare.

To TWINKLE. v. n. [twīnclian, Saxon.]

1. To sparkle; to flash irregularly; to shine with in-termitted light; to shine faintly; to quiver.
At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial sun. Shakspeare.
As plays the sun upon the glassy streams,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty. Shakspeare.
Some their forked tails stretch forth on high,
And tear the twinkling stars from trembling sky. Fairfax.
God comprises all the goods we value in the creatures, as the sun doth the light that twinkles in the stars. Boyle.
The star of love,
That twinkles you to fair Almeyda's bed. Dryden.
Think you your new French proselytes are come
To starve abroad, because they starv'd at home?
Your benefices twinkled from afar. Dryden.
So weak your charms, that like a winter's night,
Twinkling with stars, they freeze me while they light. Dryden.
These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture, tremble each of them apart; and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary treimors, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.

2. To open and shut the eye by turns.

The owl fell a moping and twinkling.

L'Estrange.

3. To play irregularly.

His eyes will twinkle, and his tongue will roll,
As though he beckon'd, and call'd back his soul.

Donne.

TWINKLE.

TWINKLING. } n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A sparkling intermitting light.

2. A motion of the eye.

Suddenly, with twinkle of her eye,
The damsel broke his misintended dart.

Spenser.

I come, I come; the least twinkle had brought me to thee.

Dryden, Don. Sebast.

3. A short space, such as is taken up by a motion of the eye.

Money can thy wants at will supply,
Shields, steeds, and arms, and all things for thee meet,
It can pourvey in twinkling of an eye.

Spenser.

These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rainbow; when the actor gilds them no longer with his reflection, they vanish in a twinkling.

Dryden.

The action, passion, and manners of so many persons in a picture, are to be discerned in the twinkling of an eye, if the sight could travel over so many different objects all at once.

Dryden.

TWINLING. n. s. [diminutive of twin.] A twin lamb; a lamb of two brought at a birth.

Twinklins increase bring.

Tusser, Husb.

TW'NNED.* part. adj.

1. Born at the same birth.

Twinn'd brothers of one womb.

Shakspeare, Timon.

2. Like as twins; paired.

The twinn'd stones upon the number'd beach.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

3. United. Twinn'd is undoubtedly Milton's word in his own edition, which Dr. Johnson placed, with hesitation indeed, under the verb twine.

Since thy original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells

Twinn'd, and from her hath no dividual being.

Milton, P. L.

TW'NNER. n. s. [from twin.] A breeder of twins.

Ewes yeerely by twinning rich maisters do make,

The lambe of such twinnors for breeders go take.

Tusser.

TW'INTER.* n. s. [two and winter; Sax. twý-pintp, duos annos natus.] A beast of two winters old.

North.

Grose.

To TWIRE.* v. n. [perhaps the old word for twitter.

Mr. Waldron and Mr. Gifford, in notes on Ben Jonson's Sad Shepherd, consider the word as meaning "to leer affectedly, to glance at obliquely, or surreptitiously, at intervals, &c." The latter also notices "to simper," as a meaning assigned to it: which is very probable. But they offer no etymology, to shew that peep, or leer, or glance, has any thing to do with twire. To twitter is from the Germ. zittern, to tremble. Let us therefore see how it applies to twire.]

1. To flutter; to take short flights with great agitation of the wings. This is clearly the primary meaning. In the following example, the word has been mistaken by Tyrwhitt, Steevens, Mason, and others, for "to sing or murmur with a gentle sound."

If thilke birde, skipping out of her strait cage, seeth the agreeable shadowes of the wodes, she defouleth with her fete here mete ishad, and seketh on morning only the wode, and twireth desiring the wode with her swete voice.

Chaucer, Boeth. B. 3. metr. 2.

2. To be moved with quick vibrations; to quiver; to twinkle.

VOL. V.

When sparkling stars twire not, thou gild'st the even.

Shakspeare, Sonn. 28.

3. To be in a kind of flutter; to be moved to smile or laugh; to twitter.

I saw the wench that twir'd and twinkled at thee.

Beaum. and Fl. Women Pleas'd.

If I was rich, I could twire and loll with the best of them.

Sir R. Steele, Conscious Lovers.

4. To make flexures or windings.

The sun — with fervent eye looks through the twyring glades.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

To TWIRL. v. a. [from whirl.] To turn round; to move by a quick rotation.

Wool and raw silk by moisture incorporate with other thread; especially if there be a little wreathing, as appeareth by the twisting and twirling about of spindles.

Bacon.

Dextrous damsels twirl the sprinkling mop.

Gay.

See ruddy maids,

Some taught with dextrous hand to twirl the wheel.

Dodsley.

To TWIRL. v. n. To revolve with a quick motion.

TWIRL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Rotation; circular motion.

2. Twist; convolution.

The twirl on this is different from that of the others; this being an heterostrophia, the twirls turning from the right-hand to the left.

Woodward on Fossils.

To TWIST. v. a. [zerpijan, Saxon; twisten, Dutch.]

1. To form by complication; to form by convolution.

Do but despair,

And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread

That ever spider twisted from her womb,

Will strangle thee.

Shakspeare.

To reprove discontent, the ancients feigned, that in hell stood a man twisting a rope of hay; and still he twisted on, suffering an ass to eat up all that was finished.

Bp. Taylor.

Would Clotho wash her hands in milk,
And twist our thread with gold and silk;
Would she in friendship, peace, and plenty,
Spin out our years to four times twenty,
And should we both in this condition
Have conquer'd love, and worse ambition,
Else these two passions by the way
May chance to shew us scurvy play.

Prior.

The task were harder to secure my own
Against the pow'r of those already known;
For well you twist the secret chains that bind
With gentle force the captivated mind.

Lyttleton.

2. To contort; to writhe.

Either double it into a pyramidal, or twist it into a serpentine form.

Pope.

3. To wreath; to wind; to encircle by something round about.

There are pillars of smoke twisted about with wreaths of flame.

Burnet, Theory.

4. To form; to weave.

If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it,
And thou shalt have her: was't not to this end
That thou began'st to twist so fine a story?

Shakspeare.

5. To unite by intertexture of parts.

All know how prodigal
Of thy great soul thou art, longing to twist
Bays with that ivy, which so early kist
Thy youthful temples.

Waller.

6. To unite; to insinuate.

When avarice twists itself, not only with the practice of men, but the doctrines of the church; when ecclesiasticks dispute for money, the mischief seems fatal.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

To TWIST. v. n. To be contorted; to be convolved.

In an ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is a circuvolution or insertion of one part of the gut within the other.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Deep in her breast he plung'd the shining sword;

The Inachians view the slain with vast surprise,
Her twisting volumes, and her rolling eyes.

Pope.

TWIST.† n. s. [from the verb.]

A A

1. Any thing made by convolution, or winding two bodies together.

Minerva nurs'd him
Within a twist of twining osiers laid.

Addison.

2. A single string of a cord.

Winding a thin string about the work hazards its breaking,
by the fretting of the several twists against one another.

Moxon, Mech. Ex.

3. A cord; a string.

Through these labyrinths, not my grow'ling wit,
But thy silk twist, let down from heav'n to me,
Did both conduct and teach me, how by it
To climb to thee.

Herbert.

About his chin the twist

He ty'd, and soon the strangl'd soul dismiss'd.

Dryden.

4. Contortion; writhe.

Not the least turn or twist in the fibres of any one animal, which does not render them more proper for that particular animal's way of life than any other cast or texture.

Addison.

5. The manner of twisting.

Jack shrunk at first sight of it; he found fault with the length, the thickness, and the twist.

Arbutnot.

6. [twist, Teut.] A twig; a branch. Obsolete.

Nor bough, nor branch, the Saracens therefore,
Nor twist, nor twig, cut from that sacred spring.

Fairfax.

TWISTER. n. s. [from twist.]

1. One who twists; a ropemaker.

2. The instrument of twisting. To this word I have annexed some remarkable lines, which explain twist
in all its senses.

When a twister a-twisting will twist him a twist,
For the twisting of his twist he three twines doth intwist;
But if one of the twines of the twist do untwist,
The twine that untwisteth untwisteth the twist.
Untwirling the twine that untwisteth between,
He twirls with his twister the two in a twine;
Then twice having twisted the twines of the twine,
He twitcheth the twine he had twined in twain.
The twain that in twining before in the twine,
As twins were intwined, he now doth untwine,
'Twixt the twain intertwisting a twine more between,
He, twirling his twister, makes a twist of the twine.

Wallis.

To TWIT. † v. a. [M. Goth. idweitjan; Sax. ebpitan;
Smolando-Goth. twia vel twita, idem; ab antiquiss.
Suio-Goth. vita, vitii aliquem notare. Serenius.
Hence to wite, which see. Spenser has once used twight, for the sake of his rhyme, in the sense of twit, F. Q. v. vi. 12.] To sneer; to flout; to reproach.

When approaching the stormy stowers
We mought with our shoulders bear off the sharp showers,
And sooth to saine, nought seemeth sike strife,
That shepherds so twiten each other's life.

Spenser.

When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twits me with my falsehood to my friend.

Shakespeare.

Æsop minds men of their errors without twitting them for what's amiss.

L'Estrange.

This these scoffers twitted the Christians with.

Tillotson.

Galen bled his patients, till by fainting they could bear no longer; for which he was twitted in his own time.

Baker.

To TWITCH. † v. a. [†piccian, Saxon.] To vellicate; to pluck with a quick motion; to snatch; to pluck with a hasty motion.

So twiching were the pangs that he assaid,
And he so sore with ruthless rage distraught,
To think upon the wretch that him betrayd.

Mir. for Mag. p. 449.

He rose, and twitch'd his mantle blue,
To-morrow to fresh woods and pastures new.

Milton, Lycidas.

Twitch'd by the sleeve, he mouths it more and more.

Dryden.

With a furious leap
She sprung from bed, disturbed in her mind,
And fear'd at every step a twiching spright behind.
Thrice they twitch'd the diamond in her ear.

Dryden.

Pope.

TWITCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A quick pull; a sudden vellication.

But Hudibras gave him a twitch

As quick as lightning in the breech.

Hudibras.

The lion gave one hearty twitch, and got his feet out of the trap, but left his claws behind.

L'Estrange.

2. A contraction of the fibres.

Other confederate pairs
Contract the fibres, and the twitch produce,
Which gently pushes on the grateful food
To the wide stomach by its hollow road.

Blackmore.

Mighty physical their fear is

For soon as noise of combat near is,

Their heart, descending to their breeches,

Must give their stomachs cruel twitches.

Prior.

A fit of the stone is the cure, from the inflammation and pain occasioning convulsive twitches.

Sharp.

TWITCHGRASS. n. s. A plant.

Twitchgrass is a weed that keeps some land loose, hollow, and draws away the virtue of the ground.

Mortimer.

To TWITTER. † v. n. [zittern, Germ. to tremble.]

1. To make a sharp tremulous intermitted noise.

This must be done;

Swallows twitter on the chimney-tops.

Dryden.

They twitter cheerful, till the vernal months

Invite them back.

Thomson.

2. To be suddenly moved with any inclination; to be agitated by expectation or suspense. A low word.

My heart twitters; I am all in a twitter. Ray, N. C. Words.

A widow, which had a twittering toward a second husband, took a gossiping companion to manage the job.

L'Estrange.

3. To burst into a smile or laugh; to simper.

O the young handsome wenches, how they twitter'd!

Beaum. and Fl. Loy. Subject.

How the fool bridles! how she twitters at him!

Beaum. and Fl. Pilgrim.

TWITTER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any motion or disorder of passion; such as a violent fit of laughing, or fit of fretting.

The ancient errant knights

Won all their ladies hearts in fights,

And cut whole giants into fritters,

To put them into amorous twitters.

Hudibras.

The moon was in a heavy twitter, that her clothes never fitted her.

L'Estrange.

2. An upbraider.

TWITTINGLY. * adv. [from To twit.] With reproach;
so as to upbraid.

Sir Thomas More's lady, being sick of daughters, prayed importunately for a boy, and nothing but a boy would serve; whereupon she had a boy, which, as Sir Thomas wittily and twittingly told her, would be a boy, so long as he lived!

Junius, Sin Stigm. (1639,) p. 661.

TWITTLETWATTLE. n. s. [a ludicrous reduplication of twattle.] Tattle; gabble. A vile word.

Insipid twittletattles, frothy jests, and jingling witticisms,
inure us to a misunderstanding of things.

L'Estrange.

'TWIXT. A contraction of betwixt.

Twilight, short arbiter 'twixt day and night. Milton, P. L.

TWO. adj. [twai, Gothick; cyu, Saxon.]

1. One and one.

Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch;

Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth;

Between two blades, which bears the better temper;

Between two horses, which doth bear him best;

Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye,

I have some shallow spirit of judgement.

Shakespeare.

Three words it will three times report, and then the two latter for some times.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Fifteen chambers were to lodge us, two and two together.

Bacon.

They lay

By two and two across the common way.

Dryden.

2. It is used in composition.

Next to the raven's age, the Pylian king
Was longest liv'd of any two-legg'd thing. Dryden.
A rational animal better described man's essence, than a two-legged animal, with broad nails, and without feathers. Locke.

The two-shap'd Erichonius had his birth
Without a mother, from the teeming earth. Addison.
Her register was a two-leaved book of record, one page containing the names of her living, and the other of her deceased members. Ayliffe.

TWO'EDGED. adj. [two and edge.] Having an edge on either side.

Clarissa drew, with tempting grace,
A two-edged weapon from her shining case. Pope.

TWO'FOLD. adj. [two and fold.] Double; two of the same kind; or two different things coexisting;

Through mirkson air her ready way she makes,
Her twofold team, of which two black as pitch,
And two were brown, yet each to each unlike,
Did softly swim away. Spenser, F. Q.

Our prayer against sudden death importeth a twofold desire, that death when it cometh may give us some convenient respite, or if that be denied us of God, yet we may have wisdom to provide always before-hand. Hooker.

O thou! the earthly author of my blood,
Whose youthful spirit in me regenerate,
Doth now with twofold vigour lift me up,
To reach at victory above my head,
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. Shakspeare.

Our twofold seas wash either side. Dryden.
Time and place taken for distinguishable portions of space and duration, have each of them a twofold acceptation. Locke.
Ewes, that erst brought forth but single lambs,
Now dropp'd their twofold burdens. Prior.

Holiness may be taken in a twofold sense; for that external holiness, which belongs to persons or things, offered to God;
or for those internal graces which sanctify our natures. Atterbury.

TWO'FOLD. adv. Doubly.

A proselyte you make twofold more the child of hell than yourselves. St. Matt. xxiii. 15.

TWO'HANDED. † adj. [two and hand.]

1. That employs both hands.

With huge two-handed sway,
Brandish'd aloft, the horrid edge came down,
Wide wasting. Millon, P. L.

2. Large; bulky.

If little, then she's life and soul all o'er;
An Amazon, the large twohanded whore. Dryden.

TWO'PENNY. n. s. A small coin, valued at twice a penny.

You all shew like gilt twopences to me. Shakspeare.

TWO'TONGUED. \ adj.* [two and tongue.] Double-tongued; deceitful.

I hate the two-tongu'd hypocrite. Sandys, Ps. p. 35.

TO TYE. v. a. To bind. See TIE.

TYE. n. s. See TIE. A knot; a bond or obligation.

Lay your Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tye
For ever knit. Shakspeare.

I have no tye upon you to be true,
But that which loosen'd yours, my love to you. Dryden.

Honour's a sacred tye, the law of kings,
The noble mind's distinguishing perfection,
That aids and strengthens virtue where it meets her,
And imitates her actions where she is not;
It ought not to be sported with. Addison.

Lend me aid, I now conjure thee, lend,
By the soft tye and sacred name of friend. Pope.

TY'ER. \ n. s.* [from tye or tie.] One who unites;
one who joins.

Hymen, the tyer of hearts already ty'd. P. Fletcher, Hymn.

TY'GER. n. s. See TIGER.

TYHE'E. \ See TEHEE.* In some old dictionaries it is tyhee or tihee.

TYKE. n. s. Tyke in Scottish still denotes a dog, or one as contemptible and vile as a dog, and from thence perhaps comes teague. But see TIKE.

Base tyke, call'st thou me host? now,
By this hand, I swear I scorn the term. Shakspeare.

TYMBAL. n. s. [tymbal, French.] A kind of kettle-drum.

Yet gracious charity! indulgent guest!
Were not thy power exerted in my breast;
My speeches would send up unheeded pray'r:
The scorn of life would be but wild despair:
A tymbal's sound were better than my voice,
My faith were form, my eloquence were noise. Prior.

TY'MPAN. \ n. s.* [tympanum Lat. tympan, Fr.]

1. A drum; a timbrel. Cotgrave, and Ainsworth.

2. A frame belonging to the printing-press, covered with parchment, on which the sheets are laid to be printed. Cotgrave, and Chambers.

3. The pannel of a pillar or door.

TYMPANITES. † n. s. [τυμπανίτης, Gr.] That particular sort of dropsy that swells the belly up like a drum, and is often cured by tapping.

Tympanites, which we call the drum,
A wind. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

TO TY'MPANIZE. \ v. n.* [from tympan.] To act the part of a drummer. Coles.

TO TY'MPANIZE. \ v. a.* To stretch as the skin over the body of a drum.

If this be not to be sawn asunder as Essay, stoned as Jeremy, made a drum or tympanized, as other saints of God were.

Oley, Life of G. Herbert, (ed. 1671.) M. a. b.

TYMPANUM. n. s. [Latin.] A drum; a part of the ear, so called from its resemblance to a drum.

The three little bones in meatu auditorio, by firming the tympanum, are a great help to the hearing. Wiceman.

TY'MPANY. n. s. [from tympanum, Lat.] A kind of obstructed flatulence that swells the body like a drum; the wind dropsy.

Hope, the Christian grace, must be proportioned and attemperate to the promise: if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tumour and tympany of hope. Hammond.

He does not shew us Rome great suddenly,
As if the empire were a tympany,
But gives it natural growth, tells how and why
The little body grew so large and high. Suckling.

Others that affect
A lofty stile, swell to a tympany. Roscommon.

Pride is no more than an unnatural tympany, that rises in a bubble, and spends itself in a blast. L'Estrange.

Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence
Of likeness; thine's a tympany of sense.
A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ,
But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.

The air is so rarified in this kind of dropsical tumour, as makes it hard and tight like a drum, and from thence it is called a tympany. Arbutnot.

TY'NY. adj. Small. See TINY.

He that has a little tiny wit,
Must make content with his fortunes fit. Shakspeare.

TYPE. † n. s. [type, Fr. typus, Lat. τύπος, Gr.]

1. Emblem; mark of something.

Clean renouncing
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short bolster'd breeches, and those types of travel,
And understanding again the honest men. Shakspeare.

Thy emblem, gracious queen, the British rose,
Type of sweet rule, and gentle majesty. Prior.

2. That by which something future is prefigured.

T Y P

Informing them by types
And shadows of that destin'd seed to bruise
The serpent, by what means he shall achieve
Mankind's deliverance.

Milton, P. L.

The Apostle shews the Christian religion to be in truth and substance what the Jewish was only in type and shadow.

Tillotson.

3. A stamp; a mark. Not in use.

Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.

Shakespeare.

What good is cover'd with the face of heaven
To be discover'd, that can do me good?

— Th' advancement of your children, gentle lady,

— Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads;

— No, to the dignity and height of fortune,

The high imperial type of this earth's glory.

Shakespeare.

Which, though in their mean types small matter doth appear,

Yet both of good account are reck'ned in the shiere.

Drayton.

4. A printing letter.

This is the style and language of the first printers, as every body knows, who has been at all conversant with old books. Faust and Scheffer, the inventors, set the example in their first works from Mentz; by advertising the publick at the end of each, that they were not drawn or written by a pen, (as all books had been before,) but made by a new art and invention of printing or stamping them by characters or types of metal set in forms. Middleton on the Orig. of Printing, (1735,) p. 16.

To TYPE. v. a. To prefigure.

He ratified ceremonial and positive laws, in respect of their spiritual use and signification, and by fulfilling all things typed and prefigured by them.

White.

TY'PICK. } adj. [typique, Fr. typicus, Latin.] Em-

TY'PICAL. } blematical; figurative of something else.

The Levitical priesthood was only typical of the Christian; which is so much more holy and honourable than that, as the institution of Christ is more excellent than that of Moses.

Atterbury.

Hence that many coursers ran,
Hand-in-hand, a goodly train,
To bless the great Eliza's reign;
And in the typic glory show
What fuller bliss Maria shall bestow.

Prior.

TY'PICALLY. adv. [from typical.] In a typical manner.

This excellent communicativeness of the divine nature is typically represented and mysteriously exemplified by the Porphyrian scale of being.

Norris.

TY'PICALNESS. n. s. [from typical.] The state of being typical.

To TY'PIFY. v. a. [from type.] To figure; to shew in emblem.

The resurrection of Christ hath the power of a pattern to us, and is so typified in baptism, as an engagement to rise to newness of life.

Hammond.

Our Saviour was typified indeed by the goat that was slain; at the effusion of whose blood, not only the hard hearts of his enemies relented, but the stony rocks and veil of the temple were shattered.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

*TY'POCOSMY.** n. s. [τυπος and κοσμος, Gr.] A representation of the world.

[He] should haply find it to be a typocosmy.

Candem, Rem. Surnames.

Some books of typocosmy are nothing but a mass of words of all arts, to give men countenance, that those, which use the terms, might be thought to understand the art.

Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. 2.

TYPO'GRAPHER.† n. s. [τύπος and γράφω, Gr.] A printer.

There is a very ancient edition of this work without date, place, or typographer.

Warton, Hist. E. P. Addit. ii. 189.

T Y R

It was printed in the infancy of the typographic art.

Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 218.

Our translator's sermons, six in number, are more to be valued for their type than their doctrine, and at present are of little more use than to fill the catalogue of the typographical antiquary.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 430.

TYPOGRA'PHICALLY. adv. [from typographical.]

1. Emblematically; figuratively.

2. After the manner of printers.

TYPO'GRAPHY.† n. s. [typographie, Fr. typographia, Latin.]

1. Emblematical, figurative, or hieroglyphical representation.

Those diminutive and pamphlet treatises daily published amongst us, are pieces containing rather typography than verity.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. The art of printing.

The overplus of the money collected for the maintenance and repair of the schools is to be employed in setting up and maintaining a learned typography.

Blackstone.

*TY'RAN.** n. s. [tyran, Fr. tyrannus, Lat.] A tyrant.

He is the tyran-pike, our hearts the fry.

Donne, Poems, p. 40.

TY'RANNESS.† n. s. [from tyran; Fr. tyranne.] A she tyrant.

They were, by law of that proud tyranness,
Provok'd with wrath and envy's false surmise.

Spenser.

The tyranness doth joy to see

Spenser.

The huge massacres which her eyes do make.

Though thou to me

(Whilst I was in thy power) didst shew thyself

A most insulting tyranness, I to thee

May prove a gentle mistress.

Beaum. and Fl. Prophets.

TYRA'NNICAL. } adj. [tyrannus, Lat. tyrannique, Fr.

TYRA'NNICK. } [τυραννικός, Gr.] Suiting a tyrant; acting like a tyrant; cruel; despotick; imperious.

Charge him home that he affects

Tyrannic power.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

You have contriv'd to take

From Rome all season'd office, and to wind

Yourself into a power tyrannical.

Shakespeare.

Domitian had been tyrannical; and in his time many noble houses were overthrown by false accusations.

Bacon.

Subdue and quell, o'er all the earth,

Brute violence, and proud tyrannick power.

Milton, P. R.

If the spirit of a subject be rebellious, in a prince it will be tyrannical and intolerable.

Bp. Taylor.

She hath recourse

To tears and prayers, again she feels the smart

Of a fresh wound from the tyrannick dart.

Denham.

Our sects a more tyrannick power assume,

And would for scorpions change the rods of Rome.

Roscommon.

And by the nobles, by his commons curst,
The oppressor rul'd tyrannick where he durst;
Stretch'd o'er the poor and church his iron rod,
And treats alike his vassals and his God.

Pope.

TYRA'NNICALLY.† adv. [from tyrannical.] In manner of a tyrant.

Tarquin — having governed tyrannically, and taken from the senate all authority, was become odious to the senate, nobility, and people.

Raleigh, Arts of Emp. ch. 26.

It was in the most patient period of Roman servitude, that themes of tyrannicide made the ordinary exercise of boys at school.

Burke.

2. One who kills a tyrant.

A band of tyrannicides.

Moore, Journ. i. 216.

*TY'RANNING.** part. adj. [from tyran.] Acting the part of a tyrant.

T Y R

Love, that with thy cruel darts
Dost conquer greatest conquerors on ground,—
What glorie or what guerdon hast thou found
In feeble ladies tyranning so sore? Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 1.
To TYRANNIZE. v. n. [tyrannizer, Fr. from tyrant.]
To play the tyrant; to act with rigour and imperiousness.

Then gan Carausius tirannize anew,
And gainst the Romans bent their proper power,
And so Alectus treacherously slew,
And took on him the robe of Emperor. Spenser.

While we trust in the mercy of God thro' Christ Jesus, fear will not be able to tyrannize over us. Hooker.

I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the people's suffrages
On him, that thus doth tyrannize o'er me. Shakespeare.

A crew, whom like ambition joins
With him, or under him to tyrannize. Milton, P. L.

Beauty had crown'd you, and you must have been
The whole world's mistress, other than a queen;
All had been rivals, and you might have spar'd,
Or kill'd and tyranniz'd without a guard. Waller.

He does violence to his own faculties, tyrannizes over his own mind, and usurps the prerogative that belongs to truth alone, which is to command by its own authority. Locke.

To TYRANNIZE.* v. a. To subject or compel by tyranny.

Boisterous edicts tyrannizing the blessed ordinance of marriage into the quality of a most unnatural and unchristianly yoke. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. B. 2. ch. 20.

TYRANNOUS. adj. [from tyranny.] Tyrannical; despotick; arbitrary; severe; cruel; imperious. Not in use.

It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition, to have brought the others virtuous patience under them, think their masterhood nothing without doing injury to them. Sidney.

Lately grown into a loathing and detestation of the unjust and tyrannous rule of Harold, an usurper. Spenser.

Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father,
And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from blowing. Shakespeare.

'Tis excellent
To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant. Shakespeare.

Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas!
Than the queen's life? Shakespeare.

Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton, P. L.
After the death of this tyrannous and ambitious king, these writings came abroad. Temple.

TYRANNOUSLY.* adv. [from tyrannous.] Arbitrarily; despotically; severely; cruelly.

TYRANNY. n. s. [tyrannis, Latin; tyrannis, Greek;
tyrannie, French.]

1. Absolute monarchy imperiously administered.

Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and, in the excess of joy,
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of heav'n. Milton, P. L.

The cities fell often under tyrannies, which spring naturally out of popular governments. Temple.

T Y T

2. Unresisted and cruel power.

Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. Shakespeare.

3. Cruel government; rigorous command.

Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny lay thou thy basis sure,
For goodness dares not check thee. Shakespeare.
Suspicious dispose kings to tyranny, and husbands to jealousy. Bacon.

God in judgement just,
Subjects him from without to violent lords;
Who oft as undeservedly intral
His outward freedom; tyranny must be. Milton, P. L.

4. Severity; rigour; inclemency.

The tyranny o' the open night's too rough
For nature to endure. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

TYRANT. † n. s. [τύραννος, Gr. tyrannus, Latin.
Rowland contends that this word, with the correspondent Greek and Latin, is derived from tir, Welch and Erse, land, and rhanner, Welch, to share, q. d. tirhanner, a sharer or divider of land among his vassals. Dr. Johnson. — But see Lye's Sax. Dict. edit. Manning, Tip, Týp. "Cimbr.
item Tir, Tiir, Tyr, nomen Odini vel principis saltem Asarum, i. e. divorum septentrionalium, micè, quivis dux princeps, dominus, imperator: et inde forsan Græcorum τύραννος."]

1. An absolute monarch governing imperiously.

2. A cruel despotick and severe master; an oppressor.
Love to a yielding heart is a king, but to a resisting is a tyrant. Sidney.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st,
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to boot. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Dissembling courtesy! how fine this tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds! Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
The house of woe, and dungeon of our tyrant.

Consider those grand agents and lieutenants of the devil, by whom he scourges and plagues the world under him, to wit, tyrants; and was there ever any tyrant who was not also false and perfidious! South.

Thou meant'st to kill a tyrant, not a king. Dryden.

When tyrant custom had not shackl'd man,
But free to follow nature was the mode. Thomson.

TYRE. n. s. [properly tire.] See TIRE.

TY'THING.* n. s. A company of ten; a district; a tenth part. See TITHING.

V.

V A C

V Has two powers, expressed in modern English by two characters, V consonant and U vowel, which ought to be considered as two letters; but as they were long confounded while the two uses were annexed to one form, the old custom still continues to be followed.

U, the vowel, has two sounds; one clear, expressed at other times by eu, as obtuse; the other close, and approaching to the Italian u, or English oo, as obtund.

V, the consonant, has a sound nearly approaching to those of b and f. With b it is by the Spaniards and Gascons always confounded, and in the Runick alphabet is expressed by the same character with f, distinguished only by a diacritical point. Its sound in English is uniform. It is never mute.

V.* A numeral letter, denoting five.

VA'CANCY. n. s. [from vacant.]

1. Empty space; vacuity.

How is't
That thus you bend your eye on vacancy,
And with th' incorporal air do hold discourse?

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Chasm; space unfilled.

The reader finds a wide vacancy, and knows not how to transport his thoughts to the next particular, for want of some connecting idea.

Watts, Logick.

3. [vacance, Fr.] State of a post or employment when it is unsupplied.

They were content to bribe them with the nomination of some bishops, and disposal of the revenues of some churches during the vacancies.

Locke.

In the vacancy of a bishop, the guardian of the spiritualities was summoned to parliament in the bishop's room.

Ayliffe.

4. [vacances, Fr.] Time of leisure; relaxation; intermission; time unengaged.

If, sometimes, each other's eyes we meet,
Those little vacancies from toil are sweet.

Dryden.

The daily intervals of time and vacancies from necessary labour, together with the one day in seven in the Christian world, allow sufficient time.

Watts.

5. Listlessness; emptiness of thought.

When alone, or in company, they sit still without doing any thing, I like it worse; for all dispositions to idleness or vacancy, even before they are habits, are dangerous.

Wotton.

V A C

VA'CANT. adj. [vacant, Fr. vacans, Lat.]

1. Empty; unfilled; void.

Why should the air so impetuously rush into the cavity of the receiver, if there were before no vacant room to receive it?

Boyle.

A better race to bring into their vacant room.

Milton, P. L.

2. Free; unencumbered; uncrowded.

Religion is the interest of all; but philosophy of those only that are at leisure, and vacant from the affairs of the world.

More, Div. Dialog.

A very little part of our life is so vacant from uneasinesses, as to leave us free to the attraction of remoter good.

Locke.

3. Not filled by an incumbent, or possessor.

Lest the fiend invade vacant possession.

Milton, P. L.

Others when they allowed the throne vacant, thought the succession should immediately go to the next heir.

Swift.

4. Being at leisure; disengaged.

They which have the government, scatter the army abroad, and place them in villages to take their victuals of them, at such vacant times as they lie not in camp.

Spenser.

Sir John Berkley was the more vacant for that service, by the reduction of Barnstaple.

Clarendon.

Besides those portions of time which the necessities of nature and of civil life extorted from him, there was not a minute of the day which he left vacant.

Fell.

The memory relieves the mind in her vacant moments, and prevents any chasms of thought, by ideas of what is past.

Addison.

5. Thoughtless; empty of thought; not busy.

The wretched slave,

Who with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,

Gets him to rest, cram'd with distressful bread.

Shakspeare.

The duke had a pleasant and vacant face, proceeding from a singular assurance in his temper.

Wotton, D. of Bucks.

TO VA'CADE. v. a. [vacare, Lat.]

1. To annul; to make void; to make of no authority.

That after-act vacating the authority of the precedent, tells the world that some remorse touched even Strafford's most implacable enemies.

King Charles.

The necessity of observing the Jewish Sabbath was vacated by the apostolical institution of the Lord's day.

Nelson.

2. To make vacant; to quit possession of: as, he vacated the throne.

3. To defeat; to put an end to.

He vacates my revenge;

For while he trusts me, 'twere so base a part
To fawn, and yet betray.

Dryden.

VACA'TION. n. s. [vacation, Fr. vacatio, Lat.]

1. Intermission of juridical proceedings, or any other stated employments; recess of courts or senates.

Vacation is all that time which passes between term and term, at London. Cowel.

As these clerks want not their full task of labour during the open term, so there is for them whereupon to be occupied in the vacation only. Bacon, Off. of Alienat.

2. Leisure; freedom from trouble or perplexity.

Benefit of peace, quiet, and vacation for piety, have rendered it necessary in every Christian commonwealth, by laws to secure propriety. Hammond on Fundamentals.

VA'CCARY. n. s. [vacca, Lat.] A cow-house; a cow-pasture. Bailey.

To VA'CCINATE.* v. a. [from vacca, Lat. a cow.] To inoculate with vaccine matter. Entick.

VACCINA'TION.* n. s. [from vaccinate.] The act of inserting vaccine matter; inoculation for the cow-pox. James, and Entick.

VA'CCINE.* adj. [from vacca, Lat.] Of or belonging to a cow. H. Tooke.

VA'CILLANCY. n. s. [vacillans, from vacillo, Lat. vacillant, Fr.] A state of wavering; fluctuation; inconstancy. Not much in use.

I deny that all mutability implies imperfection, though some does, as that vacillancy in human souls, and such mutations as are found in corporeal matter. More, Div. Dialog.

To VA'CILLATE.* v. n. [vacillo, Lat.] To waver; to be inconstant. Cockeram.

VACILLA'TION.† n. s. [vacillatio, from vacillo, Lat. vacillation, Fr.] The act or state of reeling or staggering.

By your variety and vacillation, you lost the acceptable time of the first grace.

Bacon, Charge in the Star-Ch. against W. Talbot.

The muscles keep the body upright, and prevent its falling, by readily assisting against every vacillation. Derham.

To VA'CUATE.* v. a. [vacuo, Latin.] To make void.

Such an unhappy force there is in a mistaken zeal, that it dissolves the closest bonds, violates all obligations, and like the Pharisees' Corban, under the pretence of an extraordinary service to God, vacuates all duty to man.

Secular Priest Exposed, (1703,) p. 27.

VA'CUIST. n. s. [from vacuum.] A philosopher that holds a vacuum: opposed to a plenist.

Those spaces, which the vacuists would have to be empty, because they are manifestly devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter. Boyle.

VACU'ITY. n. s. [vacuitas, from vacuus, Lat. vacuité, Fr.]

1. Emptiness; state of being unfilled.

Hunger is such a state of vacuity, as to require a fresh supply of aliment. Arbutnot.

2. Space unfilled; space unoccupied.

In filling up vacuities, turning out shadows and ceremonies, by explicit prescription of substantial duties, which those shadows did obscurely represent. Hammond on Fundamentals.

He, that seat soon failing, meets

A vast vacuity.

Body and space are quite different things, and a vacuity is interspersed among the particles of matter. Milton, P. L. Bentley.

God, who alone can answer all our longings, and fill every vacuity of our soul, should entirely possess our heart. Rogers.

Redeeming still at night these vacuities of the day. Fell.

3. Inanity; want of reality.

The soul is seen, like other things, in the mirror of its effects: but if they'll run behind the glass to catch at it, their expectations will meet with vacuity and emptiness. Glanville.

VA'CUOUS. adj. [vacuus, Lat. vacuë, Fr.] Empty; unfilled.

Boundless the deep, because I AM who fill

VA'CUOUSNESS.* n. s. [from vacuous.] State of being empty.

Nothing nauseates the mind so soon, as an emptiness of thoughts, bespoken and fitted for her entertainment; since in that vacuousness the winds and vapours of tediousness and displicence arise, and fume out of our imagination into our spirits. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 352.

VA'CUUM. n. s. [Latin.] Space unoccupied by matter.

Our enquiries about vacuum, or space and atoms, will shew us some good practical lessons. Watts.

To VADE.† v. n. [vado, Lat.] To vanish; to pass away. A word useful in poetry, but not received. Yet it was in use before Spenser employed it, to whom Dr. Johnson refers; and was common in prose.

Thy sun shall no more go down, and thy moone shall not
vade, because the Lord shall be thy everlasting light.

Stapleton, Fortr. of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 56.

Their vapour vaded. Spenser, F. Q.
Her power, disperse through all the world, did vade,
To shew that all in th' end to nought shall fade.

Spenser, Ruins of Rome.

Be ever gloried here thy sovereign name,
That thou may'st smile on all which thou hast made;

Whose frown alone can shake this earthly frame,
And at whose touch the hills in smook shall vade. Wotton.

VA'GABOND. adj. [vagabundus, low Latin; vagabond, Fr.]

1. Wandering without any settled habitation; wanting a home.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death;
Vagabond exile: yet I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakspeare, Coriol.
A vagabond debtor may be cited in whatever place or jurisdiction he is found. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. Wandering; vagrant.

This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, lacqueying the varying tide. Shakspeare.
Their prayers by envious winds
Blown vagabond or frustrate. Milton.

VA'GABOND. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A vagrant; a wanderer, commonly in a sense of reproach.

We call those people wanderers and vagabonds, that have no dwelling place. Raleigh, Hist of the World.
Reduc'd, like Hannibal, to seek relief
From court to court, and wander up and down
A vagabond in Afric. Addison, Cato.

2. One that wanders illegally, without a settled habitation.

Vagabond is a person without a home. Watts.

VA'GABONDY.* n. s. [from vagabond.] Beggary; knavery. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

To VAGA'RY.* v. n. [vaguer, old Fr.] To wander; to gad; to range; to roam; to remove often from place to place. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

VAGA'RY.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A wandering.

The people called Phœnices gave themselves to long vagaries, and continuall viages by sea.

Rich, Transl. of Herodot. (1584.)

2. A wild freak; a capricious frolick.

They chang'd their minds,
Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,
As they wou'd dance.

Milton, P. L.

Would your son engage in some frolick, or take a vagary, were it not better he should do it with, than without your knowledge?

Locke on Education.

VA'GIENT.* adj. [vagiens, Lat.] Crying like a child.
Not in use.

The cradle of the Cretan Jove,
And guardians of his vagient infancy.

More, Song of the Soul, (1647,) iii. iv. 42.

VAGINOPE'NNOUS. adj. [vagina and penna, Latin.]
Sheathwinged; having the wings covered with hard cases.

VA'GOUS. adj. [vagus, Lat. vague, Fr.] Wandering;
unsettled. Not in use.

Such as were born and begot of a single woman, through a vagous lust, were called Sportii.

Ayliffe.

VA'GRANCY.† n. s. [from vagrant.] A state of wandering; unsettled condition.

Moses did not lose his affection towards his countrymen because he was by one of them threatened away into banishment and vagrancy.

Barrow, vol. iii. S. 5.

VA'GRANT.† adj. [vagarant, old Fr. wandering.
Kelham. And so in old Engl. "The people remained in the woods and mountains, vagarant
and dispersed like the wild beasts." Puttenham, Arte of Engl. Poesie, B. i. ch. 3.] Wandering; unsettled; vagabond; unfixed in place.

Do not oppose popular mistakes and surmises, or vagrant and fictitious stories.

More, Div. Dialogues.

Take good heed what men will think and say;

That beauteous Emma vagrant courses took,
Her father's house and civil life forsook.

Prior.

Her lips no living bard, I weet,
May say how red, how round, how sweet;
Old Homer only could indite
Their vagrant grace, and soft delight:
They stand recorded in his book,
When Helen smil'd, and Hebe spoke.

Prior.

VA'GRANT. n. s. A sturdy beggar; wanderer;
vagabond; man unsettled in habitation. In an ill sense.

Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view,
Train'd to assault, and disciplin'd to kill.

Prior.

You'll not the progress of your atoms stay,
Nor to collect the vagrants find a way.

Blackmore.

To relieve the helpless poor; to make sturdy vagrants relieve themselves; to hinder idle hands from being mischievous, are things of evident use.

Atterbury.

Ye vagrants of the sky,

To right or left, unheeded take your way.

Pope.

VAGUE. adj. [vague, Fr. vagus, Lat.]

1. Wandering; vagrant; vagabond.

Gray encouraged his men to set upon the vague villains, good neither to live peaceably, nor to fight.

Hayward.

2. Unfixed; unsettled; undetermined; indefinite.

The perception of being, or not being, belongs no more to these vague ideas, signified by the terms, whatsoever and thing, than it does to any other ideas.

Locke.

VAIL.† n. s. [voile, French. This word is now frequently written veil, from velum, Latin; and the verb veil, from the verb velo; but the old orthography commonly derived it, I believe rightly, from the French. Dr. Johnson. — The old orthography inclined to the Latin word velum. "They [the nuns] were veled." Stapleton, Fortr. of the Faith, 1565. fol. 116. "A velc, that wimpled was full low." Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 4.]

1. A curtain; a cover thrown over any thing to be concealed.

While they supposed to lie hid in their secret sins, they were scattered under a dark vail of forgetfulness.

Wisdom.

2. A part of female dress, by which the face and part of the shape is concealed.3. Money given to servants. It is commonly used in the plural. See VALE.

To VAIL. v. a. To cover. See To VEIL.

To VAIL.† v. a. [avaler le bonnet, French. Addison writes it veil, ignorantly. Dr. Johnson. — The etymology appears in the Fr. phrase à mont et à val, from top to bottom, from mountain to valley.
Douce, Illustr. of Shaks. i. 240. The word is sometimes written vale.]

1. To let fall; to suffer to descend.

They stiffly refused to vail their bonnets, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by seafarers.

Carew.

The virgin 'gan her beavoir vale,
And thank'd him first, and thus began her tale.

Fairfax.

2. To let fall in token of respect.

Certain of the Turks' gallies, which would not vail their top-sails, the Venetians fiercely assailed.

Knolles, Hist.

Before my princely state let your poor greatness fall,
And vail your tops to me, the sovereign of you all.

Dryden.

They had not the ceremony of veiling the bonnet in salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads.

Addison.

3. To fall; to let sink in fear, or for any other interest.

That furious Scot,
'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
Of those that turn'd their backs.

Shakspeare.

His jollity is down, valed to the ground, sir.

Beaumont and Fl. Wife for a Month.

To VAIL.† v. n. To yield; to give place; to shew respect by yielding. In this sense, the modern writers have ignorantly written veil, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the example from South. Vale or vail, the ancient spelling, should therefore be exemplified.

That any petty hill upon the English side
Should dare, not (with a crouch) to vale unto their pride.

Dryden, Polyolb. S. 12.

It is fit that both should vaille to the inevitable danger of those mischievous inconveniences.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 9.

Thy convenience must veil to thy neighbour's necessity;
and thy very necessities must yield to thy neighbour's extremity.

South.

VA'ILER.* n. s. [from To vail.] One who shews respect by yielding. Obsolete.

He is high in his own imagination:—when he goes, he looks who looks: if he finds not a good store of vailers, he comes home stiff.

Overbury, Charact. (1627,) E. 5. b.

VAIN.† adj. [vain, old Fr. vanus, Lat.]

1. Fruitless; ineffectual.

Let no man speak again
To alter this; for counsel is but vain.

Shakspeare.

Vain is the force of man,

To crush the pillars which the pile sustain.

Dryden.

2. Empty; unreal; shadowy.

Before the passage horrid Hydra stands,
Gorgons, Geryon with his triple frame,
And vain chimera, vomits empty flame.

Dryden, Æn.

Unmov'd his eyes, and wet his beard appears;
And shedding vain, but seeming real tears.

Dryden.

3. Meanly proud; proud of petty things: with of before the cause of vanity.

No folly like vain glory; nor any thing more ridiculous than for a vain man to be still boasting of himself. L' Etrange.

He wav'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.

The minstrels play'd on ev'ry side,
Vain of their art, and for the mastery vy'd. Dryden.

To be vain is rather a mark of humility than pride. Vain men delight in telling what honours have been done them, what great company they have kept, and the like; by which they plainly confess, that these honours were more than their due, and such as their friends would not believe, if they had not been told: whereas a man truly proud, thinks the honours below his merit, and scorns to boast. Swift.

Ah friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
To raise the thought, and touch the heart, be thine. Pope.

Here learn the great unreal wants to feign,
Unpleasing truths here mortify the vain. Savage.

Ye vain! desist from your erroneous strife;
Be wise, and quit the false sublime of life;
The true ambition there alone resides,
Where justice vindicates, and wisdom guides. Young.

4. Shewy; ostentatious.

Load some vain church with old theatrick state. Pope.

5. Idle; worthless; unimportant.

Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
Built their fond hopes of glory, or lasting fame,
Or happiness. Milton, P. L.

He heard a grave philosopher maintain,
That all the actions of our life were vain,
Which with our sense of pleasure not conspir'd. Denham.

To your vain answer will you have recourse,
And tell 'tis ingenite active force. Blackmore.

6. False; not true.

'Tis holy sport, to be a little vain,
When the sweet breath of flattery conquers strife.
Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

7. In VAIN. To no purpose; to no end; ineffectually; without effect.

He tempts in vain. Milton.
Providence and nature never did any thing in vain. L' Etrange.

Strong Halys stands in vain; weak Phlegys flies. Dryden.

The philosophers of old did in vain enquire whether summum bonum consisted in riches, bodily delights, virtue, or contemplation. Locke.

If we hope for what we are not likely to possess, we act and think in vain, and make life a greater dream and shadow than it really is. Addison, Spect.

If from this discourse one honest man shall receive satisfaction, I shall think that I have not written nor lived in vain. West on the Resurrection.

VAINGLO'RIOUS. adj. [vanus and gloriosus, Latin.]

Boasting without performances; proud in disproportion to desert.

Vain-glorious man, when flutt'ring wind does blow,
In his light wings is lifted up to sky. Spenser.

Strength to glory aspires

Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton, P. L.
This his arrogant and vain-glorious expression witnesseth. Hale.

VAINGLO'RIOUSLY. * adv. [from vainglorious.] With vain-glory; with empty pride.

Heretofore in the pursuance of fame and foreign dominion,
[it] spent itself vaingloriously abroad. Milton, Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.

It doth not vaingloriously boast.

VAINGLO'RY. n. s. [vana gloria, Latin.] Pride above merit; empty pride; pride in little things.

He had nothing of vain-glory, but yet kept state and majesty to the height; being sensible, that majesty maketh the people bow, but vain-glory boweth to them. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Expose every blast of vain-glory, every idle thought, to be chastened by the rod of spiritual discipline. Taylor.

This extraordinary person, out of his natural aversion, to

VOL. V.

vain-glory, wrote several pieces, which he did not assume the honour of. Addison.

A monarch's sword, when mad vain-glory draws;
Not Waller's wreath can hide the nation's scar. Pope.

VA'INLY. adv. [from vain.]

1. Without effect; to no purpose; in vain.

Our cannons malice vainly shall be spent
Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shakespeare.

In weak complaints you vainly waste your breath;
They are not tears that can revenge his death. Dryden.

2. Proudly; arrogantly.

Humility teaches us to think neither vainly nor vauntingly of ourselves. Delany.

3. Idly; foolishly.

Nor vainly hope to be invulnerable. Milton, P. L.
If Lentulus be ambitious, he shall be vainly credulous; presuming his advancement to be decreed by the Sybilline oracles. Grew, Cosmol.

VA'INNESS.† n. s. [from vain.] The state of being vain; pride; falsehood; emptiness.

I hate ingratitude more in a man,
Than lying, vainness, babbling. Shakespeare.

To descend to those extreme anxieties, and foolish cavils, of grammarians, is able to break a wit in pieces; being a work of manifold misery and vainness to be "elementarii senes." B. Jonson, Discoveries.

VAIR.* n. s. [vair, Fr. scribeus, Lat.] In heraldry, a kind of fur, or doubling, consisting of divers little pieces, argent and azure, resembling a bell-glass. Chambers.

VAIR, or VA'IRY.† adj. Charged or chequered with vair; variegated with argent and azure colours, in heraldry, when the term is vairy proper; and with other colours, when it is vair or vairy composed.

VA'IVODE. n. s. [vaiwod, a governor, Slavonian.] A prince of the Dacian provinces.

He desired nothing more than to have confirmed his authority in the minds of the vulgar, by the present and ready attendance of the vayvod. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

VA'LANCE.† n. s. [from Valencia, whence the use of them came. Skinner, and Dr. Johnson. — The word should therefore be written valence; as, indeed, anciently it was; it was also not confined to the ornaments of a bed: "Before him he had his two great crosses of silver, — his cardinal's hat, and a gentleman carrying his valence (otherwise called his cloak-bag), which was made of fine scarlet, altogether embroidered very richly with gold, having in it a cloake." Cavendish, Life of Card. Wolsey. "Like gold valence, let some curls hang dangling, &c." Fanshaw, Tr. of Past. Fido.] The fringes or drapery hanging round the tester and stead of a bed.

My house

Is richly furnished with plate and gold;
Valance of Venice, gold in needlework. Shakespeare.

Thrust the valance of the bed, that it may be full in sight. Swift.

To VA'LANCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To decorate with drapery. Not in use.

Old friend, why thy face is valanc'd since I saw thee last;
com'st thou to beard me? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

VALE.† n. s. [val, Fr. vallis, Lat.]

1. A low ground; a valley; a place between two hills. Vale is a poetical word. Dr. Johnson. — A wide open space between hills is called a vale. If it be of smaller dimensions, we call it a valley. But when this space is contracted to a chasm, we call it a glen. Gilpin.

In Ida vale: who knows not Ida vale?

An hundred shepherds woned.

Met in the vale of Arde.

Spenser.
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Anchises, in a flow'ry vale,

Review'd his muster'd race, and took the tale.

Dryden.

In those fair vales by nature form'd to please,

Where Guadalquivir serpentines with ease.

Harte.

2. [From avail, profit; or vale, farewell. If from avail, it must be written vail, as Dryden writes. If from vale, which I think is right, it must be vale. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson is here unquestionably mistaken. The true spelling is vail, and the word is a mere abridgement of avail, which was the ancient English term, signifying not merely money given to servants, but any casual emoluments belonging to any office or station. See Ames's Hist. of Printing, edit. Herbert, under T. Rider, who was beadle of the company of Stationers, and in 1587 resigned his office, when J. Wolfe was chosen to do the duty, and "to have x<sup>l</sup>. with the availes, &c." Malone.] Money given to servants.

Since our knights and senators account

To what their sordid, begging vails amount;

Judge what a wretched share the poor attends,

Whose whole subsistence on those alms depends.

Dryden.

His revenue, besides vales, amounted to thirty pounds.

Swift.

VALEDICTION.† n. s. [valedico, Lat.] A farewell.

A valediction forbidding to weep.

Donne.

Letters were read, together with a form of valediction and farewell.

Hales, Lett. Syn. of Dort, p. 80.

VALEDICTORY.† adj. [from valedico, Lat.] Bidding farewell.

The shore was thronged with crowds of people, that followed him to the water's edge, — studious to pay to their popular chief governor every valedictory honour that their zeal and attention could devise.

Cumberland, Mem.

VALENTINE.† n. s.

1. A sweetheart, chosen on Valentine's day.

Now all nature seem'd in love,

And birds had drawn their valentines.

Wotton.

A choosing of persuasions, as country men choose valentines, that which they chance to meet with first after their coming abroad.

Hammond, Works, i. 210.

2. A letter sent by one young person to another on Valentine's day; a billet doux. This is also a Scottish meaning of the word, according to Dr. Jamieson, who, however, considers the English word as confined to persons. But he is mistaken. Dr. Johnson indeed here overpasses it: but it is old English, and common to this day.

Many allurements there are; nods, jests, winks, — tokens, favours, symbols, letters, valentines, &c. For which cause, be-like, Godfridus would not have women learn to write!

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 493.

VALE'RIAN.† n. s. [valeriana, Latin; valerian, Fr.] A plant.

Valerian then he crops, and purposely doth stamp,

T' apply unto the place, that's haled with the cramp.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

VA'LET. n. s. [valet, French.] A waiting servant. See VARLET.

Giving cast-clothes to be worn by valets, has a very ill effect upon little minds.

Addison.

VALETUDINARIAN. } adj. [valetudinaire, Fr. valetudo,

VALETUDINARY. } Lat.] Weakly; sickly; infirm of health.

Physic, by purging noxious humours, prevents sickness in the healthy, or recourse thereof in the valetudinary.

Browne.

Shifting from the warmer vallies, to the colder hills, or from the hills to the vales, is a great benefit to the valetudinary, feeble part of mankind.

Derham.

Some patients have been liable to this symptom, and reduced by it to a valetudinary and very unequal state of health.

Blackmore.

Cold of winter, by stopping the pores of perspiration, keeps the warmth more within; whereby there is a greater quantity of spirits generated in healthful animals, for the case is quite otherwise in valetudinary ones.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

VALETUDINARIAN.* n. s. One who is weakly, sickly, or infirm of health.

Many valetudinarians, many sickly persons, that scarce ever in their lives knew what health was, have yet outlived and trod upon the graves of those who have enjoyed it in the greatest perfection.

Bp. Bull, Works, ii. 734.

A pale, sickly, spindle-legged generation of valetudinarians.

Tatler, No. 148.

Crassus is an old lethargick valetudinary.

Guardian, No. 102.

Hale, a very valiant fencer, undertook to teach that science in a book, and was laughed at.

Walton.

The church of Antioch might meet at that time to celebrate the memory of such a valiant combat and martyr of Christ.

Nelson.

VA'LIANT.* n. s. A valiant person. Not in use.

Four battles against the Philistines, wherein four valiants of David slay four giants.

2 Sam. xxi. Contents of the Chapter.

VA'LIANTLY. adv. [from valiant.] Stoutly; with personal strength; with personal bravery.

Farewel, kind lord; fight valiantly to-day:

Thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour.

Shakespeare.

It was the duty of a good soldier valiantly to withstand his enemies, and not to be troubled with any evil hap.

Knolles.

VA'LIANTNESS. n. s. [from valiant.] Valour; personal bravery; puissance; fierceness; stoutness.

Thy valiantness was mine; thou suck'dst it from me.

Shakespeare.

Shew not thy valiantness in wine.

Eccles. xxxi. 25.

Achimets having won the top of the walls, by the valiantness of the defendants was forced to retire.

Knolles.

VA'LID. adj. [valide, French; validus, Lat.]

1. Strong; powerful; efficacious; prevalent.

Perhaps more valid arms,

Weapons more violent, when next we meet,

May serve to better us, and worse our foes.

Milton, P. L.

2. Having intellectual force; prevalent; weighty; conclusive.

A difference in their sentiments as to particular questions, is no valid argument against the general truth believed by them, but rather a clearer and more solid proof of it.

Stephens.

VALI'DITY. n. s. [validité, Fr. from valid.]

1. Force to convince; certainty.

You are persuaded of the validity of that famous verse, 'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear.

Pope.

2. Value. A sense not used.

To thee, and thine,

Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;

No less in space, validity, and pleasure,

Than that conferr'd on Gonerill.

Shakespeare.

VALLA'NCY. n. s. [from valance.] A large wig that shades the face.

But you, loud Sirs, who through your curls look big,
Criticks in plume and white vallancy wig. Dryden.

VALLA'TION.* n. s. [vallatus, Latin.] An intrenchment.

The vallation south-west of Dorchester in this county, called Dyke-hills, consisting of two ridges or borders with an intermediate trench, although so near a Roman town and road, is not Roman, but I imagine Saxon or Danish.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 70.

VALLATORY.* adj. [vallatus, Latin.] Enclosing as by measure. Not in use.

Mention is made in Ezekiel of a measuring reed of six cubits: — with such differences of reeds, vallatory, sagittary, scriptory, and others, they might be furnished in Judea.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 82.

V'ALLEY. n. s. [vallée, Fr. vallis, Lat.] A low ground; a hollow between hills.

Vallies are the intervals betwixt mountains. Woodward.

Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasure prove,
That hills and vallies yield.

Raleigh.

Sweet interchange of hill and valley.

Milton.

I have been ready to freeze on the top of a bill; and in an hour's time after, have suffered as great inconvenience from the heat of the valley.

Brown, Travels.

V'ALLISE.* n. s. [valleys, Dutch; valise, French.] A portmanteau; a wallet.

I promise

To keep my master's privities lock'd up

In the vallies of my trust, lock'd close for ever.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

VALLUM.* n. s. [Latin.] A trench; a fence; a wall.

Another vallum between the two seas more southward, and of a much greater length. Temple, Intr. Hist. of Engl. p. 39.

The vallum or ridged bank, seemingly a vicinal way, if not a rampart, crossing the Ikenild-street within two miles of Euelme and near Nuffield, is called Grimesditch.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 55.

V'ALOROUS. adj. [from valour.] Brave; stout; valiant.

The famous warriors of the antique world

Ue'd trophies to erect in stately wise,

In which they would the records have enroll'd,

Of their great deeds and valorous emprise.

Spenser.

Captain Jamy is a marvellous valorous gentleman.

Shakspeare.

V'ALOROUSLY.† adv. [from valorous.] In a brave manner.

I'll pay it as valourously as I may.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

V'ALOUR. n. s. [valeur, Fr. valor, Lat. Ainsworth.] Personal bravery; strength; prowess; puissance; stoutness.

That I may pour the spirits in thine ear,

And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,

All that impedes thee.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Here I contest

As hotly and as nobly with thy love,

As ever in ambitious strength I did

Contend against thy valour.

Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

When valour preys on reason,

It eats the sword it fights with.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

An innate valour appeared in him, when he put himself upon the soldier's defence, as he received the mortal stab.

Howell.

For contemplation he, and valour form'd;

For softness she, and sweet attractive grace.

Milton, P. L.

Such were these giants; men of high renown!

For, in those days, might only shall be admir'd,

And valour, and heroic virtue, call'd.

Milton, P. L.

Valour gives awe, and promises protection to those who want heart or strength to defend themselves. This makes the authority of men among women; and that of a master-buck in a numerous herd.

Temple, Miscel.

V'ALUABLE.† adj. [valable, Fr. from value.]

1. Precious; being of great price.

Remote countries cannot convey their commodities by land to those places, where on account of their rarity they are desired and become valuable. Robertson.

2. Worthy; deserving regard.

A just account of that valuable person, whose remains lie before us. Atterbury.

The value of several circumstances in story, lessens very much by distance of time; though some minute circumstances are very valuable. Swift.

V'ALUABLENESS.* n. s. [from valuable.] Preciousness; worth. Johnson, in V. Preciousness.

VALUATION. n. s. [from value.]

1. The act of setting a value; appraisement.

Humility in man consists not in denying any gift that is in him, but in a just valuation of it, rather thinking too meanly than too highly. Ray on the Creation.

2. Value set upon any thing.

No reason I, since of your lives you set

So slight a valuation, should reserve

My crack'd one to more care.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Take out of men's minds false valuations, and it would leave the minds of a number of men, poor shrunken things.

Bacon.

The writers expressed not the valuation of the denarius, without regard to its present valuation.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

V'ALUATOR. n. s. [from value.] An appraiser; one who sets upon any thing its price. A word which I have found no where else.

What valuators will the bishops make use of?

Swift.

V'ALUE. n. s. [value, Fr. valor, Latin.]

1. Price; worth.

Ye are physicians of no value.

Job, xiii.

Learn to live for your own sake, and the service of God; and let nothing in the world be of any value with you, but that which you can turn into a service to God, and a means of your future happiness.

Law.

2. High rate.

Cæsar is well acquainted with your virtues,

And therefore sets this value on your life:

Let him but know the price of Cato's friendship,

And name your terms.

Addison.

3. Rate; price equal to the worth of the thing bought.

He sent him money; it was with this obliging testimony, that his design was not to pay him the value of his pictures, because they were above any price.

Dryden.

To V'ALUE. v. a. [valoir, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To rate at a certain price.

When the country grows better inhabited, the tithes and other obventions will be more augmented, and better valued.

Spenser.

A mind valuing his reputation at the due price, will repute all dishonest gain much inferior thereunto.

Carew, Survey.

God alone values right the good.

Milton.

2. To rate highly; to have in high esteem.

Some of the finest treatises in dialogue, many very valued pieces of French, Italian, and English, appear.

Addison.

He values himself upon the compassion with which he relieved the afflicted.

Atterbury.

To him your orchard's early fruits are due,

A pleasing off'ring, when 'tis made by you;

He values these.

Pope.

3. To appraise; to estimate.

If he be poorer than thy estimation, the priest shall value him.

Lev. xxvii. 8.

4. To be worth; to be equal in worth to.

The peace between the French and us not values

The cost that did conclude it.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

5. To take account of.

If a man be in sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock than with; for the mind doth value every moment.

Bacon.

6. To reckon at, with respect to number or power.
The queen is valued thirty thousand strong :
Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shakspeare.
7. To consider with respect to importance; to hold important.
The king must take it ill,
So slightly valued in his messenger. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Neither of them valued their promises, according to rules of honour or integrity. Clarendon.
8. To compare with respect to price or excellence.
It cannot be valued with the gold of ophir. Job, xxviii. 16.
9. To raise to estimation. This is a sense not now in use.
She ordered all things, resisting the wisdom of the wisest, by making the possessor thereof miserable; valuing the folly of the most foolish, by making the success prosperous. Sidney.
Some value themselves to their country by jealousies of the crown. Temple.
Vanity, or a desire of valuing ourselves by shewing others' faults. Temple.
- VA'LUELESS. adj. [from value.] Being of no value.
A counterfeit
Resembling majesty; which, touch'd and tried,
Proves valueless. Shakspeare, K. John.
- VA'LUER. n. s. [from value.] One that values.
Hammond was no valuer of trifles. Fell.
- VALVE. n. s. [valva, Latin.]
1. A folding door.
Swift through the valves the visionary fair
Repass'd. Pope, Odys.
Opening their valves, self-mov'd on either side,
The adamantine doors expanded wide:
When death commands they close, when death commands divide. Harte.
2. Any thing that opens over the mouth of a vessel.
This air, by the opening of the valve, and forcing up of the sucker, may be driven out. Boyle.
3. [In anatomy.] A kind of membrane, which opens in certain vessels to admit the blood, and shuts to prevent its regress.
The arteries, with a contractile force, drive the blood still forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
- VA'LVULE. n. s. [valvule, Fr.] A small valve.
- VAMP.† n. s. [avampies, old Span. See To VAMP.] The upper leather of a shoe, according to Ainsworth; a sock, according to Coles.
- To VAMP*.† v. a. [This is supposed probably enough by Skinner to be derived from avant, Fr. before; and to mean laying on a new outside. Dr. Johnson. — Much more probably from the ancient Spanish word avampies, "la parte de la polayna ó botin que cubre el empeyne del pie; tibialium extremitas super pedis verticem decidens." Dict. Leng. Castell. Acad.] To piece an old thing with some new part.
You wish
To vamp a body with a dangerous physick,
That's sure of death without. Shakspeare, Coriol.
Dare your vamping valour, goodman cobler,
Clap a new sole to the kingdom? Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.
This opinion hath been vamped up by Cardan. Bentley.
I had never much hopes of your vamp play. Swift.
- VA'MPER. n. s. [from vamp.] One who pieces out an old thing with something new.
- To VA'MPER*.* v. n. To vapour or swagger. North. Grose.
- VA'MPIRE.* n. s. [vampur, German, bloodsucker.]
1. A pretended demon, said to delight in sucking human blood, and to animate the bodies of dead

- persons, which, when dug up, are said to be found florid and full of blood. Of these imaginary beings many stories are told in Hungary. Ricaut, in his State of the Greek and Armenian Churches, (1679,) gives a curious account of this superstitious persuasion, p. 278. et seq.
Can Russia, can the Hungarian vampire,
With whom call in the Swedes and empire;
Can four such powers, who one assail,
Deserve our praise should they prevail?
Mallet, Zephyr or The Stratagem.
2. A kind of bat.
This is the bat to which Linnæus assigned the title of vampyre, on the supposition of its being the species of which so many extraordinary accounts have been given, relative to its power of sucking the blood both of men and cattle. Dr. Shaw.
- VAN. n. s. [from avant, French.]
1. The front of an army; the first line.
Before each van prick forth the airy knights. Milton, P. L.
The foe he had survey'd,
Arrang'd, as t' him they did appear,
With van, main battle, wings and rear. Hudibras.
Van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles hast'ning up behind. Dryden.
2. [van, Fr. vannus, Latin.] Any thing spread wide by which a wind is raised; a fan.
The other token of their ignorance of the sea was an oar, they call it a corn-van. Broome on the Odys.
3. A wing with which the air is beaten.
His sail-broad vans
He spreads for flight, and in the surging smoke
Up-lifted, spurns the ground. Milton, P. L.
A fiery globe
Of angels on full sail of wing flew nigh,
Who on their plummy vans receiv'd him soft
From his uneasy station, and upbore,
As on a floating couch, through the blithe air. Milton, P. R.
His disabled wing unstrung:
He wheel'd in air, and stretch'd his vans in vain;
His vans no longer could his flight sustain. Dryden.
The vans are broad on one side, and narrower on the other;
both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derham.
- To VAN*. v. a. [from vannus, Latin; vanner, French.]
To fan; to winnow. Not in use.
The corn, which in vanning lieth lowest, is the best: Bacon.
- VA'NCOURIER.† n. s. [avantcourier, French.] A harbinger; a precursor.
Fearful sights, and great signs, as the van-carriers and out-guard to that more terrible desolation which was to follow them. Spencer on Prod. (1665), p. 67.
- VA'NDALICK.* adj. [from the Vandals, a fierce and rude people descended from the Goths.] Barbarous; resembling the character of the Vandals.
From what hath past, rash divines might be apt to charge this holy man, so meek of spirit, with enthusiasm, with a brutal spite to reason, and with more than Vandalic rage against human learning. Warburton, Doct. of Grace, p. 300.
- VA'NDALISM.* n. s. The rude and barbarous state or character of the Vandals.
I regard all the conquests of France as so many epochas, and stages, in the career of a new vandalism and darkness, which are preparing to involve all human society. Ld. Auckland, Consid. P. ii. p. 23.
- VANE. n. s. [vaene, Dutch.] A plate hung on a pin to turn with the wind.
A man she wou'd spell backward;
If tall, a lance ill-headed;
If speaking, why a vane blown with all winds. Shakspeare.
- VA'NGUARD. n. s. [avant garde, French.] The front, or first line of the army.

The king's vant-guard maintained fight against the whole power of the enemies. Bacon.

The martial Idomen, who bravely stood before
In vant-guard of his troops, and marcht, for strength a savage bore. Chapman.

Vanguard to right and left the front unfold. Milton, P. L.

VANILLA. n. s. [vanille, French.] A plant. The fruit of those plants is used to scent chocolate. Miller.

When mixed with vanillios, or spices, chocolate acquires the good and bad qualities of aromatick oils. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To VAN'NISH. v. n. [vanesco, Latin; evanouir, Fr.]

1. To lose perceptible existence.

High honour is not only gotten and born by pain and danger, but must be nursed by the like, or else vanisheth as soon as it appears to the world. Sidney.

2. To pass away from the sight; to disappear.

Whither are they vanish'd?

— Into the air; and what seem'd corporal
Melted as breath into the wind. Shakspeare.

Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest. Shakspeare.

He cut the cleaving sky,

And in a moment vanish'd from her eye. Pope, Odys.

3. To pass away; to be lost.

All these delights will vanish. Milton.

That spirit of religion and seriousness, by which we had distinguished ourselves, vanished all at once, and a spirit of infidelity and prophaneness started up. Atterbury.

VA'NISHED.* part. adj. [from vanish.] Having no perceptible existence.

Fancy brings the vanish'd piles to view,
And builds imaginary Rome anew. Pope.

VA'NITY. n. s. [vanitas, Lat. vanité, Fr.]

1. Emptiness; uncertainty; inanity.

Vanity of vanities, all is vanity. Eccl. i. 2.

2. Fruitless desire; fruitless endeavour.

Vanity possesseth many, who are desirous to know the certainty of things to come. Sidney.

Thy pride,

And wandering vanity, when least was safe,
Rejected my forewarning. Milton, P. L.

3. Trifling labour.

To use long discourse against those things which are both against Scripture and reason, might rightly be judged a vanity in the answerer, not much inferior to that of the inventor. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

4. Falsehood; untruth.

Here I may well shew the vanity of that which is reported in the story of Walsingham. Sir J. Davies.

5. Empty pleasure; vain pursuit, idle shew; unsubstantial enjoyment; petty object of pride.

Were it not strange if God should have made such store of glorious creatures on earth, and leave them all to be consumed in secular vanity, allowing none but the baser sort to be employed in his own service. Hooker.

I must

Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple
Some vanity of mine art. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Cast not her serious wit on idle things;

Make her free will slave to vanity. Davies.

Sin, with vanity, had fill'd the works of men. Milton.

The eldest equal the youngest in the vanity of their dress; and no other reason can be given of it, but that they equal, if not surpass them, in the vanity of their desires. South.

Think not when woman's transient breath is fled,

That all her vanities at once are dead;
Succeeding vanities she still regards,

And though she plays no more, o'erlooks the cards. Pope.

6. Ostentation; arrogance.

The ground-work thereof is true, however they, through vanity, whilst they would not seem to be ignorant, do thereupon build many forged histories of their own antiquity. Spenser.

Whether it were out of the same vanity, which possessed all those learned philosophers and poets, that Plato also published, not under the right authors' names, those things which he had read in the Scriptures; or fearing the severity of the Areopagite, and the example of his master Socrates, I cannot judge. Raleigh, History of the World.

7. Petty pride; pride exerted upon slight grounds; pride operating on small occasions.

Can you add guilt to vanity, and take
A pride to hear the conquests which you make. Dryden.

'Tis an old maxim in the schools,

That vanity's the food of fools;

Yet now and then your men of wit

Will condescend to take a bit. Swift, Miscel.

The corruption of the world indulges women in great vanity, and mankind seem to consider them in no other view, than as so many painted idols, that are to allure and gratify their passions. Law.

To VANQUISH. v. a. [vaincre, French.]

1. To conquer; to overcome; to subdue.

Wer't not a shame, that, whilst you live at jar,

The fearful French, whom you late vanquish'd,

Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you? Shakspeare.

They subdued and vanquish'd the rebels in all encounters.

Clarendon.

The gods the victor, Cato the vanquish'd chose:

But you have done what Cato could not do.

To chuse the vanquish'd, and restore him too. Dryden.

2. To confute.

This bold assertion has been fully vanquish'd in a late reply to the bishop of Meaux's treatise. F. Atterbury.

VA'NQUISHABLE.* adj. [from vanquish.] Conquerable; that may be overcome.

That great giant was only vanquishable by the knights of the Wells. Gayton, on D. Quix. p. 87.

VA'NQUISHER. n. s. [from vanquish.] Conqueror; subduer.

He would pawn his fortunes

To hopeless restitution, so he might

Be call'd your vanquisher. Shakspeare.

I shall rise victorious, and subdue

My vanquisher; spoil'd of his vaunted spoil. Milton, P. L.

Troy's vanquisher, and great Achilles' son. A. Philips.

VA'NTAGE. n. s. [from advantage.]

1. Gain; profit.

What great vantage do we get by the trade of a pastor?

Sidney.

2. Superiority; state in which one had better means of action than another.

With the vantage of mine own excuse,

Hath he excepted most against my love. Shakspeare.

He had them at vantage, being tired and harassed with a long march. Bacon.

3. Opportunity; convenience.

Be assur'd, Madam, 'twill be done,

With his next vantage. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

To VA'NTAGE. v. a. [from advantage.] To profit.

Not in use.

We yet of present peril be afraid;

For needless fear did never vantage none. Spenser.

VANTAGE-GROUND.* n. s. Superiority; state in which one has better means of action than another.

Let him expect a battle, and know that he is to combat a prepared enemy, who has prevented him, and comes to fight him upon the vantage-ground. South, Sermon. vi. 266.

VA'NTBRACE. } n. s. [avant bras, Fr.] Armour for VA'NTBRASS. } the arm.

I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,

And in my vantbrace put this wither'd brawn. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

Put on

Vantbrace, and greaves, and gauntlet. Milton, S. A.

VA'PID. adj. [vapidus, Latin.] Dead; having the spirit evaporated; spiritless; mawkish; flat.

Thy wines let feed a-while
On the fat refuse; lest too soon disjointed,
From spritely it to sharp or vapid change. Philips.

The effects of a vapid and viscous constitution of blood, are stagnation, acrimony, and putrefaction. Arbuthnot.

VA'PIDNESS. n. s. [from vapid.] The state of being spiritless or mawkish; mawkishness.

To VA'PORATE.* v. n. [from vapour.] To emit vapours. Cockeram.

VA'PORATION.† n. s. [vaporation, Fr. vaporatio, Lat.
from vapour.] The act of escaping in vapours.

By conflagration and congelation, according to certain respects; by vaporation and evaporation; by sublimation.

Biblioth. Bibl. i. 438.

VA'PORER. n. s. [from vapour.] A boaster; a braggart.

This shews these vaporers, to what scorn they expose themselves. Government of the Tongue.

VA'PORINGLY.* adv. [from To vapour.] In a bullying or bragging manner.

VA'PORISH. adj. [from vapour.]

1. Vaporous; full of vapours.

It proceeded from the nature of the vaporish place. Sandys.

2. Splenetick; peevish; humoursome.

Pallas grew vap'rish once and odd,
She would not do the least right thing. Pope.

VA'POROUS. adj. [vaporeux, Fr. from vapour.]

1. Full of vapours or exhalations; fummy.

The vaporous night approaches. Shakspeare.

This shifting our abode from the warmer and more vaporous air of the vallies, to the colder and more subtle air of the hills, is a great benefit to the valetudinarian part. Derham.

2. Windy; flatulent.

If the mother eat much beans, or such vaporous food, it endangereth the child to become lunatick. Bacon.

Some more subtle corporeal element, may so equally bear against the parts of a little vaporous moisture, as to form it into round drops. More against Atheism.

The food which is most vaporous and perspirable, is the most easily digested. Arbuthnot.

A little tube, jetting out from the extremity of an artery, may carry off these vaporous steams of the blood. Cheyne.

VA'POROUSNESS.* n. s. [from vaporous.] State or quality of being vaporous.

The warmth and vaporousness of the air. Hist. R. S. iii. 416.

VA'PORY.* adj. [from vapour.]

1. Vaporous; abounding with vapours.

Congregated clouds,

And all the vapory turbulence of heaven,
Involve the face of things. Thomson, Winter.

2. Peevish; humoursome.

Their only labour was to kill the time;
And labour dire it is, and weary woe!
They sit, they loll, turn o'er some idle rhyme;
Then rising sudden, to the glass they go,
Or saunter forth with tottering step and slow;
This soon too rude an exercise they find:
Strait on the couch again their limbs they throw,
Where hours on hours they sighing lie reclin'd,
And court the vapoury god soft-breathing in the wind.
Thomson, Castle of Indolence, i. 72.

VA'POUR. n. s. [vapeur, Fr. vapor, Latin.]

1. Any thing exhalable; any thing that mingles with the air.

Jove a dreadful storm call'd forth
Against our navy; cover'd shore and all
With gloomy vapours. Chapman.

Vapour, and mist, and exhalation hot. Milton, P. L.

When first the sun too pow'rful beams displays,
It draws up vapours which obscure its rays:
But ev'n those clouds at last adorn its way,
Reflect new glories, and augment the day. Pope.

2. Fume; steam.

The morning is the best, because the imagination is not clouded by the vapours of meat. Dryden.

In distilling hot spirits, if the head of the still be taken off, the vapour which ascends out of the still will take fire at the flame of a candle, and the flame will run along the vapour from the candle to the still. Newton, Opt.

For the imposthume, the vapour of vinegar, and any thing which creates a cough, are proper. Arbuthnot on Diet.

3. Wind; flatulence.

In the Thessalian witches, and the meetings of witches that have been recorded, great wonders they tell, of carrying in the air, transforming themselves into other bodies. These fables are the effects of imagination: for ointments, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bacon.

4. Mental fume; vain imagination; fancy unreal.

If his sorrow bring forth amendment, he hath the grace of hope, though it be clouded over with a melancholy vapour, that it be not discernible even to himself. Hammond.

5. [In the plural.] Diseases caused by flatulence, or by diseased nerves; hypochondriacal maladies; melancholy; spleen.

To this we must ascribe the spleen, so frequent in studious men, as well as the vapours to which the other sex are so often subject. Addison, Spect.

To VA'POUR. v. n. [vaporo, Latin.]

1. To pass in a vapour or fume; to fly off in evapor-ations.

When thou from this world wilt go,
The whole world vapours in thy breath. Donne.

2. To emit fumes.

Swift running waters vapour not so much as standing waters.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. To bully; to brag.

Not true, quoth he? Howe'er you vapour,
I can what I affirm make appear. Hudibras.

These are all the mighty powers
You vainly boast to cry down ours;
And what in real value's wanting,
Supply with vapouring and ranting. Hudibras.

That I might not be vapour'd down by insignificant testimonies, I used the name of your society to annihilate all such arguments. Glanville.

Be you to us but kind;
Let Dutchmen vapour, Spaniards curse,
No sorrow we shall find. Ld. Dorset, Song.

To VA'POUR. v. a. To effuse, or scatter in fumes or vapour.

Break off this last lamenting kiss,
Which sucks two souls, and vapours both away. Donne.

He'd laugh to see one throw his heart away,
Another sighing vapour forth his soul,
A third to melt himself in tears. B. Jonson.

Opium loseth some of its poisonous quality, if vapoured out,
and mingled with spirit of wine. Bacon.

It must be holpen by somewhat which may fix the silver, never to be restored, or vapoured away, when incorporated into such a mass of gold. Bacon.

VA'POURED.* adj. [from vapour.]

1. Moist.

From mine eyes
The vapour'd tears down stilled here and there.
Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

2. Splenetick; peevish.

The want of method pray excuse,
Allowing for a vapour'd Muse. Green, Poem of the Spleen.

VARE.* n. s. [vara, Spanish.] A wand or staff of justice. Malone.

He [the Spaniard] is wonderfully obedient to government; for the proudest don of Spain, when he is pacing upon his ginnet in the street, if an alguazil (a serjeant) shew him his vare, that is, a little white staff he carrieth as a badge of his office, my don will presently off his horse, and yield himself his prisoner. Howell, Lett. i. iii. 32.

His hand a vare of justice did uphold.

Dryden, Abs. and Achitophel, P. I.

VARIABLE. adj. [variable, Fr. variabilis, Latin.] Changeable; mutable; inconstant.

O swear not by th' inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb;
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable.

Shakspeare.

Haply countries different,
With variable objects, shall expel

This something settled matter in his heart. Shakspeare.

By the lively image of other creatures, did those ancients represent the variable passions of mortals; as by serpents were signified deceivers. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

His heart I know how variable, and vain,
Self-left.

Milton, P. L.

VARIABLENESS. n. s. [from variable.]

1. Changeableness; mutability.

Every good gift, and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. James, i. 17.

You are not solicitous about the variableness of the weather, or the change of seasons. Addison.

2. Levity; inconstancy.

Censurers subject themselves to the charge of variableness in judgment. Richardson, Clarissa.

VARIABLELY. adv. [from variable.] Changeably; mutably; inconstantly; uncertainly.

VARIANCE. n. s. [from vary.] Discord; disagreement; dissension.

I am come to set a man at variance against his father. Matth.

A cause of law, by violent course,

Was, from a variance, now a war become. Daniel.

Set not any one doctrine of the Gospel at variance with others, which are all admirably consistent. Spratt.

She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen:

While a kind glance at her pursuer flies,

How much at variance are her feet and eyes? Pope.

If the learned would not sometimes submit to the ignorant; the old to the weaknesses of the young; there would be nothing but everlasting variance in the world. Swift.

Many bleed,

By shameful variance betwixt man and man. Thomson.

Who are they that set the first and second articles at variance with each other, when for fourteen centuries, and more, they have agreed most amicably together. Waterland.

TO VARIATE.* v. a. [variatus, Latin.] To change; to alter.

What was the cause of their multiplied, variated complotments against her; like the monsters in Africk, every day almost a new conspiracy?

Dean King, Sermon. 5 Nov. 1608, p. 33.

This artificial change is but a fixation of nature's inconstancy, helping its varying infirmities.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 43.

VARIATION. n. s. [variatio, Latin; variation, Fr.]

1. Change; mutation; difference from itself.

After much variation of opinions, the prisoner was acquitted of treason, but by most voices found guilty of felony. Hayward.

The operation of agents will easily admit of intention and remission, but the essences of things are conceived not capable of any such variation. Locke.

The fame of our writers is confined to these two islands, and it is hard it should be limited in time as much as place, by the perpetual variations of our speech. Swift.

There is but one common matter, which is diversified by accidents, and the same numerical quantity, by variations of texture, may constitute successively all kinds of body. Bentley.

2. Difference; change from one to another.

In some other places are more females born than males; which, upon this variation of proportion, I recommend to the curious. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

Each sea had its peculiar shells, and the same variation of soils; this tract affording such a terrestrial matter as is proper for the formation of one sort of shell-fish; that of another. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. Successive change.

Sir Walter Blunt,

Stain'd with the variation of each soil

Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours. Shakspeare.

4. [In grammar.] Change of termination of nouns.

The rules of grammar, and useful examples of the variation of words, and the peculiar form of speech, are often appointed to be repeated. Watts on the Mind.

5. Change in natural phenomenon.

The duke ran a long course of calm prosperity, without any visible eclipse or wane in himself, amidst divers variations in others. Wotton, Life of Buckingham.

6. Deviation.

He observed the variation of our English from the original, and made an intire translation of the whole for his private use. Fell.

If we admit a variation from the state of his creation, that variation must be necessarily after an eternal duration, and therefore within the compass of time. Hale.

I may seem sometimes to have varied from his sense; but the greatest variations may be fairly deduced from him. Dryden.

7. Variation of the compass; deviation of the magnetick needle from an exact parallel with the meridian.

VARICOUS. adj. [varicosus, Latin.] Diseased with dilatation.

There are instances of one vein only being varicous, which may be destroyed by tying it above and below the dilatation. Sharpe.

TO VARIEGATE. v. a. [variegatus, school Latin.]

To diversify; to stain with different colours.

The shells are filled with a white spar, which variegates and adds to the beauty of the stone. Woodward on Fossils.

They had fountains of variegated marble in their rooms. Arbuthnot.

Ladies like variegated tulips show;

'Tis to the changes half the charms we owe:

Such happy spots the nice admirers take,

Fine by defect, and delicately weak. Pope.

VARIIGATION. n. s. [from variegate.] Diversity of colours.

Plant your choice tulips in natural earth, somewhat impoverished with very fine sand; else they will soon lose their variegations. Evelyn, Kalendar.

VARIETY. n. s. [variété, Fr. varietas, Latin.]

1. Change; succession of one thing to another; intermixture of one thing with another.

All sorts are here that all th' earth yields;

Variety is nothing else but a continued novelty. South.

If the sun's light consisted of but one sort of rays, there would be but one colour in the whole world, nor would it be possible to produce any new colour by reflections or refractions; and by consequence that the variety of colours depends upon the composition of light. Newton, Opticks.

2. One thing of many by which variety is made. In this sense it has a plural.

The inclosed warmth, which the earth bath in itself, stirred up by the heat of the sun, assisteth nature in the speedier procreation of those varieties, which the earth bringeth forth. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

3. Difference; dissimilitude.

There is a variety in the tempers of good men, with relation to the different impressions they receive from different objects of charity. F. Atterbury.

4. Variation; deviation; change from a former state.

It were a great vanity to reject those reasons drawn from the nature of things, or to go about to answer those reasons by suppositions of a variety in things, from what they now appear. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

5. Many and different kinds.

He now only wants more time to do that variety of good which his soul thirsts after. Law.

VARI'OLOUS. * adj. [from variola, Lat. small pustules.]

Relating to the disease called the small-pox.

VARIOUS. adj. [varius, Latin.]

1. Different; several; manifold.

Then were they known to men by various names,
And various idols, through the heathen world. Milton.

2. Changeable; uncertain; unfixed; unlike itself.

The names of mixed modes want standards in nature, whereby to adjust their signification; therefore they are very various and doubtful. Locke.

3. Unlike each other.

He in derision sets
Upon their tongues a various spirit,
To raise quite out their native language. Milton.
So many and so various laws are given. Milton.
Vast crowds of vanquish'd nations march along,
Various in arms, in habit, and in tongue. Dryden.
Various of temper, as of face or frame,
Each individual: his great end the same. Pope.

4. Variegated; diversified.

Herbs sudden flower'd,
Opening their various colours. Milton.

VARIOUSLY. adv. [from various.] In a various manner.

Having been variously tossed by fortune, directed his course to a safe harbour. Bacon.

Various objects from the sense,
Variously representing. Milton.

Those various squadrons, variously design'd,
Each vessel freighted with a several load;
Each squadron waiting for a several wind;
All find but one, to burn them in the road. Dryden.

Different aliments, while they repair the fluids and solids, act
variously upon them according to their different natures. Arbuthnot.

VARIX. n. s. [Lat. varice, Fr.] A dilatation of the vein.

In ulcers of the legs, accompanied with varices or dilatations of the veins, the varix can only be assisted by the bandage. Sharpe.

VARLET. † n. s. [varlet, old French, now valet.]

Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Horne Tooke believes varlet and valet to be the same word as harlot; the aspirate only changed to v, and the r by effeminate and slovenly speech suppressed in the latter. Div.
of Purl. ii. 149. — But varlet or valet is, in its original meaning, a word implying neither servitude nor disgrace. The old French word signifies a youth, as well as a groom, or yeoman; and accordingly Cot-grave says, "in old time it was a more honourable title; for all young gentlemen, until they came to be eighteen years of age, were termed so; besides those that waited in the king's chamber, and who were for the most part gentlemen, [who] had no other title than of 'valets de chambre,' until that Francis the first, perceiving such as attended him to be no better than 'roturiers,' [plebeians, or low persons,] brought in above them another sort, and caused them to be stiled 'gentilhommes de la chambre,' presently after which the title of valet grew into disesteem, and is at the length become opposite unto that of gentilhomme." Menage, among various opinions as to the etymology, notices "valad, Hebr.
qui signifie enfant;" but inclines to Du Cange's derivation of the word from vassalletus, low Lat. dimin.
of vassallus. Thus Hickeys refers it to the Icel. veill, imbellis, q. d. vaselette, dimin. à vassal; to which Serenius subscribes.]

1. A page or knight's follower; any servant or attendant. [Pages, varlets, ou damoiseaux; noms quelquefois communs aux ecuyers. De St. Palaye, Mem. p. 599.]

They spyde

A varlet running towards hastily: —
Behind his back he bore a brassen shield;

Right well beseeemed it

To be the shield of some redoubted knight. Spenser, F. Q.

Such lords ill example do give,

Where varlets and drabs so may live. Tusser, Husbandry.

'Tis service of danger. — Why, you were best get one o' the varlets of the city, a serjeant: I'll appoint you one, if you please. B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

2. A term of reproach; as in some parts of the north a vile person is still called a varlet; a scoundrel.
This word has deviated from its original meaning,
as fur in Latin.

I am the veriest varlet that ever chew'd.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Where did'st thou leave these varlets?

Shakespeare.

Thou, varlet, dost thy master's gains devour;

Thou milk'st his ewes, and often twice an hour. Dryden.

When the Roman legions were in a disposition to mutiny, an impudent varlet, who was a private centinel, resolved to try the power of his eloquence. Addison.

VARLETRY. n. s. [from varlet.] Rabble; croud; populace.

Shall they hoist me up,

And shew me to the shouting *varlet*ry

Of cens'ring Rome? Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

VAR'NISH. † n. s. [vernix, Fr. vernix, Lat. Accordingly Chaucer, and our old lexicographers, write it vernish. Prompt. Parv. and Barret.]

1. A matter laid upon wood, metal, or other bodies, to make them shine.

We'll put on those shall praise your excellence,

And set a double varnish on the fame. Shakespeare.

The fame of Cicero had not borne her age so well, if it had not been joined with some vanity. Like unto varnish, that makes cielings not only shine, but last. Bacon.

This blue varnish, that the green endears,

The sacred rust of twice ten hundred years. Pope.

2. Cover; palliation.

To VAR'NISH. v. a. [vernisser, vernir, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To cover with something shining.

O vanity!

To set a pearl in steel so meanly varnished. Sidney.

Clamber not you up to the casements,

Nor thrust your head into the publick street,

To gaze on christian fools with varnish'd faces. Shakespeare.

2. To cover; to conceal or decorate with something ornamental.

Specious deeds on earth, which glory excites;

Or close ambition varnish'd o'er with zeal. Milton.

Young people are used to varnish o'er their non-performance and forbearance of good actions by a pretence unto humility. Fell.

His manly heart was still above

Dissembled hate, or varnish'd love. Dryden.

Men espouse the well-endowed opinions in fashion, and then seek arguments to make good their beauty, or varnish over and cover their deformity. Locke.

3. To palliate; to hide with colour of rhetorick.

They varnish all their errors, and secure

The ills they act, and all the world endure. Denham.

Cato's voice was ne'er employ'd

To clear the guilty, and to varnish crimes. Addison.

Speak the plain truth, and varnish not your crimes! Philips.

VAR'NISHER. n. s. [from varnish.]

1. One whose trade is to varnish.

An oil obtained of common oil, may probably be of good use to surgeons and varnishers. Boyle.

2. A disguiser; an adorning.

Modest dulness lurks in thought's disguise;
Thou varnisher of fools, and cheat of all the wise. Pope.
VA'RVELS.† n. s. [vervelles, Fr.] Silver rings about the leg of a hawk, on which the owner's name is engraved. Dict. Rather vervels, or vervails. See VERVELS.

To VA'RY. v. a. [varior, Lat. varier, Fr.]

1. To change; to make unlike itself.
Let your ceaseless change
Vary to our great Maker still new praise. Milton, P. L.
2. To change to something else.
Gods that never change their state,
Vary oft their love and hate. Waller.
The master's hand, which to the life can trace
The airs, the lines, the features of the face;
May, with a free and bolder stroke, express
A vary'd posture, or a flatt'ring dress. Denham.
We are to vary the customs, according to the time and country where the scene of action lies. Dryden.
He varies ev'ry shape with ease,
And tries all forms that may Pomona please. Pope.

3. To make of different kinds.
God hath divided the genius of men according to the different affairs of the world; and varied their inclinations, according to the variety of actions to be performed. Brown.

4. To diversify; to variegate.
God hath here

To VA'RY. v. n.

1. To be changeable; to appear in different forms.
Darkling stands
The varying shore o' th' world. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
2. To be unlike each other.
Those who made laws, had their minds polished above the vulgar: and yet unaccountably the public constitutions of nations vary. Collier on Pride.
3. To alter; to become unlike itself.
He had a strange interchanging of large and unexpected pardons, with several executions; which could not be imputed to any inconstancy, but to a principle he had set unto himself, that he would vary and try both ways in turn. Bacon.

- So varied he, and of his tortuous train
That each from other differs, first confess;
Next, that he varies from himself no less. Pope.

4. To deviate; to depart.
The crime consists in violating the law, and varying from the right rule of reason. Locke.

5. To succeed each other.
While fear and anger, with alternate grace,
Pant in her breast, and vary in her face. Addison, Cato.

6. To disagree; to be at variance.
In judgement of her substance thus they vary,
And vary thus in judgement of her seat;
For some her chair up to the brain do carry,
Some sink it down into the stomach's heat. Davies.

7. To shift colours.
Will the falcon, stooping from above,
Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove?
Admires the jay the insect's gilded wings?
Or hears the hawk when Philomela sings? Pope.

VA'RY. n. s. [from the verb.] Change; alteration.
Not in use.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks,
With every gale and vary of their masters. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

VA'SCULAR. adj. [vasculum, Lat.] Consisting of vessels; full of vessels.

Nutrition of the solids is performed by the circulating liquid in the smallest vascular solids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

VOL. V.

VASCULA'RITY.* n. s. [from vascular.] State or quality of being vascular.

As a further proof of the vascularity of the teeth, nodes sometimes form on them. Outlines of Anat. p. 12.

VASCUL'FEROUS. adj. [vasculum and fero, Latin.]
Such plants as have, besides the common calyx, a peculiar vessel to contain the seed, sometimes divided into cells; and these have always a monopetalous flower, either uniform or difform. Quincy.

VASE. n. s. [vase, Fr. vasa, Lat.]

1. A vessel; generally a vessel rather for show than use.

The toilet stands unveil'd,
Each silver vase in mystick order laid. Pope.

2. It is used for a solid piece of ornamental marble.

VA'SSAL.† n. s. [vassal, French; vassallo, Italian].
Dr. Johnson. — A diminutive of vassus, low Lat.
a dependant, according to Wachter, which he refers to the Welsh gwas, a servant. Serenius notices other derivations less probable than this.
See also Du Cange, in V. VASSUS.]

1. One who holds of a superior lord.
Every petty prince, vassal to the emperor, can coin what money he pleaseth. Swift, View of Ireland.
The vassals are invited to bring in their complaints to the viceroi, who imprisons and chastises their masters. Addison.
2. A subject; a dependant.

She cannot content the lord with performance of his discipline, that hath at her side a vassal, whom Satan hath made his vicegerent, to cross whatsoever the faithful should do. Hooker.

Such as they thought fit for labour, they received as vassals;
but imparted not the benefit of laws, but every one made his will a law unto his own vassal. Spenser on Ireland.

The common people were free subjects to the king, not slaves and vassals to their pretended lords. Davies.

The mind hath not reason to remember, that passions ought to be her vassals, not her masters. Raleigh.

Vassals of his anger, when the scourge
Inexorable, and the torturing hour
Calls us to penance. Milton, P. L.

As all his vassals eagerly desir'd;
With mind averse, he rather underwent
His people's will, than gave his own consent. Dryden.
He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal. Baker.

3. A servant; one who acts by the will of another.
I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him
The greatness he has got. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

4. A slave; a low wretch.
Thou swear'st thy Gods in vain,
O vassal! miscreant! Shakespeare, K. Lear.

To VA'SSAL.* v. a. [from the noun.] To subject; to enslave; to exercise command over.

Love, anger, sorrow, and the like, are but for a time, and then over; but this [Fear] is perpetual; a disease of a life long, which every day slaves a man to whatever ill he meets with. It vassals him to the world, to beasts, and men; and, like a surly tyrant, enforces whatever it proposes. Feltham, Res. i. 71.

Thou couldst not make my mind go less, nor pare
With all their swords one virtue from my soul:
How am I vassal'd then? Make such thy slaves
As dare not keep their goodness past their graves. Beaum. and Fl. Four PL in One.

Some proud hill, whose stately eminence
Vassals the fruitful vale's circumference. Browne, Brit. Past. B. i. S. 4.

VA'SSALAGE. n. s. [vasselage, Fr. from vassal.] The state of a vassal; tenure at will; servitude; slavery;
dependance.

He renounc'd the vassalage
Of Rome again.
All my pow'rs do their bestowing lose,
Like vassalage at unawares encountering
The eye of majesty. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.
They would have brought the Achæans from the condition
Of followers and dependents unto meer vassalage. Raleigh.
Let us not then pursue,
By force impossible, by leave obtain'd
Unacceptable, though in heav'n our state
Of splendid vassalage. Milton, P. L.
Curs'd vassalage,
First idoliz'd till love's hot fire be o'er;
Then slaves to those who courted us before. Dryden.

VAST. adj. [vaste, Fr. vastus, Lat.]

1. Large; great.
What the parliament meant to attempt with those vast numbers of men, every day levied. Clarendon.
That is an ample and capacious mind, which takes in vast and sublime ideas without pain. Watts.
His open stores,
Though vast, were little to his ampler heart. Thomson.

2. Viciously great; enormously extensive or capacious.
The vicious language is vast, and gaping, swelling, and irregular; when it contends to be high, full of rock, mountain, and pointedness. B. Jonson.
So bore the ship aloft her fiery bound,
About whom rusht the billows, blacke and vast. Chopman.
They view'd the vast unmeasurable abyss. Milton, P. L.
Others with vast Typhoean rage more fell,
Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
In whirlwind, hell scarce holds the wild uproar. Milton, P. L.

VAST. n. s. [vastum, Lat.] An empty waste.
They shook hands, as over a vast; and embraced, as from the ends of opposed winds. Shakspeare.
Through the vast of heaven it sounded. Milton, P. L.
The wat'ry vast,
Secure of storms, your royal brother past. Pope.

VASTATION. n. s. [vastatio, from vasto, Latin.]
Waste; depopulation.
The miseries of war, and the vastations that follow upon it, may be a good preparative to us for setting a true value upon the benefit of peace. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 56.
Fill'd with vastation, ruins, snares, and fears.
Sandys, Jerem. p. 7.

We deduce it from the root denoting vastation or destruction. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.
This wild-fire made the saddest vastations, in the many fatal outrages which these eager contentions occasion.
Dec. of Chr. Piety.

VASTIDITY. n. s. [vastitas, Lat. from vasty.] Wide-ness; immensity. A barbarous word.

Perpetual durance,
Through all the world's vastidity. Shakspeare.

VA'STLY. adv. [from vast.] Greatly; to a great degree.

Holland's resolving upon its own defence, without our share in the war, would leave us to enjoy the trade of the world, and thereby grow vastly both in strength and treasures. Temple.

They may, and do vastly differ in their manners, institutions, customs; but yet all of them agree in having some deity to worship. Wilkins.

It is vastly the concern of government, and of themselves too, whether they be morally good or bad. South.

VA'STNESS. n. s. [from vast.] Immensity; enormous greatness.

She by the rocks compell'd to stay behind,
Is by the vastness of her bulk confin'd. Waller.
Behemoth, biggest born of earth, upheav'd
His vastness. Milton, P. L.

When I compare this little performance with the vastness of my subject, methinks I have brought but a cockle-shell of water from the ocean. Glanville.

Ariosto observed not moderation in the vastness of his draught. Dryden.
Hence we may discover the cause of the vastness of the ocean. Bentley.

VA'STY. adj. [from vast.] Large; enormously great.
I can call spirits from the vasty deep. Shakspeare.

VAT. n. s. [vat, Dutch; fat, Saxon.] A vessel in which liquors are kept in the immature state.

Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eyen,
In thy vats our cares be drown'd. Shakspeare.
Let him produce his vats and tubs in opposition to heaps of arms and standards. Addison.
Wouldst thou thy vats with gen'rous juice should froth,
Respect thy orchats. Philips.

VA'TICIDE. n. s. [vates and cædo, Lat.] A murderer of prophets.

The caiff vaticide conceiv'd a prayer. Pope.

VAT'ICINAL.* adj. [vaticinans, Latin.] Containing predictions.

He has left vaticinal rhymes, in which he predicted the union of Scotland with England. Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 77.

TO VAT'ICINATE. † v. n. [vaticinor, Latin.] To prophecy; to practise prediction.

The most admired of all prophane prophets, whose predictions have been so much cried up, did vaticinate here. Howel.

The phenomena of nature are alike visible to all: but all have not alike learned the connexion of natural things, or understand what they signify, or know how to vaticinate by them. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 253.

VATICINA'TION.* n. s. [vaticination, old French;
vaticinatio, Latin.] Prediction; prophecy.

Unless we dare ascribe to the tyrant a spirit of vaticination,
we cannot acquit the author of the letters of so manifest a cheat. Bentley, Diss. upon Phalaris, § 4.

He that foretells the motions of the planets, or the effects of medicines, or the result of chemical or mechanical experiments, may be said to do it by natural vaticination.
Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 253.

VA'VASOUR. n. s. [vavasseur, Fr.] One who himself holding of a superior lord, has others holding under him.

Names have been taken of civil honours, as king, knight, valvasor, or vavator, squire. Camden.

VA'UDEVIL. n. s. [vaudeville, Fr.] A song common among the vulgar, and sung about the streets,
Trevoux. A ballad; a trivial strain.

VAULT. n. s. [voulte, Fr. volta, Ital. voluta, low
Latin.]

1. A continued arch.

O, you are men of stone:
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so
That heaven's vault should crack. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
The word signifies an orb or sphere. And this shews us both the form of the Mosaical abyss, which was included within this vault; and the form of the habitable earth, which was the outward surface of this vault, or the cover of the abyss.
Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

2. A cellar.

Creep into the kill-hole.
He will seek there: neither press, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of. Shakspeare.
The wine of life is drawn, and the meer lees
Is left this vault to brag of. Shakspeare.

Whether your fruitful fancy lies
To banish rats that haunt our vault. Swift.

3. A cave; a cavern.

The silent vaults of death, unknown to light,
And hell itself, lie naked to his sight. Sandys.

4. A repository for the dead.

Shall I not be stifed in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in? Shakspeare.

To VAULT. v. a. [voltre, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To arch; to shape to a vault.

Hath nature given them eyes
To see this vaulted arch, and the rich cope
Of sea and land, which can distinguish 'twixt
The fiery orbs above, and the twinn'd stones
Upon th' humbl'd beach.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

2. To cover with an arch.

Over-head the dismal hiss
Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew;
And flying vaulted either host with fire.

Milton, P. L.

To VAULT. v. n. [voltiger, Fr. volteggiare, Ital.]

1. To leap; to jump.

Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself,
And falls on th' other.
The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me,
Knowing that thou would'st have me drown'd on shore.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Shakspeare.

He is vaulting variable ramps
In your despite, upon your purse.
If I could win a lady by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife.
Leaning on his lance, he vaulted on a tree.
If a man should leap a garret, or vault down the monument, would he leave the memory of a hero behind him?

Shakspeare.

Dryden.

Collier on Duelling.

Lucan vaulted upon Pegasus with all the heat and intrepidity of youth.

Addison.

2. To play the tumbler, or posture-master.

VAULT. n. s. [from the verb.] A leap; a jump.

VAULTAGE. n. s. [from vault.] Arched cellar. Not in use.

He'll call you to so hot an answer for it,
That caves and wombly vaultages of France
Shall chide your trespass, and return your mock
In second accent to his ordnance.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

VAULTED. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave.

Restore the lock! she cries, and all around
Restore the lock! the vaulted roofs rebound.

Pope.

VAULTER.† n. s. [from vault.] A leaper; a jumper;
a tumbler.

They would leap to reach 'em,
And leap aloft too. — Such are light enough:
I am no vaulter.

Beaumont and Fl. Wife of a Month.

VAULTY. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave. A bad word.

I will kiss thy detestable bones,
And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows,
And ring these fingers with thy household worms.
I'll say that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulty heav'ns so high above our heads.

Shakspeare.

Shakspeare.

To VAUNT. v. a. [vanter, Fr.] To boast; to display with ostentation.

Not that great champion
Whom famous poets verse so much doth vaunt;
And hath for twelve huge labours high extoll'd,
So many furies and sharp hits did haunt.

Spenser.

Not any damsel which her vaunteth most,
In skilful knitting of soft silken twine.
My vanquisher spoil'd of his vaunted spoil.

Spenser.

Milton, P. L.

To VAUNT. v. n.

1. To play the braggart; to talk with ostentation; to make vain show; to boast.

You say, you are a better soldier;
Let it appear so; make your vaunting true.
The illusions of magick were put down, and their vaunting in wisdom reproved with disgrace.

Shakspeare.

Wisdom, xvii. 7.

So spake the apostate angel, though in pain;
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair.
Pride, which prompts a man to vaunt and overvalue what he is, does incline him to disvalue what he has.

Milton, P. L.

Gov. of the Tongue.

2. I scarcely know in what sense Dryden has used this word, unless it be miswritten for vaults.

'Tis he: I feel him now in ev'ry part;
Like a new world he vaunts about my heart.

Dryden.

VAUNT. n. s. [from the verb.] Brag; boast; vain ostentation.

Sir John Perrot bent his course not to that point, but rather quite contrary, in scorn, and in vain vaunt of his own counsels.

Spenser.

Him I seduc'd
With other promises and other vaunts.

Milton, P. L.

Such vaunts as his who can with patience read,
Who thus describes his hero when he's dead?
In heat of action slain, he scorns to fall,
But still maintains the war, and fights at all.

Granville.

VAUNT. n. s. [from avant, Fr.] The first part. Not used.

Our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings.

Shakspeare.

VAUNT-COURIER.* n. s. [avant courier, Fr.] A precursor. See VANCOURIER.

You sulphurous and thought-executing fires,
Vaunt-couriers to oak-cleaving thunderbolts,
Singe my white head!

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

VA'UNTER. n. s. [vanteur, Fr. from vaunt.] Boaster;
braggart; man given to vain ostentation.

Some feign
To menage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain.
Tongue-valiant hero; vaunter of thy might;
In threats the foremost, but the lag in fight.

Spenser.

Dryden.

VA'UNTFUL. adj. [vaunt and full.] Boastful; osten-tationous.

Whiles all the heavens on lower creatures smil'd,
Young Clarion, with vauntful lustihed,
After his guise did cast abroad to fare.

Spenser.

VA'UNTINGLY. adv. [from vaunting.] Boastfully;
ostentatiously.

I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wert cause of noble Gloster's death.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

VA'UNTMURE. n. s. [avant mur, Fr.] A false wall;
a work raised before the main wall.

With another engine named the warwolfe, he pierced with one stone, and cut, as even as a thread, two vauntmures.

Camden, Rem.

This warlike captain, daily attempting the vauntmures, in the end by force obtained the same; and so possessed of the place, desperately kept it till greater help came running in, who, with wonderful expedition, clapt up a strong covering betwixt the wall and the vauntmure.

Knolles.

VA'WARD. n. s. [van and ward.] Fore part. Obsolete.

Since we have the vaaward of the day,
My love shall hear the musick of my hounds.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Marcus,
Their bands i' the vaaward are the Antiates
Of their best trust.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

UBEROUS.* adj. [uber, Lat.] Fruitful; copious; abundant.

Here the women give suck, the uberous dug being stretched over their naked shoulder.
Though the ground be for the most part barren, yet the soil is rich; — and it hinders not that her womb is uberous.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 17.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 314.

Sion, the mother of us all, is barren, and her uberous breasts are dry.

Quarles, Judg. and Mercy, Sion.

UBERTY.† n. s. [uberté, old French; ubertas, Lat.]
Abundance; fruitfulness.

They enjoy that natural uberty, and fruitfulness, which, without labouring toil, doth in such plenteous abundance furnish them with all necessary things.

Florio, Transl. of Montaigne, (1613,) p. 104.

UBICA'TION. } n. s. [from ubi, Lat.] Local relation;
UBI'ETY. } whereness. A scholastick term.
 Relations, ubications, duration, the vulgar philosophy admits to be something; and yet to enquire in what place they are, were gross. Glanville.

UBI'QUITARY. adj. [from ubique, Latin.] Existing every where.
 For wealth and an ubiquitary commerce, none can exceed her. Howell.

UBI'QUITARY. † n. s. [from ubique, Lat.]

1. One that exists every where.
 How far wide is Aquinas, which saith, by the same reason that an angel might be in two places, he might be in as many as you will? See now, either Xavier is every where, or else the carcass of a friar is more subtle than the nature of an angel. To conclude, either Aquinas is false, or the papists ubiquitaries. Hall.
 There is a nymph of a most curious and elaborate strain, light, all motion, an ubiquitary, she is every where, Phantaste!
B. Jonson, Cynthia Revels.
2. One who asserts the corporal ubiquity of Christ.
 A parity of dignity — really communicated to the humanity in itself, as the ubiquitaries contend and plead for.
Bp. Richardson, on the O. Test. (1655,) p. 251.
 It may serve to guard us from diverse errors: such as that of the German ubiquitaries, who say that our Lord, according to his human nature, corporally does exist every where.
Barrow, vol. ii. S. 31.

UBI'QUITY. n. s. [from ubique, Lat.] Omnipresence; existence at the same time in all places.
 In the one there is attributed to God death, whereof divine nature is not capable; in the other ubiquity unto man, which human nature admitteth not. Hooker.
 Pm she hight,
 A solemn wight,
 As you should meet,
 In any street,
 In that ubiquity. B. Jonson.
 Could they think that to be infinite and immense, the ubiquity of which they could thrust into a corner of their closet. South.

U'DDER. n. s. [ubep, Saxon; uder, Dutch; uber, Lat.] The breast or dugs of a cow, or other large animal.
 A lionness, with udders all drawn dry,
 Lay couching head on ground. Shakspeare.
 Sithence the cow
 Produc'd an ampler store of milk; the she-goat,
 Not without pain, dragg'd her distended udder. Prior.

U'DDERED. adj. [from udder.] Furnished with udders.
 Marian soft could stroke the udder'd cow. Gay.

VEAL. † n. s. [veel, a calf, veeler, vesler, to bring forth a calf, old French; vitellus, Lat.]

1. A calf. This is the primary sense, but overpassed by Dr. Johnson.
 A Scotch runt without horns, or else with very short horns, scarce exceeding a south-country veal in height.
Ray, Coll. of Engl. Words, (ed. 1691,) p. 133.
2. The flesh of a calf killed for the table.
 Would'st thou with mighty beef augment thy meal,
 Seek Leadenhall; St. James's sends thee veal. Gay.

VECK.* n. s. [vecchia, Ital. vetula, Latin.] An old woman. Obsolete.
 A rimpled veck farre ronne in age. Chaucer, Rom. R. 4495.

VE'CTION. } n. s. [vectio, vectito, Lat.] The act
VECTITA'TION. } of carrying, or being carried.
 Enervated lords are softly lolling in their chariots; a species of vectitation seldom used amongst the antients.
Arbuthnot, and Pope.

VE'CTURE. n. s. [vectura, Lat.] Carriage.
 There are but three things which one nation selleth unto another; the commodity as nature yieldeth it; the manufacture; and the vecture, or carriage. Bacon, Essays.

To VEER. † v. n. [vire, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Germ. wirren, in gyrum vertere; Sueth. wira, circumvolvere; ab antiquiss. yra, hurra, in gyrum agitare. Serenius.] To turn about.
 Nigh river's mouth, where wind
Veers oft, as oft he steers and shifts her sail. Milton, P. L.
 If a wild uncertainty prevail,
 And turn your veering heart with ev'ry gale;
 You lose the fruit of all your former care,
 For the sad prospect of a just despair. Roscommon.
 I have no taste of the noisy praise
 Of giddy crouds, as changeable as winds;
 Servants to change, and blowing with the tide
 Of swol'n success; but veering with its ebb. Dryden.
 A-head the master pilot steers,
 And as he leads, the following navy veers. Dryden.
 The wind veered about to north-west. Derham.

To VEER. v. a.

1. To let out.
 As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all sail; so to take it in and contract it, is of no less praise when the argument doth ask it. B. Jonson.
2. To turn; to change.
 I see the haven nigh at hand,
 To which I mean my weary course to bend;
Veer the main-sheet, and bear up with the land. Spenser.
 Sailing farther, it veers its lilly to the west, and regardeth that quarter, wherein the land is nearer or greater. Brown.

VEE'RING.* n. s. [from To veer.] Act of turning or changing.
 It is a double misfortune to a nation given to change, when they have a sovereign that is prone to fall in with all the turns and veerings of the people. Addison, Freeholder.

VEGETABI'LITY. n. s. [from vegetable.] Vegetable nature; the quality of growth without sensation.
 The coagulating spirits of salts, and lapidifical juice of the sea, entering the parts of the plant, overcomes its vegetability, and converts it unto a lapideous substance. Brown.

VE'GETABLE. n. s. [vegetabilis, school Lat. vegetable, Fr.] Any thing that has growth without sensation, as plants.
Vegetables are organized bodies, consisting of various parts, containing vessels furnished with different juices, and taking in nourishment from without, usually by means of a root fixed to the earth, or to some other body, as in the generality of plants; sometimes by means of pores distributed over the whole surface, as in sub-marine plants. Hill, Materia Medica.
 Let brutes and vegetables that cannot drink,
 So far as drought and nature urges, think. Waller.
 There are several kinds of creatures in the world, and degrees of dignity amongst them; some being more excellent than others, animate more than inanimate, sensitives more than vegetables, and men more than brutes. Wilkins.
 In vegetables it is the shape, and in bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour, we most fix on. Locke.
 Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principle of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves, flowers and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, trees. Watts.

VE'GETABLE. adj. [vegetabilis, Lat.]

1. Belonging to a plant.
 The vegetable world, each plant and tree,
 From the fair cedar on the craggy brow,
 To creeping moss. Prior.
 Both mechanisms are equally curious, from one uniform juice to extract all the variety of vegetable juices; or from such variety of food to make a fluid very near uniform to the blood of an animal. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
2. Having the nature of plants.
 Amidst them stood the tree of life,
 High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
 Of vegetable gold. Milton, P. L.
 That vegetative terrestrial hath been ever the standing fund, out of which is derived the matter of all animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

VEG

VE'GETAL.* adj. [vegetal, Fr.] Having power to cause growth. Obsolete.

Necessary concomitants of this vegetal faculty are life, and his privation, death. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 21.

VE'GETAL.* n. s. A vegetable.

Your minerals, vegetals, and animals. B. Jonson, Alchemist.
Bounteous nature here —

Enriches and augments with vegetals,
With creatures sensitive, with rationals.

Fanshaw, Tr. of Past. Fido.

To VE'GETATE. v. n. [vegeto, Latin.] To grow as plants; to shoot out; to grow without sensation.

Rain-water may be endued with some vegetating or prolific virtue, derived from some saline or oleose particles. Ray.

As long as the seeds remained lodged in a natural soil, they would soon vegetate, and send forth a new set of trees.

Woodward.

See dying vegetables life sustain;

See life dissolving vegetate again. Pope, Essay on Man.

VEGETA'TION.† n. s. [vegetation, Fr. from vegeto, Lat.]

1. The power of producing the growth of plants.

The exterior surface consisted of a terrestrial matter proper for the nourishment of plants, being little entangled with mere mineral matter, that was unfit for vegetation. Woodward.

The sun, deep-darting to the dark retreat
Of vegetation, sets the steaming power

At large. Thomson, Spring.

Love warbles through the vocal groves,
And vegetation paints the plain.

Anonymous.

2. The power of growth without sensation.

Plants, though beneath the excellency of creatures endued with sense, yet exceed them in the faculty of vegetation and of fertility. Hooker.

These pulsations I attribute to a plastick nature, or vital principle, as the vegetation of plants must also be. Ray.

VE'GETATIVE. adj. [vegetatif, Fr. from vegetate.]

1. Having the quality of growing without life.

Creatures vegetative and growing, have their seeds in themselves. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

2. Having the power to produce growth in plants.

The nature of plants doth consist in having a vegetative soul, by which they receive nourishment and growth, and are enabled to multiply their kind. Wilkins.

Homer makes deities of the vegetative faculties, and virtues of the field. Broome on the Odyssey.

VE'GETATIVENESS. n. s. [from vegetative.] The quality of producing growth.

VE'GETE.† adj. [vegetus, Latin.] Vigorous; active; spritely.

He had lived a healthful and vegete age till his last sickness.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. 4. § 1.

The soul was vegete, quick and lively; full of the innocence and spriteliness of youth. South.

The faculties in age must be less vegete and nimble than in youth. Wallis.

VE'GETIVE.† adj. [from vegeto, Lat.]

1. Vegetable; having the nature of plants.

Nor rent off, but cut off ripe bean with a knife,
For hindering stalke of hir vegetive life. Tusser.

2. Capable of growth; growing.

The light of heaven — quickens all kind of seeds; it makes them vegetive, and blossom, and fructify.

Hakewill on Prov. p. 96.

Man —

First vegetive, then feels, and reasons last.

Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

VE'GETIVE. n. s. [from the adjective.] A vegetable.

Hence vegetives receive their fragrant birth,

And clothe the naked bosom of the earth. Sandys.

The tree still panted in th' unfinished part,

Not wholly vegetive; and heav'd her heart. Dryden.

VE'GETOUS.* adj. [vegetus, Lat.] Lively; spritely; vegete.

If she be fair, young, and vegetous, no sweet-meats ever drew more flies.

B. Jonson, Epicoene.

VEI

VE'HEMENCE. } n. s. [vehementia, Latin.]
VE'HEMENCY. }

1. Violence; force.

Universal hubbub wild,

Of stunning sounds and voices all confus'd,
Assaults his ear with loudest vehemence. Milton, P. L.

2. Ardour; mental violence; fervour.

Think ye are men; deem it not impossible for you to err:
sift impartially your own hearts, whether it be force of reason, or vehemency of affection, which hath bred, and still doth feed these opinions in you. Hooker.

The best persuasions

Fail not to use; and with what vehemency

Th' occasion shall instruct you. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Would it apply well to the vehemence of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Shakspeare.

The extremity of the condition produced some earnestness and vehemency of expression more than ordinary. Clarendon.

This pure cause would kindle my rapt spirits

To such a flame of sacred vehemence,

That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize. Milton, Comus.

He hurries on his action with variety of events, and ends it in less compass than two months. This vehemence of his is most suitable to my temper. Dryden.

Marcus is over-warm; his fond complaints

Have so much earnestness and passion in them,

I hear him with a secret kind of horror,

And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison, Cato.

VE'HEMENT. adj. [vehement, Fr. vehemens, Latin.]

1. Violent; forcible.

A strong imagination hath more force upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehement or ponderous. Bacon.

Gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change. Grew.

2. Ardent; eager; fervent.

By their vehement instigation,

In this just suit come I to move your grace. Shakspeare.

I find

In all things else delight indeed; but such,
As us'd or not, works in the mind no change,
Nor vehement desire. Milton, P. L.

VE'HEMENTLY. adv. [from vehement.]

1. Forcibly.

2. Pathetically; urgently.

The Christian religion inculcates kindness more vehemently, and forbids malice and hatred more strictly than any religion did before. Tillotson.

VE'HICLE. n. s. [vehiculum, Latin.]

1. That in which any thing is carried.

Evil spirits might very properly appear in vehicles of flame, to terrify and surprize. Addison, Guardian.

2. That part of a medicine which serves to make the principal ingredient potable.

That the meat descends by one passage; the drink, or moistening vehicle, by another, is a popular tenet. Brown.

3. That by means of which any thing is conveyed.

The gaiety of a diverting word, serves as a vehicle to convey the force and meaning of a thing. L'Estrange.

VEHICULAR.* adj. [vehiculum, Lat.] Belonging to a vehicle. Coles, Dict. 1685.

VEIL. n. s. [velum, Latin.]

1. A cover to conceal the face.

To feed his fiery lustful eye,

He snatch'd the veil that hung her face before. Spenser.

The Paphian queen from that fierce battle borne,

With gored hand, and veil so rudely torn,

Like terror did among the immortals breed. Waller.

The famous painter cou'd allow no place

For private sorrow in a prince's face:

Yet, that his piece might not exceed belief,

He cast a veil upon supposed grief. Waller.

As veils transparent cover, but not hide,

Such metaphors appear when right apply'd.

When through the phrase we plainly see the sense,

Truth with such obvious meanings will dispense. Granville.

VEI

She accepts the hero, and the dame
Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense of shame. Pope.

2. A cover; a disguise.

I will pluck the borrow'd veil of modesty from the so seeming Mrs. Page; divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acteon. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

Knock on my heart; for thou hast skill to find
If it sound solid, or be fill'd with wind;
And thro' the veil of words thou view'st the naked mind.

Dryden.

The ill-natured man exposes those failings in human nature, which the other would cast a veil over. Addison.

To VEIL. v. a. [velo, Latin.]

1. To cover with a veil, or any thing which conceals the face.

Her face was veil'd; yet to my fancied sight,
Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shin'd. Milton, Sonn.
It became the Jewish fashion when they went to pray, to veil their heads and faces. Boyle.

2. To cover; to invest.

I descry,
From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill,
One of the heavenly host. Milton, P. L.

3. To hide; to conceal.

Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to shew, half veil the deep intent. Pope.

VEIN. n. s. [veine, Fr. vena, Latin.]

1. The veins are only a continuation of the extreme capillary arteries reflected back again towards the heart, and uniting their channels as they approach it, till at last they all form three large veins; the cava descendens, which brings the blood back from all the parts above the heart; the cava ascendens, which brings the blood from all the parts below
the heart; and the porta, which carries the blood to the liver. The coats of the veins are the same with those of the arteries, only the muscular coat is as thin in all the veins, as it is in the capillary arteries; the pressure of the blood against the sides of the veins being less than that against the sides of the arteries. In the veins there is no pulse, because the blood is thrown into them with a continued stream, and because it moves from a narrow channel to a wider. The capillary veins unite with one another, as the capillary arteries. In all the veins perpendicular to the horizon, excepting those of the uterus and of the porta, are small membranes or valves; like so many half thimbles stuck to the side of the veins, with their mouths towards the heart. In the motion of the blood towards the heart, they are pressed close to the side of the veins; but if blood should fall back, it must fill the valves; and they being distended, stop up the channel, so that no blood can repass them. Quincy.

When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins; I was a gentleman. Shakspeare.

Horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton, P. L.

2. Hollow; cavity.

Found where casual fire
Had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale,
Down to the veins of earth. Milton, P. L.

Let the glass of the prisms be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane, and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from sandholes.

Newton, Opticks.

3. Course of metal in the mine.

There is a vein for the silver. Job, xxviii. 1.
Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton, P. L.

VEL

It is in men as in soils, where sometimes there is a vein of gold which the owner knows not of. Swift, Thoughts.

4. Tendency or turn of the mind or genius.

Invoke the muses and improve my vein. Waller.
We ought to attempt no more than what is in the compass of our genius, and according to our vein. Dryden.

5. Favourable moment; time when any inclination is predominant.

Artizans have not only their growths and perfections, but likewise their veins and times. Wotton, Architecture.

6. Humour; temper.

I put your grace in mind
Of what you promis'd me. Shakspeare, Rich. III.
I am not in the giving vein to-day. Bacon.
Certainly he that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need to be afraid of others. Dryden.
They among themselves in pleasant vein
Stood scoffing. Milton, P. L.
Speak'st thou in earnest or in jesting vein? Dryden.
The currier struck the usurer upon the right vein.
L'Estrange.

7. Continued disposition.

The vein I have had of running into speculations of this kind, upon a greater scene of trade, have cost me this present service. Temple.

8. Current; continued production.

He can open a vein of true and noble thinking. Swift.

9. Strain; quality.

My usual vein. Oldham.

10. Streak; variegation: as, the veins of the marble.

VE'INED. } adj. [veineux, Fr. from vein.]
VE'INY. }

1. Full of veins.

2. Streaked; variegated.

The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs, and many of them are very finely veined.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

Effulgent, hence the veiny marble shines. Thomson.
VEL'IFEROUS. * adj. [velifer, from velum and fero, Lat.]

Carrying sails. Evelyn, Navig. and Comm. p. 53.
VEL'IFEROUS. * n. s. [velitatio, Lat.] A skirmish; a light contest; a dispute. Bullokar.

Let him but read those Pharsalian fields fought of late in France for their religion, their massacres, wherein by their own relations in 24 years I know not how many millions have been consumed, and he shall find ours to have been but velitations to theirs. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 679.

VELLE'ITY. n. s. [velléité, Fr. velléitas, from velle,
Latin.]

Velléity is the school term used to signify the lowest degree of desire. Locke.

The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it; but it is that which is called by the schools an imperfect velléity, and imports no more than an idle, un-operative complacency in, and desire of the end, without any consideration of the means. South.

To VELLICATE. v. a. [vellico, Latin.] To twitch;
to pluck; to act by stimulation.

Those smells are all strong, and do pull and vellicate the sense. Bacon.

Convulsions arising from something vellicating a nerve in its extremity, are not very dangerous. Arbuthnot.

VELLICATION. n. s. [vellicatio, Latin.] Twitching; stimulation.

All purges have a kind of twitching and vellication, besides the griping, which cometh of wind. Bacon.

There must be a particular motion and vellication imprest upon the nerves, else the sensation of heat will not be produced. Watts on the Mind.

VEL'LUM. † n. s. [velin, Fr. velamen, Latin; rather vi-tulinum, low Latin.] The skin of a calf dressed for the writer; a fine kind of parchment.

Like a child that some faire booke doth find,
With gilded leaves or colour'd velume plays.

Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

The skull was very thin, yielding to the least pressure of my finger, as a piece of vellum. Wiceman.

VE'LLET, and VE'LLUTE.* See VELVET.

VELO'CITY. n. s. [velocité, Fr. velocitas, Lat.] Speed; swiftness; quick motion.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun; or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power, been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities: they would not have revolved in concentric circles, but moved in hyperbolas, or parabolas, or in ellipses very eccentric.

Bentley, Sermons.

VELVET.† n. s. [velous, velours, Fr. the same; velouté, made of velvet; veluto, Ital. "a stuff of silk called velvet;" velutare, "to make soft or woolly, to work velvet-wise," Florio; vellutum, low Lat. villus from vellus, Lat. Our old word appears to have been written vellet, and vellute. "His vellet head began to shoot out." Spenser, Shep. Cal. May. "Charges of conches, vellute gowns," &c. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady. And also velure, which see.] Silk with a short fur or pile upon it.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

The different ranging the superficial parts of bodies, as of velvet, watered silk, we think probably is nothing but the different refraction of their insensible parts. Locke.

VELVET. adj.

1. Made of velvet.

This was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

2. Soft; delicate.

Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find. Shakespeare.

Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Then being alone,
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Shakespeare.

Such blessings nature pours,
O'er-stockt mankind enjoy but half her stores;
In distant wilds, by human eyes unseen,
She rears her flow'rs, and spreads her velvet green. Young.

To VELVET. v. n. To paint velvet.

Verditure, ground with a weak gum-arabick water, is the palest green that is, but good to velvet upon black in any drapery. Peacham on Drawing.

VELVETE'EN.* n. s. [from velvet; Ital. velutino, "slender, coarse velvet," Florio.] A kind of stuff, made in imitation of velvet.

VELURE. n. s. [velours, Fr.] Velvet. An old word. His horse with one girt, six times pieced, and a woman's crupper of velure, pieced with packthread. Shakespeare.

VENAL. adj. [venal, Fr. venalis, Latin.]

1. Mercenary; prostitute.

This verse be thine, my friend, nor thou refuse
This, from no venal or ungrateful muse. Pope.

2. [from vein.] Contained in the veins. A technical word. It is unreasonable to affirm, that the cool venal blood should be heated so high in the interval of two pulses. Ray.

VENALITY. n. s. [venalité, Fr. from venal.] Mercenariness; prostitution.

VENARY.* adj. [venarium, low Lat.] Relating to hunting. See an example of the word under venatical.

VENATICAL.† adj. [venaticus, Latin.] Used in hunting.

There be three for venary or venatical pleasure, in England, viz. a forest, a chase, and a park. Howell, Lett. iv. 16.

The manner of their venation we shall find to be otherways than by sawing away of trees. Brown.

To VEND. v. a. [vendre, Fr. vendo, Lat.] To sell; to offer to sale.

He had a great parcel of glasses packed up, which not having the occasion he expected to vend and make use of, lay by him. Boyle.

VENDE'E. n. s. [from vend.] One to whom any thing is sold.

If a vicar sows his glebe, or if he sells his corn, and the vendee cuts it, he must pay the tithes to the parson. Ayliffe.

VENDER. n. s. [vendeur, Fr. from vend.] A seller.

Where the consumption of commodity is, the venders eat themselves. Graunt.

Those make the most noise who have the least to sell, which is very observable in the venders of card-matches. Addison.

VENDIBLE. adj. [vendibilis, Latin.] Saleable; marketable.

Silence only is commendable

In a neat's tongue dried, and a maid not vendible. Shakespeare.

This so profitable and vendible a merchandize, riseth not to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities. Carew.

The ignorant mine-man, aiming only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible under such a determinate name, has neither the design nor skill to make nice separations of the heterogeneous bodies. Boyle.

VEN'DIBLE.* n. s. Any thing offered to sale.

The prices of all vendibles for the body of man and horse were stuck up in public places. Life of A. Wood, p. 300.

VEN'DIBLENESS.† n. s. [from vendible.] The state of being saleable. Sherwood.

VEN'DIBLY.† adv. [from vendible.] In a saleable manner. Sherwood.

VEN'DITATION.† n. s. [venditatio, from vendito, Lat.] Boastful display.

Some, by a cunning protestation against all reading, and false venditation of their own naturals, think to divert the sagacity of their readers from themselves, and cool the scent of their own fox-like thefts; when yet they are so rank as a man may find whole pages together usurped from one author. B. Jonson.

He that is full of grace and good works, affects not to make shew of it to the world; but rests sweetly in the secret testimony of a good conscience, and the silent applause of God's Spirit witnessing with his own; while contrarily the venditation of our own worth, or parts, or merits, argues a miserable indigence in them all. Bp. Hall, Occas. Medit. § 30.

VEN'DITION. n. s. [vendition, Fr. venditio, Latin:] Sale; the act of selling.

To VENE'ER. v. a. [among cabinet-makers.] To make a kind of marquetry or inlaid work, whereby several thin slices of fine woods of different sorts are fastened or glued on a ground of some common wood. Bailey.

The Palatine, proud Rome's imperial seat,

An awful pile! stands venerably great.

Thither the kingdoms and the nations come. Addison.

To VE'NERATE. v. a. [venerer, Fr. veneror, Lat.] To reverence; to treat with veneration; to regard with awe.

When baseness is exalted, do not bate

The place its honour for the person's sake:

The shrine is that which thou dost venerate,

And not the beast that bears it on its back. Herbert.

The lords and ladies here approaching paid

Their homage, with a low obeisance made:

And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryden.

A good clergyman must love and venerate the gospel that he teaches, and prefer it to all other learning. Richardson, Clarissa.

Ev'n the peasant dares these rights to scan,

And learn to venerate himself as man. Goldsmith.

VENERATION. n. s. [veneration, Fr. veneratio, Lat.]

Reverend regard; awful respect.

Theology is the comprehension of all other knowledge, directed to its true end, i. e. the honour and veneration of the Creator, and the happiness of mankind. Locke.

We find a secret awe and veneration for one who moves above us in a regular and illustrious course of virtue. Addison.

VE'NERATOR.* n. s. [from venerate.] Reverencer.

Those times were high venerators of vowed virginity.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 123.

If the state of things, as they now appear, involve a repugnancy to an eternal existence, the arguments must be conclusive to those great priests and venerators of nature. Hal.

VENE'REAL. adj. [venereus, Latin.]

1. Relating to love.

These are no venereal signs;

Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand. Shakspeare.

Then swol'n with pride, into the snare I fell,

Of fair fallacious looks, venereal trains,

Softened with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton, S. A.

They are averse to venereal pleasure. Addison.

Venereal distempers confirmed by frequent relapses, where the transient satisfaction is overbalanced by a sad variety of tragical sufferings that attend it, often produce a downright consumption of the lungs. Blackmore.

2. Consisting of copper, called venus by chemists.

Blue vitriol, how venereal and unsophisticated soever, rubbed upon the whetted blade of a knife, will not impart its latent colour. Boyle.

VENE'REAN.* adj. [from venery.] Venereal. Not now in use.

Others fall in love with light wives; I do not mean venerean lightness, but in reference to portion. Howell, Lett. i. vi. 60.

one careless of truth or falsehood. Addison.

VE'NOMOUSLY. adv. [from venomous.] Poisonously;
mischievously; malignantly.

His unkindness,
That strip'd her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties. These things sting him
So venomously, that burning shame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

His praise of foes is venomously nice;
So touch'd, it turns a virtue to a vice. Dryden.

VE'NOMOUSNESS. n. s. [from venomous.] Poisonous-ness; malignity.

VENT.† n. s. [fente, French.]

1. A small aperture; a hole; a spiracle; passage at which any thing is let out.

On her breast
There is a vent of blood, and something blown;
The like is on her arm. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
They at once their reeds
Put forth, and to a narrow vent apply'd

With nicest touch. Milton, P. L.
Have near the bung-hole a little vent-hole stopped with a spile. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Scarce any countries that are much annoyed with earthquakes, that have not one of these fiery vents, disgorging that fire, whereby it gains an exit. Woodward.

To draw any drink, be not at the trouble of opening a vent;
or if you take out the vent, stay not to put it in.
Full o'er their heads the swelling bag he rent,
And all the furies issued at the vent. Pope.

2. Passage out of secrecy to publick notice.
It failed by late setting-out, and some contrariety of weather, whereby the particular design took vent beforehand. Wotton.

3. The act of opening.
The farmer's cades mature,
Now call for vent; his lands exhaust, permit
T' indulge a-while. Philips.

4. Emission; passage.
The smother'd fondness burns within him;
When most it swells and labours for a vent,
The sense of honour, and desire of fame,
Drive the big passion back into his heart. Addison, Cato.

5. Discharge; means of discharge.

D D

Had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words. Milton.
Land-floods are a great improvement of land, where a vent can be had. Mortimer, Husbandry.

6. [vente, Fr. venditio, Lat.] Sale.
For the mart, it was alleged that the vent for English clothes would hereby be open in all times of war. Hayward.
By this war there is no vent for any commodity but of wool.
Temple, Miscellany.

He drew off a thousand copies of a treatise, which not one in threescore can understand, can hardly exceed the vent of that number. Pope, Letters.

7. [venta, Spanish.] An inn; a baiting place. Not in use.

He perceived an inn near unto the high-way:—forthwith, as soon as he espied the vent, he feigned to himself that it was a castle with four turrets.

Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. P. i. ch. 2.

To VENT.† v. a. [venter, Fr. from the noun; sventare, Italian.]

1. To let out at a small aperture; to give a vent or opening to.

But the brave mayd would not disarmed be,
But only vented up her umbriere,
And so did let her goodly visage to appere. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To let out; to give way to.

Hunger broke stone walls; that the gods sent not
Corn for the rich men only: with these shreds
They vented their complainings. Shakespeare, Coriol.

When men are young, and have little else to do, they might vent the overflowings of their fancy that way. Denham.

Lab'ring still, with endless discontent,
The queen of heav'n did thus her fury vent. Dryden.

3. To utter; to report.

Had it been vented and imposed in some of the most learned ages, it might then, with some pretence of reason, have been said to be the invention of some crafty statesman.

Stevens.

4. To emit; to pour out.

Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

5. To publish.

Their sectators did greatly enrich their inventions, by venting the stolen treasures of divine letters, altered by profane additions, and disguised by poetical conversions. Ralegh.

6. To sell; to let go to sale.

This profitable merchandize not rising to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities, they impute to the owners not venting and venturing the same.

Carew.

Therefore did those nations vent such spice, sweet gums and pearls, as their own countries yielded. Ralegh.

To VENT.† v. n. To snuff: as, he venteth into the air.

Seest how brag yon bullocke bears?—
See how he venteth into the wind. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

VE'NTAGE.* n. s. [from vent.] A small hole. Not in use.

Govern these ventages with your fingers and thumb, give it
[the pipe] breath with your mouth. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

VE'NTAIL.† n. s. [ventaille, old Fr.] That part of the helmet made to lift up; the breathing part of the helmet.

Eftsoones they gan their wrothfull hands to hold,
And ventails reare, each other to behold. Spenser, F. Q.

As white as snow upon the Alpine clift

The virgin shone in silver arms array'd;

Her ventail up so high, that he descry'd

Her goodly visage and her beauty's pride.

Fairfax, Tass. vi. 26.

VENTA'NNA. n. s. [Spanish.] A window.

What after pass'd
Was far from the ventanna, where I sate;
But you were near, and can the truth relate. Dryden.

VENTER. n. s. [Latin.]

1. Any cavity of the body, chiefly applied to the head, breast, and abdomen, which are called by anatomists
the three venters.

2. Womb; mother.

A. has issue B. a son, and C. a daughter, by one venter; and
D. a son by another venter. If B. purchases in fee, and dies without issue, it shall descend to the sister, and not to the brother of the half blood. Hale.

VE'NTER.* n. s. [from To vent.] One who utters, reports, or publishes.

What do these superfluities signify, but that the venter of them doth little skill the use of speech, or the rule of conversation, but meaneth to prate any thing without judgement or wit. Barrow, vol. i. S. 15.

VE'NTIDUCT. n. s. [ventus and ductus, Lat.] A passage for the wind.

Having been informed of divers ventiducts, I wish I had had the good fortune, when I was at Rome, to take notice of these organs. Boyle.

To VENTILATE.† v. a. [ventilo, Lat. ventiller, old Fr.]

1. To fan with wind.

In close, low, and dirty alleys, the air is penned up, and obstructed from being ventilated by the winds. Harvey.

Miners, by perflations with large bellows, letting down tubes, and sinking new shafts, give free passage to the air, which ven-tilates and cools the mines. Woodward.

2. To winnow; to fan.

Cockeram.

3. To examine; to discuss.

Nor is the right of the party, nor the judicial process in right of that party so far perempted; but that the same may be begun again, and ventilated de novo. Ayliffe.

The second Review of the Annotations, as also the Exposition on the Book of Psalms,—ventilated between him and his dear friend the reverend and most learned doctor Sanderson.

Fell, Life of Hammond, § 1.

VENTILA'TION.† n. s. [ventilatio, Latin; from ventilate.]

1. The act of fanning; the state of being fanned.

The soil, worn with too frequent culture, must lie fallow, till it has recruited its exhausted salts, and again enriched itself
by the ventilations of the air. Addison.

2. Vent; utterance. Not in use.

To his secretary Doctor Mason, whom he let lie in a pallet near him, for natural ventilation of his thoughts, he would break out into bitter eruptions. Wotton, D. of Buckingham.

3. Refrigeration.

Procure the blood a free course, ventilation and transpiration by suitable and ecphractic purges. Harvey.

4. Examination; discussion.

Nor doth the victor commonly permit any ventilation of his dictates; for when the body is a slave, why should the reason be free? Abp. Sancroft, Modern Pol. § 5.

VE'NTILATOR. n. s. [from ventilate.] An instrument contrived by Dr. Hale to supply close places with fresh air.

VENTO'SITY.* n. s. [ventosité, Fr. from ventosus, Lat.]
Windiness.

Without ventosity or popularity.

Bacon to Sir R. Cecil, Suppl. to Cab. p. 49.

The quality of knowledge, which, be it in quantity more or less, if it be taken without the due corrective thereof, hath in it some nature of venom or malignity, and some effects of that venom, which is ventosity or swelling.

Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. i.

If there be any danger of ventosity, as there may very well be in such persons as are of a melancholy constitution, then you shall use decoctions. Ferrand on Melanch. p. 267.

VE'NTRAL.* adj. [from venter.] Belonging to the belly.

It is said, that the young of the viper, when terrified, will run down the throat of the parent, and seek shelter in its belly, in the same manner as the young of the opossum retire into the ventral pouch of the old one. Chambers.

VE'NTRICLE. n. s. [ventricule, Fr. ventriculus, Lat.]

1. The stomach.

Whether I will or not, while I live, my heart beats, and my ventricle digests what is in it. Hale.

2. Any small cavity in an animal body, particularly those of the heart.

Know'st thou how blood, which to the heart doth flow, Doth from one ventricle to the other go? Donne.

The heart being a muscular part, the sides are composed of two orders of fibres running spirally from base to top, contrarily one to the other; and so being drawn or contracted, constringe the ventricles, and strongly force out the blood. Ray.

The mixture of blood and chyle, after its circulation through the lungs, being brought back into the left ventricle of the heart, is drove again by the heart into the aorta, through the whole arterial system. Arbuthnot.

VENTRI'LOQUISM.* } n. s. [ventriloque, Fr. ventrilo-
VENTRI'LOQUY. } quus, Lat. venter and loquor,
Lat.] Ventriloquy is in the old vocabularies of Cockram and Bullokar.] The act of speaking inwardly, so that the sound seems to issue from the belly; the art of forming speech, by drawing the air into the lungs, so that the voice, proceeding out of the thorax, to a by-stander seems to come from some distance, or in any direction. Chambers.

Some faint traces of the art or faculty of ventriloquism are to be found in the writings of the ancients. Chambers.

VENTRI'LOQUIST.* } n. s. [ventriloque, Fr. ventriloquus,
Lat.] One who speaks in such a manner as that the sound seems to issue from his belly.

It appears from Plutarch, Suidas, (in V. Εὐλαστεινός), and Josephus, that those who were anciently called ventriloquists, had afterwards the name of pythoneses.—It seems that the factitious voice, produced by a ventriloquist, does not (as the etymology of the word imports) proceed from the belly, but is formed in the inner parts of the mouth and throat. Chambers.

VENTRI'LOQUOUS.* adj. [ventriloque, French; ventriloquus, Latin.] Emitting sound as a ventriloquist.

Whether the bleating or humming of cock-snipes in breeding time is ventriloquous, or proceeds from the motion of their wings, I cannot say. White's Selborne, p. 99.

VENTURE. n. s. [avanture, Fr.]

1. A hazard; an undertaking of chance and danger.

When he reads
Thy personal venture in the rebel's fight,
His wonders and his praises do contend
Which should be thine or his. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

For a man to doubt whether there be any hell, and thereupon to live so as if absolutely there were none; but when he dies to find himself confuted in the flames, this must be the height of woe and disappointment, and a bitter conviction of an irrational venture, and absurd choice. South.

I, in this venture, double gains pursue,
And laid out all my stock to purchase you. Dryden.

When infinite happiness is put in one scale, against infinite misery in the other; if the worst that comes to the pious man, if he mistakes, be the best that the wicked can attain to, if he be in the right, who can, without madness, run the venture? Locke.

2. Chance; hap.

The king resolved with all speed to assail the rebels, and yet with that providence and surety, as should leave little to venture or fortune. Bacon.

3. The thing put to hazard; a stake.

My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,
Nor to one place. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

On such a full sea are we now afloat:
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Thrice happy you, that look as from the shore,
And have no venture in the wreck to see. Daniel.

4. At a VENTURE. At hazard; without much consideration; without any thing more than the hope of a lucky chance.

You have made but an estimate of those lands at a venture, so as it should be hard to build any certainty of charge upon it. Spenser.

A bargain at a venture made,
Between two partners in a trade. Hudibras.

A covetous and an envious man joined in a petition to Jupiter, who ordered Apollo to tell them that their desire should be granted at a venture. L'Estrange.

Here was no scampering away at a venture, without fear or wit. L'Estrange.

If Ahab be designed for death, though a soldier in the enemy's army draws a bow at a venture, yet the sure unerring directions of Providence shall carry it in a direct course to his heart. South.

To VENTURE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dare.

A man were better rise in his suit; for he that would have ventured at first to have lost the suitor, will not in the conclusion lose both the suitor and his own former favour. Bacon.

Origen mentioning their being cast out of Jerusalem, ventures to assure them that they would never be re-established, since they had committed that horrid crime against the Saviour of the world. Addison on the Christian Religion.

2. To run a hazard.

Nor is indeed that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas,
With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by every wave. Dryden.
I am so overjoy'd, I can scarce believe I am at liberty; like a bird that has often beaten her wing in vain against her cage, dare hardly venture out, though she see it open. Dryden.

3. To VENTURE at. } To engage in; or make
To VENTURE on or upon. } attempts without any security of success, upon mere hope.

That slander is found a truth now; and held for certain,
The king will venture at it. Shakespeare.

It were a matter of great profit, save that it is too conjectural to venture upon, if one could discern what corn, herbs, or fruits are like to be in plenty and scarcity, by some signs in the beginning of the year. Bacon.

I never yet the tragic strain essay'd,
Deterr'd by that inimitable maid:
And when I venture at the comic stile,
Thy scornful lady seems to mock my toil. Waller.

Though they had ideas enough to distinguish gold from a stone, yet they but timorously ventured on such terms as aurietas and saxietas. Locke.

Turco-Papismus I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping of characters. Atterbury.

To VENTURE.† v. a.

1. To expose to hazard.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight;
By vent'ring both, I oft found both. Shakespeare.

2. To put or send on a venture.

The fish ventured for France, they pack in staunch hog-sheads, so as to keep them in their pickle. Carew.

3. To trust; to rely on. Not proper. Hurd.

A man would be well enough pleased to buy silks of one, whom he would not venture to feel his pulse. Addison, Spect. No. 21.

VENTURER.† n. s. [from venture.] One who ventures.

Injury in extortioners, rashness in venturers, treachery in traitors.
Higgins, Epist. Ded. Mir. for Mag. (1610.)
 Remember, you're all venturers, and in this play
 How many twelve-pences ye have 'stow'd this day.

Beaum. and Fl. Mad Lov. Prot.

VENTURESOME. adj. [from venture.] Bold; daring.

VENTURESOMELY. adv. In a bold or daring manner.

Wise venturing is the most commendable part of human prudence.
Ld. Halifax.

VENTUROUS. adj. [from venture.] Daring, bold, fearless; ready to run hazards.

Charles was guided by mean men, who would make it their master-piece of favour to give venturous counsels, which no great or wise man would.
Bacon.

He paus'd not, but with vent'rous arm
 He pluck'd, he tasted.
Milton, P. L.

Columbus having led the way, was seconded by Americus Vesputius, an old venturous Florentine.
Heylin.

The venturous humour of our mariners costs this island many brave lives every year.
Temple.

Savage pirates seek through seas unknown,
 The lives of others, vent'rous of their own.
Pope.

VENTUROUSLY. adv. [from venturous.] Daringly; fearlessly; boldly.

Siege was laid to the fort by the Lord Gray, then deputy, with a smaller number than those were within the fort; venturously indeed; but haste was made to attack them before the rebels came in to them.
Bacon.

VENTUROUSNESS. n. s. [from venturous.] Boldness; willingness to hazard.

Her coming into a place where the walls and cielings were whited over, much offended her sight, and made her repent her venturousness.
Boyle on Colours.

VENUE.* n. s. [visne, old Fr. vicinium, Lat.]

1. [In law.] A neighbouring place.
 Twelve of the assise ought to be of the same venue where the demand is made.
Cowel.

2. A thrust; a hit. [See VENEY.]

VENUS.* n. s. [Latin.] One of the planets.

Yet you, the murderer, look as bright, as clear,
 As yonder Venus in her glimmering sphere.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

VENUS' basin. † [diasacus major, Lat.]

VENUS' comb. [pecten Veneris, Lat.]

VENUS' hair. [adiantum.]

VENUS' looking-glass.

VENUS' navel-wort.

Botanists show a very particular regard to the fair sex; — as we may well conclude from so many names they give to plants; ladies' fingers, ladies' traces, ladies' linen, Venus' glass, Venus' basin, &c.

VENUST.* adj. [venuste, old Fr. venustus, Latin.]

Beautiful; amiable. The word is in Cockeram's old vocabulary, but not now in use. It is employed by a Scottish writer. See Jamieson.

Clarke, Lat. Gram.

Men usually talk of a noun and a verb.
Shakspeare.

2. A word. Not in use.

That so it might appear, that the assistance of the Spirit promised to the church, was not a vain thing, or a mere verb.
South, vol. ix. S. 5.

VERBAL. adj. [verbal, Fr. verbalis, Lat.]

1. Spoken, not written.

2. Oral; uttered by mouth.

Made she no verbal quest? —
 — Yes; once or twice she heav'd the name of father
 Pantingly forth, as if it prest her heart.
Shakspeare.

3. Consisting in mere words.

If young African for fame,
 His wasted country freed from Punick rage,
 The deed becomes unprais'd, the man at least;
 And loses, though but verbal, his reward.
Milton, P. R.
 Being at first out of the way to science, in the progress of their inquiries they must lose themselves, and the truth, in a verbal labyrinth.
Glanville.

It was such a denial or confession of him as would appear in preaching: but this is managed in words and verbal profession.
South.

4. Verbose; full of words. Out of use.

VERDITER. n. s. Chalk made green.

Verditure ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the faintest and palest green. Peacham.

VERDURE. n. s. [verdure, French.] Green; green colour.

Its verdure clad
Her universal face with pleasant green. Milton, P. L.

Let twisted olive bind those laurels fast,
Whose verdure must for ever last. Prior.

VERDUROUS. † adj. [from verdure.] Green; covered with green; decked with green.

The scentful camomile, the verdurous costmary. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 15.

Higher than their tops
The verd'rous wall of paradise up-sprung;
Which to our general sire gave prospect large. Milton, P. L.
There the lowing herds chew verd'rous pasture. Philips.

VERECUND. † } adj. [verecund, old French; verecundus, Lat.] Modest; bashful. Dict.

Your brow proclaimeth much fidelity; a certain verecundious generosity graceth your eyes. Wotton, Rem. p. 156.

VERECUNDITY.* n. s. [verecundia, Lat.] Bashfulness; modesty; blushing. Lemon.

VERGE. n. s. [verge, Fr. virga, Lat.]

1. A rod, or something in form of a rod, carried as an emblem of authority. The mace of a dean.

Suppose him now a dean compleat,
Devoutly lolling in his seat;
The silver verge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side. Swift.

2. [vergo, Lat.] The brink; the edge; the utmost border.

Would the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red hot steel to sear me to the brain. Shakspeare.

I say, and will in battle prove,
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge,
That ever was survey'd by English eye. Shakspeare.

You are old,
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confine. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Serve they as a flowery verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same watry cloud,
Lest it again dissolve and show'r the earth? Milton, P. L.

Let fortune empty her whole quiver on me,
I have a soul, that, like an ample shield,
Can take in all, and verge enough for more. Dryden.

Every thing great, within the verge of nature, or out of it, has a proper part assigned it in this poem. Addison.

Then let him chuse a damsel young and fair,
To bless his age, and bring a worthy heir,
To sooth his care, and, free from noise and strife,
Conduct him gently to the verge of life. Pope.

3. In law.
Verge is the compass about the king's court, bounding the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household, and of the coroner of the king's house, and which seems to have been 12 miles round. Verge hath also another signification, and is used for a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant, and, holding it in his hand, sweareth fealty to the lord of the manor; who, for that reason, is called tenant by the verge. Cowel.

Fear not; whom we raise,
We will make fast within a hallow'd verge. Shakespeare.

To VERGE. v. n. [vergo, Latin.] To tend; to bend downwards.

They serve indifferently for vowels in respect of the aperture, and for consonants in respect of the pene-appulse; and so much the more verging either way, according to the respective occasions. Holder.

The nearer I find myself verging to that period of life which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I prop myself upon those few supports that are left. Swift.

Such are indicated, when the juices of a human body verge to putrefaction. Arbutnot.

Man,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not the whole. Pope.

VE'RGER.† n. s. [verger, old Fr. "bedeau d'église," Lacombe; from verge.] He that carries the mace before the dean.

I can tip the verger with half a crown, and get into the best seat. Farquhar.

VERI'DICAL. adj. [veridicus, Latin.] Telling truth. Dict.

VE'RIFIABLE.* adj. [from verify.] That may be verified; that may be confirmed by incontestable evidence.

All this by a very easy, but yet certain and true analogy, is applicable to the eye of the soul, the conscience, and the instance is verifiable upon it, in every one of the alleged particulars. South, Sermon. iii. 60.

VERIFICA'TION.† n. s. [from verify.] Confirmation by argument or evidence.

Record your desires, and present yourself to God by general acts of will and understanding, and by habitual remembrances of your former vigorousness, and by verification of the same grace rather than proper exercises.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. 4. § 1.

In verification of this we will mention a phenomenon of our engine. Boyle.

VE'RIFIER. n. s. [from verify.] One who assures a thing to be true.

To VE'RIFY. v. a. [verifier, Fr.] To justify against charge of falsehood; to confirm; to prove true.

What seemeth to have been uttered concerning sermons, and their efficacy or necessity, in regard of divine matter, must consequently be verified in sundry other kinds of teaching, if the matter be the same in all. Hooker.

This is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty, ought to be restored. Bacon.

So shalt thou best fulfil, best verify
The prophets old, who sung thy endless reign. Milton, P. R.

So spake this oracle, then verified,
When Jesus, son of Mary, second Eve,
Saw Satan fall. Milton, P. L.

Though you may mistake a year;
Though your prognosticks run too fast,
They must be verify'd at last. Swift.

Spain shall have three kings; which is now wonderfully verified; for besides the king of Portugal, there are now two rivals for Spain. Swift.

VE'RILY. adv. [from very.]

1. In truth; certainly.
Verily 'tis better to be lowly born,
Than to be perk'd up in a glist'ring grief. Shakespeare.

2. With great confidence.
It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disfavours of that voyage, the enterprize had succeeded. Bacon.

By repealing the sacramental test, we are verily persuaded the consequence will be an entire alteration of religion among us. Swift on the Sacramental Test.

VERISIMILAR. } adj. [verisimilis, Lat.] Probable; VERISIMILOUS. } likely.

Many erroneous doctrines of Pontificians are, in our days, wholly supported by verisimilous and probable reasons. White.

VERISIMILITUDE. } n. s. [verisimilitudo, Lat.] Probability; likelihood; resemblance of truth.

Touching the verisimilitude or probable truth of this relation, several reasons seem to overthrow it. Brown.

A noble nation, upon whom if not such verities, at least such verisimilitudes of fortitude were placed. Brown.

Verisimilitude and opinion are an easy purchase; but true knowledge is dear and difficult. Like a point, it requires an acuteness to its discovery: while verisimilitude, like the expanded superficies, is obvious, sensible, and affords a large and easy field for loose enquiry. Glanville.

The plot, the wit, the characters, the passions, are exalted as high as the imagination of the poet can carry them, with proportion to verisimilitude. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

Though Horace gives permission to painters and poets to dare every thing, yet he encourages neither to make things out of nature and verisimilitude. Dryden.

VE'RITABLE. adj. [veritable, Fr.] True; agreeable to fact.

Indeed! is't true?

— Most veritable; therefore look to't well. Shakespeare.

The presage of the year succeeding made from insects in oak-apples, is I doubt too indistinct, nor veritable from event. Brown, Vulg. Err.

VE'RITABLY. adv. [from veritable.] In a true manner.

VE'RITY. n. s. [verité, Fr. veritas, Lat.]

1. Truth; consonance to the reality of things.

If any refuse to believe us disputing for the verity of religion established, let them believe God himself thus miraculously working for it. Hooker.

I saw their weapons drawn; there was a noise;
That's verity. Shakespeare, Tempest.

The precipitancy of disputation, and the stir and noise of passions that usually attend it, must needs be prejudicial to verity; its calm insinuations can no more be heard in such a bustle, than a whistle among a crowd of sailors in a storm. Glanville.

It is a proposition of eternal verity, that none can govern while he is despised. We may as well imagine that there may be a king without majesty, a supreme without sovereignty. South.

2. A true assertion; a true tenet.

And that age, which my grey hairs make seem more than it is, hath not diminished in me the power to protect an undeniable verity. Sidney.

Wherefore should any man think, but that reading itself is one of the ordinary means, whereby it pleaseth God, of his gracious goodness, to instil that celestial verity, which being but so received, is nevertheless effectual to save souls. Hooker.

If there come truth from them,
Why by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well? Shakespeare.

Must virtue be preserved by a lie?
Virtue and truth do ever best agree;

By this it seems to be a verity,
Since the effects so good and virtuous be. Davies.

3. Moral truth; agreement of the words with the thoughts.

VE'RJUICE. n. s. [verjus, Fr.] Acid liquor expressed from crab-apples. It is vulgarly pronounced verges. Hang a dog upon a crab-tree, and he'll never love verjuice. L'Estrange.

The barley-pudding comes in place:
Then bids fall on; himself, for saving charges,
A peel'd slic'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice. Dryden.

The native verjuice of the crab, deriv'd
Through th' infix'd graff, a grateful mixture forms
Of tart and sweet. Philips.

VE'RMEIL.* See VERMIL.

VERMICE'LLI. n. s. [Italian.] A paste rolled and broken in the form of worms.

With oysters, eggs, and vermicelli,
She let him almost burst his belly.

Prior.

VERMI'CULAR. adj. [vermiculus, Lat.] Acting like a worm; continued from one part to another of the same body.

By the vermicular motion of the intestines, the grosser parts are derived downwards, while the finer are squeez'd into the narrow orifices of the lacteal vessels.

Cheyne.

To VERMI'ULATE. v. a. [vermiculé, Fr. vermiculatus, Latin.] To inlay; to work in chequer work, or pieces of divers colours.

Bailey.

VERMICULA'TION. n. s. [from vermiculate.] Continuation of motion from one part to another.

My heart moves naturally by the motion of palpitation; my guts by the motion of vermiculation.

Hale.

VE'RMICULE. n. s. [vermiculus, vermis, Latin.] A little grub, worm.

I saw the shining oak-ball ichneumon strike its terebra into an oak-apple, to lay its eggs therein: and hence are many vermicules seen towards the outside of these apples.

Derham.

VERMI'CULOUS. adj. [vermiculosus, Lat.] Full of grubs; resembling grubs.

VERMI'FORM. adj. [vermiforme, Fr. vermis and formo, Latin.] Having the shape of a worm.

VE'RMIL.†

VERMI'LION. } n. s. [vermeil, vermillon, Fr.]

VE'RMILY.

1. The cochineal; a grub of a particular plant.

2. Factitious or native cinnabar; sulphur mixed with mercury. This is the usual though not primitive signification.

The same she temper'd with fine mercury,

And virgin wax that never yet was seal'd,

And mingled them with perfect vermily,

That like a lively sanguine it seem'd to the eye.

Spenser, F. Q.

The imperfect metals are subject to rust, except mercury, which is made into vermillon by solution or calcination.

Bacon.

The fairest and most principal red is vermillon, called in Latin minium. It is a poison, and found where great store of quicksilver is.

Peacham.

3. Any beautiful red colour.

How the red roses flush up in her cheeks,
And the pure snow with goodly vermil stain,
Like crimson dy'd in grain.

Spenser.

There grew a goodly tree him fair beside,
Loaden with fruit and apples rosie red,
As they in pure vermillon had been dy'd,
Whereof great virtues over all were read.

Spenser.

What need a vermeil-tinctur'd lip for that,

Love-darting eyes, and tresses like the morn?
Simple colours are strong and sensible, though they are clear as vermillon.

Milton, Comus.
Dryden, Dufresnoy.

To VERMI'LION. v. a. [from the noun.] To die red.

A sprightly red vermilions all her face,
And her eyes languish with unusual grace.

Granville.

VE'RMIN. n. s. [vermin, Fr. vermis, Latin.]

1. Any noxious animal. Used commonly for small creatures.

What is your study? —

— How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin.

Shakspeare.

The head of a wolf, dried and hanged up in a dove-house, will scare away vermin, such as weazels and polecats.

Bacon.

An idle person only lives to spend his-time, and eat the fruits of the earth, like a vermin or a wolf.

Taylor.

A weazle taken in a trap, was charg'd with misdemeanors, and the poor vermin stood much upon her innocence.

L' Etrange.

Great injuries these vermin, mice and rats, do in the field.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

He that has so little wit

To nourish vermin, may be bit.

Swift.

2. It is used in contempt of human beings.

The stars determine

You are my prisoners, base vermin.

Hudibras.

To VE'RMIMATE.† v. n. [from vermin.] To breed vermin.

The seed of the serpent, and its verminating principle.

Biblioth. Bibl. i. 152.

VERMINA'TION. n. s. [from verminate.] Generation of vermin.

Redi discarding anomalous generation, tried experiments relating to the vermination of serpents and flesh.

Derham.

VE'RMINOUS. adj. [from vermin.] Tending to vermin; disposed to breed vermin.

A wasting of children's flesh depends upon some obstruction of the entrails, or verminous disposition of the body.

Harvey.

VERMI'PAROUS. adj. [vermis and pario, Latin.] Producing worms.

Hereby they confound the generation of vermiparous animals with oviparous.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

VERNA'CLAR. adj. [vernaculus, Latin.] Native; of one's own country.

London weekly bills number deep in consumptions; the same likewise proving inseparable accidents to most other diseases; which instances do evidently bring a consumption under the notion of a vernacular disease to England.

Harvey.

The histories of all our former wars are transmitted to us in our vernacular idiom. I do not find in any of our chronicles, that Edward the third ever reconnoiter'd the enemy, though he often discovered the posture of the French, and as often vanquished them.

Addison.

VERNA'CULOUS.* adj. [vernaculus, Lat.]

1. Vernacular. Obsolete.

Beside their vernaculous and mother tongues.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 130.

2. Scoffing: a Latinism. Not in use.

Men, subject to the petulancy of every vernaculous orator.

B. Jonson, For, Dedic.

VE'RNAL. adj. [vernus, Latin.] Belonging to the spring.

With the year

Seasons return; but not to me returns,

Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer's rose.

Milton, P. L.

VE'RNANT.† adj. [vernans, Lat.] Flourishing as in the spring.

Vernant flowers appear

To clad the soil with mantell newe.

Turberville's Poems, (1570,) p. 110.

VERSATILE. adj. [versatilis, Latin.]

1. That may be turned round.

Th' advent'rous pilot in a single year
Learn'd his state cock-boat dext'rously to steer;
Versatile, and sharp-piercing like a screw,
Made good th' old passage, and still forc'd a new. Harte.

2. Changeable; variable.

One colour to us standing in one place, hath a contrary aspect in another; as in those versatile representations in the neck of a dove, and folds of scarlet. Glanville.

3. Easily applied to a new task.

VERSATILENESS. } n. s. [from versatile.] The VERSATILITY. } quality of being versatile.

Nothing can more fully demonstrate the extent and versatility of these two original geniuses. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

VERSE. n. s. [vers, Fr. versus, Latin.]

1. A line consisting of a certain succession of sounds, and number of syllables.

Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love. Shakspeare.

2. [verset, Fr.] A section or paragraph of a book.

Thus far the questions proceed upon the construction of the first earth; in the following verses they proceed upon the demolition of that earth. Burnet.

3. Poetry; lays; metrical language.

Verse embalms virtue: and tombs and thrones of rhymes
Preserve frail transitory fame as much
As spice doth body from air's corrupt touch. Donne.
If envious eyes their hurtful rays have cast,
More powerful verse shall free thee from the blast. Dryden.
Whilst she did her various pow'r dispose;
Virtue was taught in verse, and Athens' glory rose. Prior.

You compose
In splay-foot verse, or hobbling prose. Prior.

4. A piece of poetry.

This verse, my friend, be thine. Pope.

TO VERSE. } v. a. [from the noun.] To tell in verse;
to relate poetically.

In the shape of Corin sat all day,

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 478.

V E R

VERSIFICATION. n. s. [versification, Fr. from versify.] The art or practice of making verses.

Donne alone had your talent, but was not happy to arrive at your versification. Dryden.

Some object to his versification; which is in poetry, what colouring is in painting, a beautiful ornament. But if the proportions are just, though the colours should happen to be rough, the piece may be of inestimable value. Granville.

VERSIFICATOR. } n. s. [versificateur, Fr. versificator,
VERSIFIER. } Latin.] A versifier; a maker of verses with or without the spirit of poetry.

Statius, the best versificator next Virgil, knew not how to design after him. Dryden.

In Job and the Psalms we shall find more sublime ideas, more elevated language, than in any of the heathen versifiers of Greece or Rome. Watts on the Mind.

TO VERSIFY. v. n. [versifier, Fr. versificor, Latin.]

To make verses.

You would wonder to hear how soon even children will begin to versify. Sidney.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming, than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat bread among men. Ascham.

I'll versify in spite, and do my best
To make as much waste paper as the rest. Dryden.

TO VERSIFY. } v. a. To relate in-verse; to represent in verse.

Unintermix'd with fictitious fantasies,
I'll versify the truth, not poetize. Daniel.
Shall I tell you whom I love?
Hearken then a while to me;
And if such a woman move
As I now shall versify;
Be assur'd, 'tis her, or none,
That I love, and love alone. Browne, Brit. Past. B. 2. S. 2.

VERSION. n. s. [version, Fr. versio, Latin.]

1. Change; transformation.

Springs, the antients thought to be made by the version of air into water. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Change of direction.

Comets are rather gazed upon, than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet, for magnitude, colour, version of the beams, produceth what kind of effects.
Bacon.

3. Translation.

This exact propriety of Virgil I particularly regarded; but must confess, that I have not been able to make him appear wholly like himself. For where the original is close, no version can reach it in the same compass. Dryden.

It will be as easy, nay much easier, to invent some pretence or other against the reading, version, or construction.
Waterland.

4. The act of translating.

VERST.* n. s. [Russian.] About three quarters of an English mile.

From Colmogro to Usting are five hundred versets or little miles. Milton, Brief Hist. of Moscovia.

VERT. } n. s. [vert, French.]

1. Vert, in the laws of the forest, signifies every thing that grows, and bears a green leaf, within the forest, that may cover and hide a deer. Cowel.

I find no mention in all the records of Ireland, of a park or free warren, notwithstanding the great plenty of vert and venison. Sir J. Davies.

2. In heraldry, the colour green.

VERTEBRAL. adj. [from vertebræ, Latin.] Relating to the joints of the spine.

The carotid, vertebral, and splenick arteries are not only variously contorted, but here and there dilated, to moderate the motion of the blood. Ray on the Creation.

VERTEBRE. n. s. [vertebre, Fr. vertebra, Latin.] A joint of the back.

The several vertebres are so elegantly compacted together, that they are as strong as if they were but one bone. Ray.

VERTEX. n. s. [Latin.]

1. Zenith; the point over head.
These keep the vertex; but betwixt the bear
And shining zodiack, where the planets err,
A thousand figur'd constellations roll. Creech.
2. A top of a hill; the top of any thing.
Mountains especially abound with different species of vegetables; every vertex or eminence affording new kinds. Derham.

VERTICAL. adj. [vertical, Fr. from vertex.]

1. Placed in the zenith.
'Tis raging noon; and vertical the sun
Darts on the head direct his forceful rays. Thomson.
2. Placed in a direction perpendicular to the horizon.
From these laws, all the rules of bodies ascending or descending in vertical lines may be deduced. Cheyne.

VERTICALITY. n. s. [from vertical.] The state of being in the zenith.

Unto them the sun is vertical twice a-year; making two distinct summers in the different points of the verticality.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

VERTICALLY. adv. [from vertical.] In the zenith.

Although it be not vertical unto any part of Asia, yet it vertically passeth over Peru and Brasilia. Brown.

VERTICALNESS.* n. s. [from vertical.] The state of being vertical. Ash.

VERTICILLATE. adj. [from verticillum, Latin.]

Verticillate plants are such as have their flowers intermixt with small leaves growing in a kind of whirls about the joints of a stalk, as pennyroyal, horehound, &c. Quincy.

VERTICITY. n. s. [from vertex.] The power of turning; circumvolution; rotation.

Those stars do not peculiarly glance on us, but carry a common regard unto all countries, unto whom their verticity is also common. Brown, Vulg. Err.

We believe the verticity of the needle, without a certificate from the days of old. Glanville.

Whether they be globules, or whether they have a verticity about their own centers, that produce the idea of whiteness in us, the more particles of light are reflected from a body, the whiter does the body appear. Locke.

VERTICLE.* n. s. [Lat. verticulum.] An axis; a hinge.

Now grows our nation to its zenith: Fame is no friend to continuance; the verticle is near, when admiration from abroad, and luxury at home, threaten our change.

Waterhouse, Apol. for Learning, (1653), p. 51.

VERTIGINOUS.† adj. [vertiginosus, Latin.]

1. Turning round; rotatory.
This vertiginous motion gives day and night successively over the whole earth, and makes it habitable all around. Bentley.
2. Giddy.
Inconstant they are in all their actions, vertiginous, restless, unapt to resolve of any business. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 185.
I was sicke before of a vertiginous giddiness and irresolution. Donne, Devot. p. 193.
These extinguish candles, make the workmen faint and vertiginous; and, when very great, suffocates and kills them. Woodward.

VERTIGINOUSNESS.* n. s. [from vertiginous.] Unsteadiness.

He that commits sacrilege, is marked for a vertiginousness and changeable fortune. Bp. Taylor, Sermon. (1653), p. 282.

VERTIGO. n. s. [Latin.] A giddiness; a sense of turning in the head.

Vertigo is the appearance of visible objects that are without motion, as if they turned round, attended with a fear of falling, and a dimness of sight. Quincy.

The forerunners of an apoplexy are dulness, vertigos, tremblings. Arbuthnot.

That old vertigo in his head,
Will never leave him till he's dead. Swift.

VOL. V.

VETU'ST.* adj. [vetustus, Lat.] Old; ancient. Not in use. Cockeram.

To VEX.† v. a. [vexo, Latin.]

1. To plague; to torment; to harass.

Do you think
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

When she pressed him daily, so that his soul was vexed unto death, he told her all his heart. Judges, xvi. 16.

Still may the dog the wand'ring troops constrain
Of airy ghosts, and vex the guilty train. Dryden.

You are the cause of all my care:
Your eyes ten thousand dangers dart;
Ten thousand torments vex my heart;
I love, and I despair. Prior.

2. To disturb; to disquiet.

Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vex sea; singing aloud. Shakspeare.

Winds — rush'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world, and fell
On the vex'd wilderness. Milton, P. R.

Rang'd on the banks beneath our equal oars,
White curl the waves, and the vex'd ocean roars. Pope.

3. To trouble with slight provocations.

To VEX.† v. n. To fret; to be on tenters; to be uneasy.

Ulysses gave good care, and fed
And drunk his wine, and vex, and ravished
His food for mere vexation. Chapman.

We vex, and complain, and betray a mighty impotence of nature; we set no bounds to our grief. Killingbeck, Sermon, p. 193.

VE'XATION. n. s. [from vex.]

1. The act of troubling.

O that husband,
My supreme crown of grief, and those repeated vexations of it! Shakspeare, Cymb.

2. The state of being troubled; uneasiness; sorrow.

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death. Shakspeare.

Passions too violent, instead of heightening our pleasures, afford us nothing but vexation and pain. Temple.

3. The cause of trouble or uneasiness.

Your children were vexation to your youth;
But mine shall be a comfort to your age. Shakspeare.

4. An act of harassing by law.

Albeit the party grieved thereby, may have some reason to complain of an untrue charge, yet may he not well call it an unjust vexation. Bacon.

5. A slight teasing trouble.

VE'XATIOUS. adj. [from vexation.]

1. Afflictive; troublesome; causing trouble.

Consider him maintaining his usurped title, by continual vexations wars against the kings of Judah. South.

Vexatious thought still found my flying mind,
Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd;

Haunted my nights, and terrify'd my days;
Stalk'd through my gardens, and pursu'd my ways;

Nor shut from artful bow'r, nor lost in winding maze. Prior.

2. Full of trouble; full of uneasiness.

He leads a vexatious life, who in his noblest actions is so gored with scruples, that he dares not make a step without the authority of another. Digby.

3. Teasing; slightly troublesome.

VE'XATIOUSLY.† adv. [from vexatious.] Troublesomely; uneasily.

As to our neighbour and rival, France, I shall formally prove it, that her subjects pay more than England, on a computation of the wealth of both parties; that her taxes are more vexatiously collected.

Burke, Obs. on the State of the Nation, (1769.)

VE'XATIOUSNESS. n. s. [from vexatious.] Troublesomeness; uneasiness.

VE'XER.† n. s. [from vex.] One who vexes.

Huloet.

VE'XINGLY.* adv. [from To vex.] So as to vex, plague, or disturb.

It is the same poverty which makes men speak or write smuttily, that forces them to talk vexingly. Tatler, No. 269.

U'GLILY. adv. [from ugly.] Filthily; with deformity; in such a manner as to raise dislike.

U'GLINESS. n. s. [from ugly.]

1. Deformity; contrariety to beauty.

All that else seem'd fair and fresh in sight,

Was turned now to dreadful ugliness.

Spenser.

She takes her topicks from the advantages of old age and ugliness.

Dryden.

2. Turpitude; loathsomeness; moral depravity.

Their dull ribaldry cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any one, who does not, for the sake of the sin itself, pardon the ugliness of its circumstances.

South.

U'GLY.† adj. [This word was anciently written ougly; whence Mr. Dyer ingeniously deduces it from ouphlike; that is, like an ouph, elf, or goblin. In Saxon oga is terrour; and in Gothick ogan is to fear. Dr. Johnson. — The word, no doubt, is from the Goth. ogan, to fear; oga, Icel. the same; whence ugg, uggir, horreur, fear; and thus, in old English, “uggyll, uggly, horribilis.” Prompt. Parv. We had anciently also the verb “ugglyn, horreo.” Ibid.] Deformed; offensive to the sight; contrary to beautiful; hateful.

If Cassio do remain,

He hath a daily beauty in his life,

That makes me ugly.

Shakespeare.

O, I have pass'd a miserable night,

So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams.

Shakespeare.

To the end that they, desiring food, might, for the ugly sight of the beasts sent among them, loath even that which they must needs desire.

Wisd. xvi. 3.

Was this the cottage, and the safe abode

Thou told'st me of? What grim aspects are these,

These ugly-headed monsters?

Milton, Comus.

VI'AGE.* See VOYAGE.

VI'AL. n. s. [φιάλη, Gr.] A small bottle.

You Gods! look down

And from your sacred vials pour your grace

Upon my daughter's head.

Shakespeare.

Take thou this vial, being then in bed,

And this distilled liquor drink thou off.

Shakespeare.

Another lamp burnt in an old marble sepulchre belonging to some of the antient Romans, inclosed in a glass vial.

Wilkins.

I placed a thin vial, well stopped up, within the smoke of the vapour, but nothing followed.

Addison.

Chemical waters, that are each transparent, when separate, ferment into a thick troubled liquor, when mixed in the same vial.

Addison.

To VI'AL. v. a. To enclose in a vial.

This she with precious vial'd liquors heals;

For which the shepherds at their festivals

Carol her goodness loud in rustick lays.

Milton, Comus.

VI'AND. n. s. [viande, Fr. vivanda, Ital.] Food; meat dressed.

The belly only like a gulf remain'd,

I' th' midst of the body idle and unactive,

Still cupboarding the viand.

Shakespeare.

No matter, since

They've left their viands behind, for we have stomachs.

Wilt please you taste of what is here?

Shakespeare.

These are not fruits forbidden; no interdict

Defends the touching of these viands pure;

Their taste no knowledge works, at least of evil.

Milton, P. L.

From some sorts of food less pleasant to the taste, persons in health, and in no necessity of using such viands, had better to abstain.

Ray.

The tables in fair order spread;

Viands of various kinds allure the taste,

Of choicest sort and savour; rich repast!

Pope.

VI'ARY.* adj. [viarius, Lat.] Happening in ways or roads. Not in use.

In beasts, in birds, in dreams, and all viary omens, they are only conjectural interpretations of dim-eyed man; full of doubt, full of deceit.

Foltham, Res. i. 96.

VIATICUM.† n. s. [Latin.]

1. Provision for a journey.

And sith thy pilgrimage is almost past,

Thou need'st the lesse viaticum for it.

Davies, Wil's Pilgrim. sign. S. 4. b.

2. The last rites used to prepare the passing soul for its departure.

It is rather a spiritual medicine, a good viaticum, a standing sacrament, for the relief, the assurance, the safe conduct, of departing souls.

Killingbeck, Serm. p. 313.

To VI'BRATE. v. a. [vibro, Lat.]

1. To brandish; to move to and fro with quick motion.

2. To make to quiver.

Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undulated, may differently affect the lips, and impress a swift tremulous motion, which breath passing smooth doth not.

Holder.

To VI'BRATE. v. n.

1. To play up and down, or to and fro.

The air, compressed by the fall and weight of the quicksilver, would repel it a little upwards, and make it vibrate a little up and down.

Boyle.

Do not all fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light, and shine? And is not this emission performed by the vibrating motions of their parts?

Newton.

2. To quiver.

The whisper that to greatness still too near,

Perhaps, yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear.

Pope.

VIBRA'TION. n. s. [vibro, Lat.] The act of moving, or state of being moved with quick reciprocations, or returns; the act of quivering.

It sparkled like the coal upon the altar, with the fervours of piety, the heats of devotion, and the sallies and vibrations of an harmless activity.

South.

Do not the rays of light, in falling upon the bottom of the eye, excite vibrations in the tunica retina? Which vibrations being propagated along the solid fibres of the optick nerves into the brain, cause the sense of seeing.

Newton.

Mild vibrations soothe the parted soul,

New to the dawning of celestial day.

Thomson.

VI'BRATIVE.* adj. [from vibrate.] That vibrates.

Heat is only an accident of light, occasioned by the rays putting a fine, subtle, ethereal medium, which pervades all bodies, into a vibrative motion, which gives us that sensation.

Newton.

VIBRA'TIUNCLE.* n. s.

Sensory vibrations, by being often repeated, beget in the medullary substance of the brain, a disposition to diminutive vibrations, which may be also called vibratiuncles and miniatures corresponding to themselves respectively.

Chambers.

The pulse would continue to beat, the lungs to play, the animal secretions to be carried on, the vibratiuncles to traverse to and fro.

Search, Freewill, &c. (1763,) p. 177.

VI'BRATORY.* adj. [from vibrate.] Vibrating; causing to vibrate.

Suppose that to this oil or water were added a certain quantity of a specific salt, which had a power of putting the nervous papillæ of the tongue into a gentle vibratory motion; as suppose sugar dissolved into it. The smoothness of the oil, and the vibratory power of the salt, cause the sense we call sweetness.

Burke on the Subl. and Beaut. P. iv. § 21.

VI'CAR. n. s. [vicarius, Lat.]

1. The incumbent of an appropriated or impropriated benefice.

Procure the vicar

To stay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one,

To give our hearts united ceremony.

Shakespeare.

Yours is the prize;

The vicar my defeat, and all the village see. Dryden.
A landed youth, whom his mother would never suffer to look into a book for fear of spoiling his eyes, upon hearing the clergy decried, what a contempt must he entertain, not only for his vicar at home, but for the whole order. Swift.

2. One who performs the functions of another; a substitute.

An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdict his suffragans, but his vicar-general may do the same. Ayliffe.

VICARAGE. n. s. [from vicar.] The benefice of a vicar.

This gentleman lived in his vicarage to a good old age, and having never deserted his flock, died vicar of Bray. Swift.

VICARIAL.* adj. [from vicar.]

1. Belonging to a vicar.

Wood is in some countries a rectorial, and in some a vicarial tithe. Blackstone.

2. [vicarius, Lat.] Vicarious.

All derived and vicarial power shall be done away, as no further necessary. Blackwall, Sac. Class. ii. Pref. xxix.
That delegated vicarial sceptre of righteousness.

West on the Resurrection, p. 275.

VICARIATE.* n. s. [from vicarious.] Delegated office or power.

Shall we think that pretended spiritual dignity to be of God, (or, as it calleth itself, the vicariate of Christ,) who said his kingdom was not of this world, and whose successors gloried in poverty and martyrdom; whereas this [the church of Rome] aboundeth in riches and exterior power above any thing now extant in the Christian world?

Ld. North, Light, &c. (1682), p. 22.

VICARIATE.* adj. Having a delegated power as vicar.

We thought it convenient that you should be held up by the vicariate authority of our see. Barrow, Works, i. 261.

VICARIOUS. adj. [vicarius, Latin.] Deputed; delegated; acting in the place of another.

The soul in the body is but a subordinate efficient, and vicarious and instrumental in the hands of the Almighty, being but his substitute in this regiment of the body. Hale.

What can be more unnatural, than for a man to rebel against the vicarious power of God in his soul? Norris.

VICARIOUSLY.* adv. [from vicarious.] In the place of another.

They, who do not love religion, hate it. The rebels to God perfectly abhor the author of their being. They hate him "with all their heart, with all their mind, with all their soul, and with all their strength." He never presents himself to their thoughts, but to menace and alarm them. They cannot strike the sun out of heaven, but they are able to raise a smouldering smoke that obscures him from their own eyes. Not being able to revenge themselves on God, they have a delight in vicariously defacing, degrading, torturing, and tearing in pieces, his image in man.

Burke, Lett. on a Regicide Peace.

VICARSHIP.† n. s. [from vicar.] The office of a vicar.

The see of Jerusalem was the mother of all churches, wherein St. Peter himself did at first reside, exercising his vicarship. Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

There is in my choir one Mr. Lamb; he hath at present but half a vicarship. Swift to Pope.

VICE.† n. s. [vitium, Lat.]

1. The course of action opposite to virtue; depravity of manners; inordinate life.

No spirit more gross to love
Vice for itself.

Milton, P. L.

The foundation of error will lie in wrong measures of probability; as the foundation of vice in wrong measures of good. Locke.

2. A fault; an offence. It is generally used for an habitual fault, not for a single enormity.

No vice, so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on its outward parts. Shakespeare.

Yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer by him that shall succeed. Shakespeare.

Where the excess and defect do make vices, or such things as ought not to be, there the mediocrity must denote something that ought to be, and consequently must be a virtue. Wilkins.

I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

Proud views and vain desires in our worldly employments, are as truly vices and corruptions, as hypocrisy in prayer, or vanity in alms. Law.

3. Faulty or noxious excess.

Or, when the latent vice is cur'd by fire,
Redundant humours by the pores expire. Dryden, Georg. i.

4. The fool of the old shows and moralities.

I'll be with you again
In a trice, like to the old vice,
Your need to sustain;
Who with dagger of lath, in his rage and his wrath,
Cries, ah, ha! to the devil. Shakespeare.
His face made of brass, like a vice in a game. Tusser.
I remember of old the fool, that made the all sport in the play, was called the vice.

Bp. Hall, Sermon before K. James, (in 1624,) p. 7.

5. [vijs, Dutch; from vijzen, to screw up.] A kind of small iron press with screws, used by workmen.

He found that marbles taught him percussion; bottle-screws the vice; whirligigs, the axis in peritrochio.

Arbutnot, and Pope.

6. Gripe; grasp.

If I but fist him once; if he come but within my vice. Shakespeare.

7. [vice, Latin.] It is used in composition for one, qui vicem gerit, who performs, in his stead, the office of a superiour, or who has the second rank in command: as, a viceroys, vicechancellor.

TO VICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To draw by a kind of violence.

With all confidence he swears,
As he had seen't or been an instrument
To vice you to't, that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

VICEADMIRAL. n. s. [vice and admiral.]

1. The second commander of a fleet.

The foremost of the fleet was the admiral: the rear-admiral was Cara Mahometes, an arch-pirate. The viceadmiral, in the middle of the fleet with a great squadron of gallies, struck sail directly. Knolles.

2. A naval officer of the second rank.

VICEADMIRALTY. n. s. [from viceadmiral.] The office of a viceadmiral.

The viceadmiralty is exercised by Mr. Trevanion. Carew.

VICEAGENT. n. s. [vice and agent.] One who acts in the place of another.

A vassal Satan hath made his viceagent, to cross whatever the faithful ought to do. Hooker.

VICECHANCELLOR.† n. s. [vicecancellarius, Latin.] The second magistrate of the universities.

The dean, for asserting the rights of his majesty and university in his station of vicechancellor, being made a prisoner; he undertook the entire management of all affairs.

Fell, Life of Hammond.

V I C

Vi'CED. adj. [from vice.] Vitious; corrupt. Not used.
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakespeare.

VICEGE'RENCY. n. s. [from vicegerent.] The office of a vicegerent; lieutenantancy; deputed power.
The authority of conscience stands founded upon its vice- gerency and deputation under God. South.

VICEGE'RENT. n. s. [vicem gerens, Lat.] A lieutenant; one who is intrusted with the power of the superiour, by whom he is deputed.

All precepts concerning kings are comprehended in these;
remember thou art a man; remember thou art God's vicegerent.
Bacon.

Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God; in unshaken duty to his vicegerent; in hearty obedience to his church.
Sprat.

Great father of the gods, when for our crimes
Thou send'st some heavy judgement on the times;
Some tyrant king, the terror of his age,
The type and true vicegerent of thy rage,
Thus punish. Dryden.

VICEGE'RENT. adj. [vicegerens, Latin.] Having a delegated power; acting by substitution.

Whom send I to judge thee? Whom but thee,
Vicegerent son! To thee I have transferr'd
All judgement, whether in heaven, or earth, or hell.
Milton, P. L.

Vi'CENARY. adj. [vicenarius, Latin.] Belonging to twenty. Bailey.

Vi'CEROY. n. s. [viceroi, French.] He who governs in place of the king with regal authority.

Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroi of the whole? Shakespeare.

Mendoza, viceroi of Peru, was wont to say, that the government of Peru was the best place the king of Spain gave, save that it was somewhat too near Madrid. Bacon.

We are so far from having a king, that even the viceroi is generally absent four fifths of his time. Swift.

Vi'CERO'YALTY. n. s. [from viceroi.] Dignity of a
viceroi.

These parts furnish out viceroialties for the grandees; but in war are incumbrances to the kingdom. Addison.

Vi'CEROYSHIP.* n. s. [from viceroi.] Office of a
viceroi.

The Saracen caliph commanded in Egypt; under whom, two great lords fell out about the sultanie or *viceroi*ship of that land. Fuller, Holy War, p. 89.

Vi'CETY. n. s. [Of this word I know not well the meaning or original: a nice thing is now called in vulgar language, point vice, from the French point devise, or point de vice; whence the barbarous word vicety may be derived.] Nicety; exactness. A word not used.

Here is to the fruit of Pem,
Grafted upon Stub his stem;
With the peakish nicety,
And old Sherewood's vicety. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Vi'CINAGE. n. s. [vicinia, Latin; voisinage, French;
as our word was formerly written, and also voici- nage, as well as vicinage.] Neighbourhood; places adjoining.

Ezrurum is a town of great strength, and by reason of its voicinage to the Persian dominions usually made the place of rendezvous, when the Turks have any design against that empire. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 283.

Worcester and Gloucester [bishopsricks] had been united, by reason of their voicinage. Burnet, Hist. of the Ref. P. ii. B. 1.
A city came to be built in the voicinage of this holy place.
Biblioth. Bibl. i. 415.

V I C

In many places the patrons endowed the churches, but built not the edifice; leaving that to be done by the priest out of the oblations and contributions of the Christians of the vic- nage. Wharton and Stanhope, Def. of Plur. p. 83.

ViCINAL. † adj. [vicinus, Latin.] Near; neigh-
ViCINE. † adj. bouring.

Opening other vicine passages might obliterate any track;
as the making of one hole in the yielding mud, defaces the print of another near it. Glanville.

The vallum or ridged bank, seemingly a vicinal way, if not a rampart. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 55.

ViCINITY. n. s. [vicinus, Latin.]

1. Nearness; state of being near.

The position of things is such, that there is a vicinity between agents and patients, that the one incessantly invades the other. Hale.

The abundance and vicinity of country seats. Swift.

2. Neighbourhood.

Gravity alone must have carried them downwards to the vicinity of the sun. Bentley.

He shall find out and recall the wandering particles home, and fix them in their old vicinity. Rogers.

Vi'CIOUS. adj. [from vice.] See VITIOUS. Devoted to vice. Not addicted to virtue.

He heard this heavy curse,
Servants of servants, on his vicious race. Milton, P. L.

Vi'CIOUSLY.* adv. [from vicious.] Corruptly; sin-fully.

Perversity of will, immoral and sinful enormities, walk with Adraste and Nemesis at their backs, pursue us into judgement, and leave us viciously miserable. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 18.

Vi'CIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from vicious.] Corruptness.
See VITIOUSNESS.

ViCIS'SITUDE. n. s. [vicissitudo, Latin.]

1. Regular change; return of the same things in the same succession.

It makes through heaven
Grateful vicissitude, like day and night. Milton, P. L.

The rays of light are alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes. Newton.

This succession of things upon the earth, is the result of the vicissitude of seasons, and is as constant as is the cause of that vicissitude, the sun's declination. Woodward.

2. Revolution; change.

During the course of the war, did the vicissitudes of good and bad fortune affect us with humility or thankfulness.

Atterbury.

Verse sweetens toil, however rude the sound.

All at her work the village maiden sings;

Nor as she turns the giddy wheel around,

Revolves the sad vicissitude of things. Giffard.

ViCISITU'DINARY.* adj. [vicissitudo, vicissitudinis,
Lat.] Regularly changing.

We say, the elements of man are misery and happiness, as though he had an equal proportion of both; and the days of man vicissitudinarily, as though he had as many good days as ill.
Donne, Devot. p. 313.

ViCO'NTIEL. adj. In law vicontiel rents are certain farms, for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king, and makes what profit he can of them. Vicontiel writs are such writs as are triable in the county court, before the sheriff. Bailey.

Vi'CTIM. n. s. [victima, Latin.]

1. A sacrifice; something slain for a sacrifice.

All that were authors of so black a deed,

Be sacrific'd as victims to his ghost. Denham.

And on the victim pour the ruddy wine. Dryden.

Clitumnus' waves, for triumphs after war,

The victim ox, and snowy sheep prepare. Addison.

2. Something destroyed.

VIC

Behold where age's wretched victim lies;
See his head trembling, and his half-clos'd eyes. Prior.

To VI'CTIMATE.* v. a. [victimo, Latin.] To sacrifice; to offer in sacrifice. Not in use.

Bullockar, and Cockeram.

VI'CTOR. n. s. [victor, Latin.]

1. Conqueror; vanquisher; he that gains the advantage in any contest. Victor is seldom used with a genitive; we say the conqueror of kingdoms, not the victor of kingdoms; and never but with regard to some single action or person: as we never say, Cæsar was in general a great victor, but that he was victor at Pharsalia. We rarely say Alexander was victor of Darius, though we say he was victor at Arbela; but we never say he was victor of Persia.

This strange race more strange conceits did yield;
Who victor seem'd, was to his ruin brought;
Who seem'd o'erthrown, was mistress of the field. Sidney.

Some time the flood prevails, and then the wind,
Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,
Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered. Shakespeare.

Although the victor, we submit to Cæsar. Shakespeare.

Say where and when

Their fight; what stroke shall bruise the victor's heel. Milton, P. L.

Our Hebrew songs and harps in Babylon,
That pleas'd so well our victors' ear, declare,
That rather Greece from us these arts deriv'd. Milton, P. R.

Their hearts at last the vanquish'd re-assume,
And now the victors fall. Denham.

In love the victors from the vanquish'd fly;
They fly that wound, and they pursue that die. Waller.

Fortune's unjust; she ruins oft the brave,
And him who should be victor, makes the slave. Dryden.

Lose not a thought on me, I'm out of danger;
Heaven will not leave me in the victor's hand. Addison.

2. Pope has used this word in a manner perhaps unauthorized.

There, victor of his health, his fortune, friends,
And fame, this lord of useless thousands ends. Pope.

VI'CTRESS.* n. s. [from victor.] A female that conquers.

But when the victress arriv'd there,
Where late she left the pensife Scudamore
With her own trusty squire, both full of feare,
Neither of them she found. Spenser, F. Q. iii. xii. 44.

VICTO'RIOUS. adj. [victorieux, French.]

1. Conquering; having obtained conquest; superiour in contest.

Victory doth more often fall by error of the vanquished, than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.

The Son returned victorious with his saints. Milton, P. L.

That happy sun, said he, will rise again,
Who twice victorious did our navy see:
And I alone must view him rise in vain,
Without one ray of all his star for me. Dryden.

2. Producing conquest.

Sudden these honours shall be snatch'd away,
And curs'd for ever this victorious day. Pope.

3. Betokening conquest.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shakespeare.

VICTO'RIOUSLY. adv. [from victorious.] With conquest; successfully; triumphantly.

That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.

VICTO'RIOUSNESS. n. s. [from victorious.] The state or quality of being victorious.

VI'CTORY. n. s. [victoria, Lat.] Conquest; success in contest; triumph.

VIE

At his nurse's tears

He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shakespeare.

Then to the heaven of heavens he shall ascend
With victory, triumphing o'er his foes. Milton, P. L.

Obedience is a complicated act of virtue, and many graces are exercised in one act of obedience. It is an act of humility, of mortification and self-denial, of charity to God, of care of the publick, of order and charity to ourselves. It is a great instance of a victory over the most refractory passions.

Bp. Taylor.

VI'CTRESS.† } n. s. [from victor; Lat. victrix.] A female that conquers. Not used.

I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
And she shall be sole victress; Cæsar's Cæsar. Shakespeare.

To have her captiv'd spirit freed from flesh,
And on her innocence a garment fresh,
And white as that, put on: and in her hand
With boughs of palm, a crowned victrice stand.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

VI'CTUAL. } n. s. [victuailles, Fr. vittovaglia, Ital.]

VI'CTUALS. } Provision of food; stores for the support of life; meat; sustenance. Chapman has written it as it is colloquially pronounced.

A huge great flagon full I bore,
And in a good large knapsack, victles store. Chapman.

He landed in these islands, to furnish himself with victuals and fresh water. Abbot, Desc. of the World.

You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he hath an excellent stomach. Shakespeare.

He was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victual. Knolles.

They, unprovided of tackling and victual, are forced to sea by a storm. King Charles.

To VI'CTUAL.† v. a. [from the noun.] To store with provision for food.

Talbot, farewell;

I must go victual Orleans forthwith. Shakespeare.

The children of Israel were numbered, and were all present, [in the margin, were victualled.] 1 Kings, xx. 27.

VI'CTUALLER. n. s. [from victuals.]

1. One who provides victuals.

They planted their artillery against the haven, to impeach supply of victuals; yet the English victuallers surceased not to bring all things necessary. Hayward.

Their conquest half is to the victualler due. King.

2. One who keeps a house of entertainment.

VIDELICET. adv. [Latin.] To wit; that is. This word is generally written viz.

VI'DUAL.* adj. [viduus, Lat.] Belonging to the state of a widow.

The only pattern of all chastity, virginal, conjugal, and vidual. Parth. Sacra, (1633,) p. 80.

VIDU'ITY.† n. s. [from viduus, Lat.] Widowhood.

The married woman is under the careful provision of an husband: in that estate four hands work for her; in her viduity but two. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

To VIE.† v. a. [Of this word the etymology is very uncertain. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius refers it to the Germ. wagen, to dare.] To stake; to wager; to expose to hazard; to show or practise in competition. The word is borrowed from an old term at cards.

S. Let us play at primero. A. What shall we play for? S. One shilling stake, and three rest. — I eye it; will you hold it? Florio, Sec. Fr. (1591.)

What need then we vie calumnies, like women? Chapman, II.

Nature wants stuff

To vie strange forms with fancy. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

She hung about my neck; and kiss on kiss
She vied so fast, protesting oath on oath,
That in a twink she won me to her love. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Here's a trick vied and revied.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.
They vie power and expence with those that are too high.

L'Estrange.

You vie happiness in a thousand easy and sweet diversions.
Evclyn.

To VIE. v. n. To contest; to contend; to strive for superiority.

In a trading nation, the younger sons may be placed in such a way of life as may enable them to vie with the best of their family.
Addison.

The wool, when shaded with Ancona's dye,
May with the proudest Tyrian purple vie.
Now voices over voices rise;
While each to be the loudest vies.
Addison.
Swift.

To VIEW. v. a. [veu, Fr. from veoir, or voir.]

1. To survey; to look on by way of examination.

Go, and view the country. Jos. vii. 2.

The Almighty Father bent down his eye,
His own works and their works at once to view. Milton, P. L.

View not this spire, by measures giv'n,
To buildings rais'd by common hands. Prior.

Whene'er we view some well-proportion'd dome;
No single parts unequally surprize;
All comes united to th' admiring eyes. Pope.

2. To see; to perceive by the eye.

They here with eyes aghast

No more I hear, no more I view,
The phantom flies me, as unkind as you. Pope.

VIEW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Prospect.

You should tread a course
Pretty, and full of view; yea, haply, near
The residence of Posthumus. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Vast and indefinite views, which drown all apprehensions of the uttermost objects, are condemned by good authors. Wotton.

The walls of Pluto's palace are in view. Dryden.

Cut wide views through mountains to the plain,
You'll wish your hill, or shelter'd hill again. Pope.

2. Sight; power of beholding.

I go, to take for ever from your view,
Both the lov'd object, and the hated too. Dryden.

These things duly weigh'd, will give us a clear view into the state of human liberty. Locke.

Instruct me other joys to prize,
With other beauties charm my partial eyes;
Full in my view set all the bright abode,
And make my soul quit Abelard for God. Pope.

3. Intellectual sight; mental ken.

Some safer resolution I've in view. Milton.

4. Act of seeing.

Th' unexpected sound
Of dogs and men, his wakeful ear does wound;
Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
Willing to think the illusions of his fear
Had given this false alarm; but straight his view
Confirms that more than all he fears is true. Denham.

5. Sight; eye.

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.

6. Survey; examination by the eye.

Time never will renew,
While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
Surveying nature with too nice a view. Dryden.

7. Intellectual survey.

If the mind has made this inference by finding out the intermediate ideas, and taking a view of the connection of them, it has proceeded rationally. Locke.

8. Space that may be taken in by the eye; reach of sight.

The fame through all the neighb'ring nations flew,
When now the Trojan navy was in view. Dryden.

9. Appearance; show.

In that accomplish'd mind,
Help'd by the night, new graces find;

Which, by the splendour of her view,
Dazzled before we never knew. Waller.

10. Display; exhibition to the sight or mind.

To give a right view of this mistaken part of liberty, would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wise considerations than a wise man? Locke.

11. Prospect of interest.

No man sets himself about any thing, but upon some view or other, which serves him for a reason. Locke.

12. Intention; design.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees to the state of things at home; with that view he makes all his reflections. Atterbury.

With a view to commerce, in returning from his expedition against the Parthians, he passed through Egypt. Arbuthnot.

Fisher, the jesuit, in the year 1626, seconded the cardinal in the same plea, and upon the same views. Waterland.

VIE'WER. † n. s. [from view.] One who views.

The astrologers, the star-gazers, [in the margin, viewers of the heavens.] Isaiah, xlvii. 13.

You are as fair, as if the morning bare ye;

Imagination never made a sweeter:

Can it be possible this frame should suffer,

And, built on slight affections, fright the viewer?

Beaum. and Fl. Cust. of the Country.

VIE'WLESS. adj. [from view.] Unseen; not dis-cernible by the sight.

To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,

And blown with restless violence about

The pendant world. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Each stair mysteriously was meant, nor stood

There always, but drawn up to heav'n sometimes

Swift through the valves the visionary fair

Repass'd, and viewless mix'd with common air. Pope.

Light-bounding from the earth, at once they rise;

Their feet half viewless quiver in the skies. Pope.

VIE'WLY. * adj. [from view.] Sightly; striking to the view. Used in some parts of the north.

VIGESIMA'TION. n. s. [vigesimus, Latin.] The act of putting to death every twentieth man. Bailey.

VI'GIL. n. s. [vigilia, Lat.]

1. Watch; devotions performed in the customary hours of rest.

So they in heaven their odes and vigils tun'd. Milton, P. L.

Shrines! where their vigils pale-ey'd virgins keep,

And pitying saints, whose statues learn to weep. Pope.

2. A fast kept before a holiday.

He that outlives this day, and sees old age,

Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,

And say to-morrow is St. Crispian. Shakspeare.

And that, which on the Baptist's vigil sends

To nymphs and swains the vision of their friends. Harte.

3. Service used on the night before a holiday.

No altar is to be consecrated without reliques, which placed before the church door, the vigils are to be celebrated that night before them. Stillingfleet.

The rivals call my muse another way,

To sing their vigils for the ensuing day. Dryden.

4. Watch; forbearance of sleep.

Though Venus and her son should spare

Her rebel heart, and never teach her care;

Yet Hymen may performe her vigils keep,

And for another's joy suspend her sleep.

Nothing wears out a fine face like the vigils of the card-table, and those cutting passions which attend them. Waller.
Addison.

VI'GILANCE. } n. s. [vigilance, Fr. vigilantia, Lat.]
VI'GILANCY. }

1. Forbearance of sleep.

Ulysses yielded unseasonably to sleep, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Broome.

2. Watchfulness; circumspection; incessant care.

Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,

Your deeds of war, and all our counsel die? Shakspeare.

In this their military care, there were few remarkable occasions under the duke, saving his continual vigilancy, and voluntary hazard of his person. Wotton.

Of these the vigilance

I dread; and to elude, thus wrapp'd in mist
Of midnight vapour, glide obscure. Milton, P. L.
We are enabled to subdue all other creatures; and use for our behoof the strength of the ox, the sagacity and vigilancy of the dog. Ray.

3. Guard; watch.

No post is free, no place,
That guard and most unusual vigilance
Does not attend my taking. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

In at this gate none pass
The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come
Well known from heaven. Milton, P. L.

VIGILANT. adj. [vigilans, Latin.] Watchful; circumspect; diligent; attentive.

They have many prayers, but every of them very short, as if they were darts thrown out with a kind of sudden quickness; lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance. Hooker.

Take your places, and be vigilant :
If any noise or soldier you perceive,
Let us have knowledge. Shakespeare.

The treasurer, as he was vigilant in such cases, had notice of the clerk's expiration so soon, that he procured the king to send a message to the master of the rolls. Clarendon.

VIGILANTLY. adv. [from vigilant.] Watchfully; attentively; circumspectly.

Thus in peace, either of the kings so vigilantly observed every motion of the others, as if they had lived upon the alarm. Hayward.

To VILIFY. v. a. [from vile.]

1. To debase; to degrade; to make vile.

Their Maker's image
Forsook them, when themselves they vilify'd
To serve ungovern'd appetite, and took His image whom they serv'd. Milton, P. L.

2. To defame; to make contemptible.

Tomalin could not abide,
To hear his sovereign vilify'd. Drayton.

The displeasure of their prince, those may expect, who would put in practice all methods to villify his person. Addison.

Many passions dispose us to depress and villify the merit of one rising in the esteem of mankind. Addison.

TO VILIPEND.* v. a. [vilipendo, Lat. vilipender, Fr.]

To have in no esteem; to treat with slight or contempt.

If it be to the scorning and vilipending of a man, it may be called the sin of the men of Succoth, who slighted Gideon.

Bp. Andrews on the Decalogue, p. 508.

They'll vilipend thy sacred word, and scoff it.

Quarles, Hist. of Jonah, (1620), l. i. b.

When hypocrites, or sly crafty knaves, are exalted to promotion; and the good are vilipended or neglected; that comes to pass not by the election of princes, but through the deceit and fraudulent tricks of others.

Transl. of Boccacini, (1626), p. 227.

VILITY.* n. s. [vilitas, Lat.] Baseness; vileness.

Bullockar, and Cockeram.

The comedians wore these [socks] to represent the vility of the persons they represented; as debauched young sparks, old crazy misers, pimps, parasites, strumpets, and the rest of that gang.

Kennet, Rom. Antiq. P. ii. B. 5. ch. 6.

VILL. n. s. [ville, Fr. villa, Latin.] A village; a small collection of houses. Little in use.

This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every manor, town, or vill. Hale.

VILLA. n. s. [villa, Latin.] A country seat.

The antient Romans lay the foundations of their villas and palaces within the very borders of the sea. Addison.

At six hours distance from Bizantium's walls,

Where Bosphorus into the Euxine falls,

In a gay district, call'd th' Elysian vale,

A furnish'd villa stands, propos'd for sale. Harte.

All vast possessions; just the same the case,

Whether you call them villa, park, or chace. Pope.

VILLAGE. n. s. [village, French.] A small collection of houses in the country, less than a town.

Beggars, with roaring voices, from low farms,

Or pelting villages, sheep-cotes, and mills,

Enforce their charity. Shakspeare.

The early village cock

Hath twice done salutation to the morn. Shakspeare.

You have many enemies, that know not

Why they are so; but, like the village cur,

Bark when their fellows do. Shakspeare.

The country villages were burnt down to the ground.

Knolles.

Those village-words give us a mean idea of the thing.

Dryden.

Seam'd o'er with wounds which his own sabre gave,

In the vile habit of a village slave. Pope.

VILLAGER. n. s. [from village.] An inhabitant of the village.

Brutus had rather be a villager,

Than to repute himself a son of Rome

Under such hard conditions. Shakspeare.

Whence once her eye

Hath met the virtue of this magick dust,

I shall appear some harmless villager,

Whom thrift keeps up about his country geer. Milton, Comus.

If there are conveniences of life, which common use reaches not, it is not reason to reject them, because every villager doth not know them. Locke.

VILLAGERY. n. s. [from village.] District of villages.

Robin Goodfellow, are you not he,

That fright the maidens of the villagery?

Shakspeare, M. N. Dr.

VILLAIN.† n. s. [villanus, low Lat. villain, old French. "Depuis le xii. siècle jusqu' au xvi., ce mot ne présentait rien d'infame, quoiqu' il fût employé pour vilis: il servoit à désigner l'ordre du tiers-état; il signifioit paysan, habitant de la campagne, laboureur, fermier et cultivateur; homme du peuple, marchand, roturier, qui n'est pas noble d'état ou des mœurs." Roquefort.]

1. One who held by a base tenure; a servant.

The Irish inhabiting the lands fully conquered, being in condition of slaves and villains, did render a greater revenue, than if they had been made the king's free subjects. Davies.

A trusty villain, Sir; that very oft,

When I am dull with care and melancholy,

Lighens my humour with his merry jests.

Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

2. A wicked wretch.

We were prevented by a dozen armed knights, or rather villains, who, using this time of their extreme feebleness, all together set upon them. Sidney.

O villain! villain! his very opinion in the letter. Abhorred villain! unnatural, detested, brutish villain! Shakspeare.

What in the world,

That names me traitor, villain-like he lies. Shakspeare.

He was stabbed to the heart by the hand of a villain, upon the mere impious pretence of his being odious to the parliament. Clarendon.

Calm thinking villains, whom no faith could fix;

Of crooked counsels, and dark politicks. Popc.

VILLAINOUS.* See VILLANOUS.

VILLAINY.* See VILLANY.

VILLANAGE. n. s. [from villain.]

1. The state of a villain; base servitude.

They exercise most bitter tyranny,

Upon the parts brought into their bondage:

No wretchedness is like to sinful villanage. Spenser.

Upon every such surrender and grant there was but one freeholder, which was the lord himself; all the rest were but tenants in villanage, and were not fit to be sworn in juries. Davies.

2. Baseness; infamy.

If in thy smoke it ends, their glories shine;

But infamy and villanage are thine. Dryden.

TO VILLANIZE. v. a. [from villain.] To debase; to degrade; to defame.

Were virtue by descent, a noble name

Could never villanize his father's fame;

But, as the first, the last of all the line,

Would, like the sun, ev'n in descending shine. Dryden.

These are the fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments; whose glory is in their shame, in the debasing and villanizing of mankind to the condition of beasts. Bentley.

VILLANIZER.* n. s. [from villanize.] One who degrades, debases, or defames.

Renouncers of God, blasphemers of his only-begotten Son, villanizers of his saints, and scorners of his service.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Rel. (ed. 1605,) P. 3. b.

VILLANOUS.† adj. [from villain.]

1. Base; vile; wicked.

There is nothing but roguery to be found in villanous man.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

All manner of villanous and flagitious actions.

Hallywell, Melampr. p. 80.

2. Sorry; in a familiar sense.

Thou art my son; I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly a villanous trick of thine eye doth warrant me. Shakspeare.

2. It is used by Shakspeare to exaggerate any thing detestable.

We shall lose our time,

And all be turn'd to barnacles or apes,

With foreheads villanous low. Shakspeare, Tempest.

VILLANOUSLY. adv. [from villanous.] Wickedly; basely.

The wandering Numidian falsified his faith, and villanously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself. Knolles.

VILLANOUSNESS. n. s. [from villanous.] Baseness; wickedness.

VILLANY.† n. s. [from villain; villonic, old French.] It is more usual to write villainy, and villainous; though anciently the words wanted the second i. "He never yet no vilanie ne sayde," &c. Chaucer. As long as we follow the French word in villain, it seems proper to observe the same form in words descended from it.]

1. Wickedness; baseness; depravity; gross atrociousness.

Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;

For villainy is not without such rheum:

And he, long traded in it, makes it seem

Like rivers of remorse and innocence.

Shakspeare.

He is the prince's jester; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villainy.

Shakspeare.

2. A wicked action; a crime. In this sense it has a plural.

No villainy, or flagitious action was ever yet committed; but a lie was first or last the principal engine to effect it.

South.

Such villainies rous'd Horace into wrath;

And 'tis more noble to pursue his path,

Than an old tale.

Dryden.

VILLATICK.† adj. [villaticus, Lat.] Belonging to villages.

The perched roosts,

And nests in order rang'd,

Of tame villatick fowl.

Milton, S. A.

He consulted with her, how I might be most advantageously dressed for my first appearance, and most expeditiously disencumbered from my villatick bashfulness.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 147.

VILLI. n. s. [Latin.] In anatomy, are the same as fibres; and in botany small hairs like the grain of plush or shag, with which, as a kind of excrescence, some trees do abound.

Quincy.

VILLOUS. adj. [villosus, Latin.] Shaggy; rough; furry.

The liquor of the stomach, which with fasting grows sharp, and the quick sensation of the inward villos coat of the stomach, seem to be the cause of the sense of hunger.

Arbutnot.

VIMINAL.* adj. [viminal, Fr. Cotgrave; viminalis, Lat.] Applied to trees producing twigs fit to bind with.

Cockeram.

VIMINEOUS. adj. [vimineus, Lat.] Made of twigs.

As in the hive's vimineous dome,

Ten thousand bees enjoy their home;

Each does her studious action vary,

To go and come, to fetch and carry.

Prior.

VINACEOUS.* adj. [vinaceus, Lat.] Of or belonging to wine and grapes.

The general colour of the bird is brown, changing to vinaceous red on the breast.

White, Journ. p. 146.

VINCIBLE. adj. [from vinco, Lat.] Conquerable; superable.

He, not vincible in spirit, and well assured that shortness of provision would in a short time draw the seditious to shorter limits, drew his sword.

Hayward.

Because 'twas absolutely in my power to have attended more heedfully, there was liberty in the principle, the mistake which influenced the action was vincible.

Norris.

VINCIBLENESS. n. s. [from vincible.] Liableness to be overcome.

Dict.

VINCTURE. n. s. [vinctura, Lat.] A binding. Bailey.

VINDEMIAL. adj. [vindemia, Latin.] Belonging to a vintage.

To VINDEMIATE. v. n. [vindemia, Latin.] To gather the vintage.

Now vindemiate, and take your bees towards the expiration of this month,

Evelyn.

VINDEMIATION. n. s. [vindemia, Latin.] Grape-gathering. Bailey.

To VINDICATE. v. a. [vindico, Lat.]

1. To justify; to support; to maintain.

Where the respondent denies any proposition, the opponent must directly vindicate and confirm that proposition; i. e. he must make that proposition the conclusion of his next syllogism.

Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

2. To revenge; to avenge.

We ought to have added, how far an holy war is to be pursued: whether to enforce a new belief, and to vindicate or punish infidelity?

Bacon.

Man is not more inclinable to obey God than man; but God is more powerful to exact subjection, and to vindicate rebellion.

Pearson on the Creed.

The more numerous the offenders are, the more his justice is concerned to vindicate the affront.

Tillotson.

Assemble ours and all the Theban race,

To vindicate on Athens thy disgrace.

Dryden.

3. To assert; to claim with efficacy.

Never any touch'd upon this way, which our poet justly has vindicated to himself.

Dryden, Pref. to Ovid.

The beauty of this town, without a fleet,

From all the world shall vindicate her trade.

Dryden.

4. To clear; to protect from censure.

God's ways of dealing with us, are by proposition of terrors and promises. To these is added the authority of the commander, vindicated from our neglect by the interposition of the greatest signs and wonders in the hands of his prophets, and of his son.

Hammond.

I may assert eternal providence,

And vindicate the ways of God to man.

Milton, P. L.

VINDICATION. n. s. [vindication, Fr. from vindicate.]

Defence; assertion; justification.

This is no vindication of her conduct. She still acts a mean part, and, through fear, becomes an accomplice, in endeavouring to betray the Greeks.

Broume.

VINDICATIVE.† adj. [from vindicate; Fr. vindicatif.] The word should be accented on the first syllable, though Shakspeare places it on the second, and Dr. Johnson has so marked it. See Nares, Elem. of Orthoepey, pp. 189. 371.] Revengeful; given to revenge.

He, in heat of action,

Is more vindicative than jealous love.

Shakspeare.

Publick revenges are for the most part fortunate; but in private revenges it is not so. Vindicative persons live the life of witches, who, as they are mischievous, so end they unfortunate.

Bacon.

The fruits of adusted choler, and the evaporations of a vindicative spirit.

Howell.

Do not too many believe no zeal to be spiritual, but what is censorious or vindicative? Whereas no zeal is spiritual, that is not also charitable.

Sprat, Sermon.

Distinguish betwixt a passion purely vindicative, and those counsels where Divine justice avenges the innocent.

L'Estrange.

VINDICATOR. n. s. [from vindicate.] One who vindicates; an assertor.

He treats tyranny, and the vices attending it, with the utmost rigour; and consequently a noble soul is better pleas'd with a jealous vindicator of Roman liberty, than with a temporizing poet.

Dryden.

VINDICATORY. adj. [from vindicator.]

1. Punitory; performing the office of vengeance.

The afflictions of Job were no vindictory punishments to take vengeance of his sins, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces.

Bramhall, Answer to Hobbes.

2. Defensory; justificatory.

VINDICTIVE. adj. [from vindicta, Lat.] Given to revenge; revengeful.

I am vindictive enough to repel force by force.

Dryden.

V I N

Augustus was of a nature too vindictive, to have contented himself with so small a revenge. Dryden.

Suits are not reparative, but vindictive, when they are commenced against insolvent persons. Kettlewell.
VINDICTIVELY.* adv. [from vindictive.] Revengefully. Bailey.

Revengefully [is] with vengeance, vindictively. Johnson, in V. Revengefully.

VINDICTIVENESS.* n. s. [from vindictive.] A revengeful temper. Bailey, and Scott.

VINE. n. s. [vinea, Latin.] The plant that bears the grape.

The flower consists of many leaves placed in a regular order, and expanding in form of a rose: the ovary, which is situated in the bottom of the flower, becomes a round fruit, full of juice, and contains many small stones in each. The tree is climbing, sending forth clasps at the joints, by which it fastens itself to what plant stands near it, and the fruit is produced in bunches. The species are, 1. The wild vine, commonly called the claret grape. 2. The July grape. 3. The Corinth grape, vulgarly called the currant grape. 4. The parsley leav'd grape. 5. The miller's grape. # V I N

VI'NEGAR. n. s. [vinaigre, Fr.]

1. Wine grown sour; eager wine.

Vinegar is made by setting the vessel of wine against the hot sun; and therefore vinegar will not burn, much of the finer parts being exhaled. Bacon.

Heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more sour. Pope.

2. Any thing really or metaphorically sour.

Some laugh like parrots at a bag-piper,
 And others of such vinegar aspect,
 That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile. Shakespeare.

VI'NER.* n. s. [from vine.] An orderer or trimmer of vines. Obsolete. Huloet.

VI'NEYARD. n. s. [pinzeapn, Sax.] A ground planted with vines.

Let us not live in France; let us quit all,
 And give our vineyards to a barbarous people. Shakespeare.

Though some had so surfeited in the vineyards, and with the wines, that they had been left behind, the generosity of the Spaniards sent them all home again. Clarendon.

VINNEWED.† adj. [from vinizean, Sax. to decay. See FENOWED.] Mouldy; musty. It is, in our old lexicography, written vinewed and vinowed.

I question thy bold entrance,
Employ'd to violate the sleep of those Whose dwelling God hath planted here in bliss. Milton, P. L.
Kindness for man, and pity for his fate,
May mix with bliss, and yet not violate. Dryden.
Cease

To know what known will violate thy peace. Pope.

2. To infringe; to break any thing venerable.

Some of violated vows
'Twixt the souls of friend and friend. Shakspeare.
Those offences which are by their special qualities breaches of supernatural laws, do also, for that they are generally evil, violate in general that principle of reason, which willetth universally to fly from evil. Hooker.

Those reasonings which, by violating common sense, tend to subvert every principle of rational belief, to sap the foundations of truth and science, and to leave the mind exposed to all the horrors of scepticism. Beattie.

3. To injure by irreverence.

I would violate my own arm rather than a church. Brown.
Forbid to violate the sacred fruit. Milton, P. L.

4. To ravish; to deflower.

The Sabine's violated charms
Obscur'd the glory of his rising arms. Prior.

VIOLA'TION. n. s. [violatio, Lat.]

1. Infringement or injury of something sacred or venerable.

Their right conceit that to perjury vengeance is due, was not without good effect, as touching the course of their lives, who feared the wilful violation of oaths. Hooker.

Men, who had no other guide but their reason, considered the violation of an oath to be a great crime. Addison.

2. Rape; the act of deflowering.

If your pure maidens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing violation. Shakspeare.

VI'OLATOR. n. s. [violator, Lat.]

1. One who injures or infringes something sacred.

May such places, built for divine worship, derive a blessing upon the head of the builders, as lasting as the curse that never fails to rest upon the sacrilegious violators of them.
South.

2. A ravisher.

Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator. Shakspeare.
How does she subject herself to the violator's upbraidings and insults! Richardson, Clarissa.

VIOLENCE. n. s. [violentia, Latin.]

1. Force; strength applied to any purpose.

To be imprison'd in the viewless wind,
And blown with restless violence about.
All the elements Shakspeare.

At least had gone to wreck, disturb'd and torn
With violence of this conflict. Milton, P. L.

2. An attack; an assault; a murder.

A noise did scare me from the tomb;
And she, too desperate, would not go with me:
But, as it seems, did violence on herself. Shakspeare.

3. Outrage; unjust force.

Griev'd at his heart, when looking down he saw
The whole earth fill'd with violence; and all flesh Corrupting each their way. Milton, P. L.

4. Engerness; vehemence.

That seal
You ask for with such violence, the king
With his own hand gave me. Shakspeare.

5. Injury; infringement.

We cannot, without offering violence to all records, divine and human, deny an universal deluge. Burnet.

6. Forcible defloration.

To VI'OLENCE.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To assault; to injure.

Then surely love hath none, nor beauty any,
Nor nature violenced in both these. B. Jonson, Dev. an Ass.
A kind of constraining and violencing of the spirit.
Hammond, Works, iv. 486.

2. To bring by violence.

Like our late misnamed high court of justice, to which the loyal and the noble, the honest and the brave, were violenced by ambition and malice. Feltham, Res. ii. 64.

VI'OLENT. adj. [violentus, Lat.]

1. Forcible; acting with strength.

A violent cross wind blows. Milton, P. L.

2. Produced or continued by force.

The posture we find them in, according to his doctrine, must be look'd upon as unnatural and violent; and no violent state can be perpetual. Burnet.

3. Not natural, but brought by force.

Conqueror death discovers them scarce men;
Violent or shameful death their due reward. Milton,

4. Assailant; acting by force.

Some violent hands were laid on Humphry's life. Shakspeare.
A foe subtle or violent. Milton, P. L.

5. Unseasonably vehement.

We might be reckoned fierce and violent, to tear away that, which, if our mouths did condemn, our consciences would storm and repine thereat. Hooker.

6. Extorted; not voluntary.

How soon unsay
Vows made in pain, as violent and void! Milton, P. L.

VI'OLENT.* n. s. An assailant.

Did the covetous extortioner observe that he is involved in the same sentence, remember that such violents shall not take heaven, but hell, by force. Dec. of Chr. Piety, p. 53.

To VI'OLENT.* v. n. To become violent; to act with violence.

Why tell you me of moderation?
The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste,
And violenteth in a sense as strong
As that which causeth it. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

To VI'OLENT.* v. a. To urge with violence. Neither this, nor the neuter verb, is now in use.

His former adversaries violented any thing against him.
Fuller, Worthies in Anglessea.

VI'OLENTLY. adv. [from violent.] With force; forcibly; vehemently.

Temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakspeare, Coriol.
Flame burneth more violently towards the sides, than in the midst. Bacon.

Antient privileges must not, without great necessities, be revoked, nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

VI'OLET. n. s. [violette, Fr. viola, Lat.] A flower.

It hath a polypetalous anomalous flower, somewhat resembling the papilionaceous flower; for its two upper petals represent the standard, the two side ones, the wings; but the lower one, which ends

V I R

in a tail, resembles the iris. Out of the empalement arises the pointal, which becomes a three-cornered fruit opening into three parts, and full of roundish seeds. There are nine species. Miller.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakespeare.

Sweet echo, sweetest nymph that liv'st unseen,
By slow Meander's margent green,
And in the violet-embroider'd vale. Milton, Comus.

It alters not our simple idea, whether we think that blue be in the violet itself, or in our mind only; and only the power of producing it by the texture of its parts, to be in the violet itself. Locke.

VÍOLIN. n. s. [violon, Fr. from viol.] A fiddle; a stringed instrument of musick.

Praise with timbrels, organs, flutes;
Praise with violins, and lutes. Sandys.

Sharp violins proclaim
Their jealous pangs, and desperation,
For the fair disdainful dame. Dryden.

VÍOLINIST.* n. s. [from violin.] A player on the violin.

Davys Mell, the famous violinist and clock-maker.
Aubrey, Miscell. p. 98.

VÍOLIST. n. s. [from viol.] A player on the viol.

violin.

VÍPER. n. s. [vipera, Lat.]

1. A serpent of that species which brings its young alive, of which many are poisonous.

A viper came out of the heat, and fastened on his hand.
Acts, xxviii. 3.

He'll gall of asps with thirsty lips suck in;
The viper's deadly teeth shall pierce his skin. Sandys.

Viper-catchers have a remedy, in which they place such great confidence, as to be no more afraid of the bite of a viper, than of a common puncture. This is no other than axungia viperina, presently rubbed into the wound. Derham.

2. Any thing mischievous.

Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself? Shakespeare, Coriol.

VÍPERINE. adj. [viperinus, Latin.] Belonging to a viper.

VÍPEROUS. adj. [vipereus, Lat. from viper.] Having the qualities of a viper.

My tender years can tell,
Civil dissention is a viperous worm,
That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth. Shakespeare.

We are peremptory to dispatch
This viperous traitor. Shakespeare.

Some viperous critick may bereave
The opinion of thy worth for some defect. Daniel, Musoph.

VÍPER's bugloss. n. s. [echium, Lat.] A plant.

Each flower is succeeded by four seeds, which are in form of a viper's head. Miller.

VÍPER's grass.† n. s. [scorzonera, Lat.] A plant.

Vipergrass,—medicinal and excellent against the palpitation of the heart;—besides a very sweet and pleasant sallet.
Evelyn.

VIRAGÍNIAN.* adj. [from virago.] Of or belonging to impudent women.

The remembrance of his old conversation among the viragi-nian trollops. Milton, Apol. for Smect. § 6.

VIRAGO. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A female warrior; a woman with the qualities of a man.

Melpomene is represented like a virago or manly lady, with a majestick and grave countenance. Peacham.

V I R

To arms! to arms! the fierce virago cries,
And swift as lightning to the combat flies. Pope.

2. It is commonly used in detestation for an impudent turbulent woman.

VIRE.* n. s. [vire, Fr. "the arrow called a quarrel, used only for the cross-bow." Cotgrave.] An arrow. Obsolete.

As a vire,
Which fieth out of a mighty bowe,
Away he fledde for a throwe. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

VÍRELAY. n. s. [virelay, virelai, French.] A sort of little ancient French poem, that consisted only of two rhymes, and short verses, with stops.

Dict. L'Acad.

The mournful muse in mirth now list ne mask,
As she was wont in youngth and summer days;
But if thou algate lust light virelays,
And looser songs of love to undersong. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

The band of flutes began to play,
To which a lady sung a virelay:
And still at ev'ry close she would repeat
The burden of the song, the daisy is so sweet. Dryden.

VÍRENT. adj. [virens, Lat.] Green; not faded.

In these, yet fresh and virent, they carve out the figures of men and women. Brown, Vulg. Err.

VÍRGATE.* n. s. [virgata, low Latin.] A yard-land.

With regard to smaller and detached parcels of land occupied in this parish, I have discovered that lady Elisabeth Montacute, wife of sir William de Montacute, afterwards married to Thomas lord Furnivall, possessed one virgate, about the year 1330. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 45.

VIRGE.† n. s. [virga, Lat. better verge, from verge,
Fr.] A wand. See VERGE.

This aspect of mine bath fear'd the valiant;
The best regarded virgins of our clime
Have lov'd it too. Shakespeare.

Senseless bauble!
Art thou a fædary for this act, and look'st
So virgin-like without? Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

The damsel was very fair, and a virgin. Gen. xxiv. 16.

Angelo is an adulterous thief,

An hypocrite, a virgin violator. Shakespeare.

Much less can that have any place,
At which a virgin hides her face. Cowley.

2. A woman not a mother. Unusual.

Likest to Ceres in her prime,
Yet virgin of Proserpina from Jove. Milton, P. L.

3. Any thing untouched or unmingled; any thing pure: as, virgin-honey.

Tapers of white wax, commonly called virgin-wax, burn with less smoke than common yellow wax. Boyle.

I have found virgin-earth in the peat-marshes of Cheshire.

Below the upper was a deep bed of sand only, which I weighed, together with the virgin-mould. Derham.

4. The sign of the zodiack in which the sun is in August.

Thence down amain by Leo and the Virgin. Milton, P. L.

VÍRGIN. adj. Befitting a virgin; suitable to a virgin;
maidenly.

Can you blame her then, being a maid, yet rosed over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

What says the silver with her virgin hue? Shakespeare.

V I R

With ease a brother o'ercame
The formal decencies of virgin-shame. Cowley.
As I look upon you all to be so many great blessings of a married state; so I leave it to your choice, either to do as I have done, or to aspire after higher degrees of perfection in a virgin state of life. Law.

To VI'RGIN. v. n. [A cant word.] To play the virgin.

A kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!
I carried from thee, my dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since. Shakespeare, Coriol.

VI'RGINAL. adj. [from virgin.] Maiden; maidenly; pertaining to a virgin.

On the earth more fair was never seen,
Of chastity and honour virginal. Spenser, F. Q.
Tears virginal

Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaims,
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax. Shakespeare.

Purity is a special part of this superstructure, restraining of all desires of the flesh within the known limits of conjugal or virginal chastity. Hammond on Fundamentals.

VI'RGINAL. n. s. [more usually virginals.] A musical instrument so called, because commonly used by young ladies.

The musician hath produced two means of straining strings.
The one is stopping them with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols; the other is the shortness of the string, as in harps and virginals. Bacon.

To VI'RGINAL. v. n. To pat; to strike as on the virginal. A cant word.

Still virginalling upon thy palm. Shakespeare.

VIRGI'NITY. n. s. [virginitas, Latin.] Maidenhead; unacquaintance with man.

You do impeach your modesty too much,
To trust the opportunity of night,
And the ill counsel of a desert place,
With the rich worth of your virginity. Shakespeare.

Natural virginity of itself is not a state more acceptable to God; but that which is chosen in order to the conveniencies of religion, and separation from worldly incumbrances.

Bp. Taylor.

VIRGO.* n. s. [Latin.] The sixth sign in the zodiack; the Virgin: which see.

VIRTU.* n. s. [Italian. "As this people [the Romans] was of so military a turn, they generally gave fortitude the name of Virtus, or the Virtue, by way of excellence; just as the same nation, now they are so debased and effeminated, call the love of the softer arts, Vertù." Spence, Polymet.
Dial. x.] A love of the fine arts; a taste for curiosities. See VIRTUOSO.

Let his holiness's taste of virtù be ever so bad, pray get somebody to present you to him before you leave Rome.

Ld. Chesterfield.

This celebrated naturalist shines chiefly in his own profession; and he seems to be most happily employed, when he is learnedly debating on tautological echoes, subterraneous snails, undescribed thunderbolts, cosmetic clay, the altitude of giants,
&c. These are the reveries of vertu.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, Pref.

VI'RTUAL. adj. [virtuel, Fr. from virtue.] Having the efficacy without the sensible or material part.

Metalline waters have virtual cold in them. Put therefore wood into smith's water, and try whether it will not harden.

Bacon.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance. Bacon.

Love not the heavenly spirits? And how their love Express they? by looks only? or, do they mix

Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milton, P. L.

Neither an actual or virtual intention of the mind, but only that which may be gathered from the outward acts.

Stillingfleet.

VIRTUA'LITY. n. s. [from virtual.] Efficacy.

In one grain of corn there lieth dormant a virtuality of many other, and from thence sometimes proceed an hundred ears. Brown, Vulg. Err.

VI'RTUALLY. adv. [from virtual.] In effect, though not materially.

They are virtually contained in other words still continued.
Hammond on Fundamentals.

Such is our constitution, that the bulk of the people virtually give their approbation to every thing they are bound to obey. Addison.

To VI'RTUATE. v. a. [from virtue.] To make efficacious. Not used.

Potable gold should be endued with a capacity of being assimilated to the innate heat, and radical moisture; or at least virtuated with a power of generating the said essentials.

Harvey.

VIRTUE. n. s. [virtus, Lat.]

1. Moral goodness: opposed to vice.

Either I'm mistaken, or there is virtue in that Falstaff.
Shakespeare.

If there's a power above us,
And that there is, all nature cries aloud
Through all her works, he must delight in virtue,
And that which he delights in must be happy. Addison.
Virtue only makes our bliss below. Pope.

The character of prince Henry is improved by Shakespeare; and through the veil of his vices and irregularities, we see a dawn of greatness and virtue. Shakespeare illustrated.

2. A particular moral excellence.

In Belmont is a lady,
And she is fair, and, fairer than that word,
Of wond'rous virtues. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Remember all his virtues,
And shew mankind that goodness is your care. Addison.

3. Medicinal quality.

All blest secrets,
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Be aidant and remediate. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
The virtuous bezoar is taken from the beast that feedeth upon the mountains; and that without virtue from those that feed in the vallies. Bacon.

4. Medicinal efficacy.

An essay writer must practice the chymical method, and give the virtue of a full draught in a few drops. Addison.

5. Efficacy; power. Before virtue is used sometimes by and sometimes in; by in virtue is meant in consequence of the virtue.

If neither words, nor herbs will do, I'll try stones; for there's a virtue in them. L'Estrange.

Where there is a full purpose to please God, there, what a man can do, shall, by virtue thereof, be accepted. South.

They are not sure, by virtue of syllogism, that the conclusion certainly follows from the premises. Locke.

This they shall attain, partly in virtue of the promise made by God; and partly in virtue of piety. Atterbury.

He used to travel through Greece, by virtue of this fable, which procured him reception in all the towns. Addison.

6. Acting power.

Jesus knowing that virtue had gone out of him, turned him about. St Mark, v. 30.

7. Secret agency; efficacy, without visible or material action.

She moves the body, which she doth possess;
Yet no part toucheth, but by virtue's touch. Davies.

8. Bravery; valour.

Trust to thy single virtue; for thy soldiers
Took their discharge. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The conquest of Palestine, with singular virtue they performed, and held that kingdom some few generations. Raleigh.

9. Excellence; that which gives excellence.

In the Greek poets, as also in Plautus, the æconomy of poems is better observed than in Terence; who thought the sole grace and virtue of their fable, the sticking in of sentences, as ours do the forcing in of jests. B. Jonson.

10. One of the orders of the celestial hierarchy.

Thrones, dominations, principedoms, virtues, powers. Milton.

A winged virtue through th' ætherial sky,
From orb to orb unwearied dost thou fly. Tickell.

VIRTUELESS. adj. [from virtue.]

1. Wanting virtue; deprived of virtue.
